Section 5214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St., sec. 9779) imposes upon national banks the obligation to pay to the Treasurer of the United States certain duties "in lieu of all existing taxes," and section 5219 (U. S. Comp. St. sec. 9784; Barnes Fed. Code, sec. 9256) provides that nothing contained in the Federal "national bank act" (13 Stat. 99) shall prevent "all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the association is located; but the legislature of each State may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the State, subject only to the two restrictions—that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed." This section prescribes the full measure of the power of the State to impose taxes upon national banking associations or their shareholders. Any assessment not in conformity therewith is unauthorized and invalid. (First Nat. Bank of Gulfport v. Adams, 42 Sup. Ct. 323.)

The tax law of the State of New York (Cons. Laws, C. R. 60, sec. 24, enacted long before any State income tax was imposed, and repealed by chap. 603 of the Laws of 1922) provided: "In assessing the shares of stock of banks or banking associations organized under the authority of this State or the United States the assessment and taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is made or assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of this State." * * *

The tax law also provides for a tax of 1 per cent on the book value of shares of stock in all banks and banking associations (sec. 24b), and that such tax (sec. 24c) "shall be in lieu of all other taxes whatsoever for State, county, or local purposes upon the said shares of stocks, and mortgages, judgments, and other choses in action and personal property held or owned by banks or banking associations the value of which enters into the value of said shares of stock shall also be exempt from all other State, county, or local taxation."

This tax of 1 per cent is a direct tax on the shares of stock, without regard to the amount of income earned thereon, whether such income has been retained as surplus or distributed as dividends.

The personal income tax law (L. 1919, ch. 627; Tax Law, sec. 352), adopted as part of a new program of tax reform, imposes upon every resident of the State of New York an annual tax upon his net income of from 1 to 3 per cent. Such taxes "are in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, except that money on hand or on deposit with or without interest, bonds, notes, and choses in action, and shares of stock in corporations other than banks and banking associations, owned by any individual or constituting a part of a trust or estate subject to the income tax imposed by this article, shall not after July 31, 1919, be included in the valuation of the personal property included in the assessment rolls of the several tax districts, villages, school districts, and special tax districts of the State."

The statute further provides (L. 1920, ch. 647; Tax Law, sec. 4a): "Notwithstanding any provision of this chapter or of any other general, special, or local law, intangible personal property, except shares of stock of banks or banking associations, whether referred to as personal property, capital, capital stock, or otherwise, after June 30, 1920, shall be exempt from taxation locally for State or local purposes. This exemption shall be in addition to all other exemptions of personal property from local taxation, whether based upon the character, ownership, or amount of property. The term 'intagible personal property,' as used in this section, means incorporeal property, including money, deposits in banks, shares of stock, bonds, notes, credits, evidences of an interest in property, and evidences of debt."

Shares of stock in banks and banking associations, both State and national, are thus subject to a 1 per cent valuation tax. Certain other corporations are subject to franchise taxes, but moneyed capital in the hands of individuals is exempt from taxation locally for State or local purposes.

A long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States defines the business of banking and holds that the words "moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" includes moneys invested in private banking houses such as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and others, together with investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness such as normally enter into the business of banking. The National Government permits State taxation only on terms of substantial equality in law and in fact, and entire fairness and friendliness. The tax on national bank shares must not discriminate in favor of moneyed capital entering into competition with the national banks. (Evansville Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 322; Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138; Aberdeen Bank v. Chehalis Co., 166 U. S. 440; Owensboro National Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 676; Amoskeag Savings Bank v. Purdy, 231 U. S. 373; Merchants' National Bank of Richmond v. City of Richmond, 256 U. S. 635.) The court below has found that the competing capital in the hands of individuals, subject only to the personal property income tax, is very large. "If the principle of substantial equality of taxation under State authority, as between capital so invested and other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens however invested, operates to disturb the peculiar policy of some of the States in respect to revenue derived from taxation, the remedy therefor is with another department of the Government, and does not belong to this court." (Boyer v. Boyer, 113 U. S. 689, 703.)

The first question is whether the State of New York discriminates against national bank shares by imposing a tax both on the shares and the dividends, while it imposes a tax on the income only of other competing capital in the hands of private bankers and other individuals. It was held below that if the direct tax and the income tax were both imposed, the discrimination would be clear. The respondent contends, by a process of statutory construction which would exclude by implication the particular from the general, that no income tax is imposed on the dividends of bank stock. The test to be applied is not whether such dividends may lawfully be included in the income of individuals taxed by the State, but whether they are in fact so included. It is urged that the State had no power to tax such income, for the reason that section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States above quoted permits a tax on valuation only, and therefore that it did not tax it. (People ex rel. Alpha P. C. Co. v. Knapp, 230 N. Y. 48 [Addenda page 65, herein].) The language of the statute suggests no such punctilious regard for those whose income is derived from dividends on national-bank shares. On the contrary, it plainly includes such dividends in gross income. Gross income includes (tax law, sec. 359) income from dividends. Dividends from stock in bank corporations owned by resident taxpayers are not included in the list of exemptions.

A clear discrimination is made against resident holders of bank shares which are taxed according to their book value, who are also taxed on their income. The shares of bank stock are taxed by one method and the dividends thereon are taxed by another method. Competing moneyed capital in the hands of individuals is exempt from taxation based on valuation and is assessed by one method, according to income only. The provisions of the law are explicit. The discrimination is unfortunately too clear to escape recognition. We can not assume that any exemption of dividends on national bank shares from the provisions of the income tax was in the legislative mind. On the contrary, the report of the special joint committee on taxation and retrenchment submitted to the legislature March 1, 1922, the opinion of the Attorney General (March 31, 1920), and the practice of the income tax bureau indicate that by legislative and administrative construction a personal tax upon dividends on the shares was contemplated and collected.

The amount of such moneyed capital in the State of New York thus exempted from taxation except on income is not inconsiderable. It is relatively of much consequence. In the city of New York in the year 1921 such competing capital was nearly twice the total capital of the State and National banks. The tax on the capital stock of national banks becomes invalid when it appears that it has become discriminatory. No way of escape from such a conclusion is open except by disregarding the rule which requires us to give a plain meaning to plain words plainly used. (U. S. v. Goldenburg, 168 U. S. 95, 102; Rodgers v. U. S., 185 U. S. 83, 86.) The validity of the tax on dividends from national-bank stock may be considered when it is assailed by a taxpayer in a proceeding in which it becomes necessary to decide that question.

But assuming for the purpose of the discussion only that dividends on national-bank stock are exempt by implication from the income tax or that the tax thereon is invalid and may be disregarded, the tax on bank shares is discriminatory for another reason. The State may, so long as it observes the rule of fairness and good faith, tax national-bank shares by one method while it taxes competing capital by another method, without exact uniformity or equality. (Mercantile Bank v. New York, supra; People ex rel. Bridgeport Savings Bank v. Feitner, supra.) In doubtful cases the burden may rest on the bank to establish inequality. (Bank of Commerce v. Seattle, 166 U. S. 463; First National Bank of Wellington v. Chapman, 173 U. S. 205.) Yet the rule laid down for our guidance by the Supreme Court of the United States in substance requires that the shares of the bank shall be taxed only to the same extent that other moneyed capital invested in the State is taxed. (People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539; Boyer v. Boyer, supra.) If the inequality is palpable, the State courts are without discretion. It becomes their duty to declare the right asserted under the Constitution of the United States and the statute enacted by Congress in uniformity therewith and to hold the tax invalid. (Merchants' National Bank v. City of Richmond, supra.)

When it appears on the face of the statute that bank shares are taxed on valuation at a flat rate and that the owner of competing moneyed capital relatively material in amount is taxed on income only, the court is powerless to say that equality of taxation has been secured and injustice prevented. We are forced to compare two methods which are wholly unlike. How can equality be established or presumed as the necessary result of the taxing statutes? In a very considerable number of cases the valuation tax must inevitably be the heavier burden. It is fixed and certain. The income tax is variable and dependent on income and amount of income. It is conceivable that when returns on such capital are low, the bank stock would be taxed and the competing capital would be exempt. In no event would equality exist unless the income on competing capital were large beyond the dreams of avarice and the usual returns on investments.

The relator is entitled to the relief asked for. The orders should be reversed and the assessment vacated, with costs in all courts.—(L. S. 359 (1).)

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish to prefer a uninamous-consent request. Some months ago there was printed by unanimous consent or by resolution—I do not now recall which—as a House document, a very considerable number, several thousand copies, of what is commonly known as the Wood-Forbes report on the Philippine situation, as they found it. There has been a document prepared in the nature of a response to some phases of that. That matter was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some time since, but there has been a revision of the matter as it appeared in the RECORD. It is not desirable to reinsert it in the RECORD. I desire to ask unanimous consent that there be printed as a House document the usual number of copies of this matter, which is in the hands of the Resident Commissioner from the Philippine Islands [Mr. DE VEYRA].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that there be printed as a House document the matter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would it not be better to send it to the Printing Committee to ascertain the number that should be printed? I am not particular about it, but that would be the orderly procedure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman desires to take that course, all right. I have not a cost estimate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF FIRE SUFFERERS IN ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk Senate Joint Resolution 255 and consider the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk Senate Joint Resolution 255 and consider it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let it be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 255) for the relief of sufferers from fire in the city of Astoria, Oreg.

Resolved, etc., That in order to relieve temporarily the suffering and the conditions resulting from the recent fire in the city of Astoria, Oreg., the Secretary of War is authorized and directed, in cooperation with the authorities of the State of Oregon and of the city of Astoria, or otherwise, to issue subsistence and supplies belonging to the Military Establishment to persons in Astoria who are in such needy circumstances and to take such temporary sanitary measures as he may deem necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I could not catch the reading clearly. Does this just provide for the lending of tents and supplies?

Mr. HAWLEY. It provides for furnishing them with such supplies as they have which the destitute citizens of Astoria may be in need of at this time, and for the sanitation measures necessary to relieve a distressing situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What character of supplies is contemplated?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will permit me to make a statement of the general situation, I think that will answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was reserving the right to object, but I will withhold it if the gentleman from Oregon desires to make a statement.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, December 8, 1922, at 2 o'clock in the morning a fire broke out in Astoria, Oreg., and in a few hours had utterly destroyed some 30 blocks of the city. It has done a damage, according to the recent estimates, of some $20,000,000, and it has thrown out of employment and rendered homeless and penniless about 5,000 people. It destroyed the entire business section of the city, according to the information furnished me by the city authorities.

In a telegram signed jointly by Mayor James Bremner, Col. W. S. Gilbert, of the citizens' executive committee, and L. D. Drake, of the chamber of commerce, under date of December 13, they state:

> On Friday morning last the entire business part of the city was totally destroyed by the most devastating fire in the history of the Pacific coast. Streets, water system, sewer system, and fire system in the entire devastated district are totally destroyed. Over 5,000 citizens have suffered loss of their entire property and are without employment or means of subsistence. Business is paralyzed and the city wholly without adequate means either to furnish employment or sustain its citizens who have so suffered.

The fire originated in a building built on piles. A large part of the burned area was built on piling. The streets were paved on piling. The fire spread underneath the piling, underneath the pavements, and spread rapidly in every direction. The resources that the people had who are dependent upon their business or daily labor for a livelihood are gone. All the banks, five in number, all the hotels, restaurants, and apartment houses, some 300 stores and places of business, were burned with their contents. The wires for lighting the city were melted.

The water and sewer mains and laterals in this section of the city are destroyed. The city is built on the side of a hill. Sewers come down through the burned section and the sewage is flooding the burned area from the broken sewerage pipes beneath the ruins of the buildings and streets. This creates a dangerous situation.

The people need supplies of food, although the surrounding country and towns are temporarily supplying them. The weather is very cold for that section, and food, shelter, and other necessities will be required until the city can begin reconstruction and business, plans for which are already being made. They especially need relief from the dangers caused by the destroyed sewerage system.

The Senate joint resolution provides the relief the Government has given in scores of instances where localities have suffered from the destructive activities of the elements. Many millions have been expended for the relief of the sufferers from floods on the Mississippi, Ohio, and other rivers, and from tornadoes in the Middle West; $2,500,000 were made available for the relief of people in San Francisco suffering from the earthquake and fire in 1906; $200,000 for relief in Salem, Mass., when that city was partly destroyed in 1914; $800,000 was sent to Italy for the relief of her citizens in 1908. These are a few of the instances. The situation in Astoria is most distressing and the needs are urgent.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. GARNER. I notice that the Senate joint resolution originally provided for a $3,000,000 appropriation. As I understand this resolution, it will authorize the War Department to use the funds——

Mr. HAWLEY. Or supplies——

Mr. GARNER. Now in the hands of the War Department for sanitary purposes, and that will enable you to rebuild the sewer system that you speak of. In other words, under the resolution you can spend any amount for supplies and such temporary relief for sanitary conditions; you can use $3,000,000 worth of supplies and engineering material, and you can come to Mr. MADDEN'S committee and ask for $3,000,000 deficiency to make it up. I think there should be some limitation here as to the amount of money that it will cost the Government in order to relieve this situation. The House is entitled to know how much it will cost.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not quite agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who has just spoken, in his estimate of the probable cost under this resolution. I agree with him that we ought to have some reasonable assurance that the cost will not be great, but I assume that the War Department would not be justified under a resolution of this character to expend any considerable sum of money. They might expend several hundred thousand dollars. I do not believe they would be justified in spending $1,000,000, much less $3,000,000.

Mr. GARNER. The way to protect that is for the Congress to put in some kind of definition or limitation.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, within a very short time we hope to have reports from the engineer officers of the War Department who are now on the ground as to what in their opinion it is wise for the Federal Government to do in this particular case, and I think we shall know very soon what the department's estimate is.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. As I recall, the present law authorizes the commandant of a post or the commander of a division to render relief in cases of this kind.

Mr. MONDELL. Temporary relief is what is provided here.

Mr. GARNER. I call attention to the fact that the general law authorizes that to be done at this time without this resolution. The gentleman from Wyoming recalls the fact that a few days ago there was a tremendous fire at New Bern, N. C. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ABERNETHY] came to me about the matter, as a new Member, and wanted to know what to do. I told him that I thought the War Department was authorized to let these people have tents and furnish those people who were hungry with food to eat. I understand that the corps commander was doing that very thing; and I venture the assertion that at Astoria they are doing under the law as it now exists all that is temporarily demanded—that is, feeding the people and housing them as far as tents will permit.

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to think, as I understand this, that the War Department would not be justified in going much further.

Mr. GARNER. How far have they gone?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND OF LAKE SUPERIOR CHIPPEWAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6428) for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARTER. Let the bill be reported.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. The gentleman will recall that on last Monday I called his attention to a proposed amendment in line 4, on page 3 of the bill, giving the Indian council the right to have some voice in the sale of this timber.

Mr. ROACH. I have an amendment that I think will cure the objection which the gentleman has to this bill, by inserting on page 3, line 4, after the word "authorized" the words "by the advice and consent of the Indian council representing the band."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That will meet the objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. CARTER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri about his amendment that he proposes to offer. There was so much confusion in the House that I did not hear it.

Mr. ROACH. Is the gentleman directing his inquiry to me?

Mr. CARTER. I understand an amendment is to be proposed to the bill which will provide that these Indians when their land is allotted to them may not alienate that land for 25 years without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Is that amendment to be proposed?

Mr. ROACH. Yes; I will state to the gentleman that such an amendment has been prepared and is now held by the gentleman from Wisconsin. While I do not believe it is necessary, as I stated to the House when this bill was up before that the general law covered that, yet in order to make it absolutely certain that there would be no doubt concerning the matter an amendment has been prepared along that line and will be offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have some little acquaintance with this land up in the Lac du Flambeau country—of course, not as much acquaintance with it as my colleague [Mr. A. P. NELSON], who represents that district—but I should like to know why we should create a new roll composed largely of infants, when within 12 or 15 years the last roll was created and the land allotted to those then 21 years of age? This land has a good marketable value, not only for the timber but for summer-resort purposes if sold by these allottees. The northern Wisconsin lake region is becoming much sought after for resort purposes. As a citizen and taxpayer of Wisconsin I am not willing to have these Indians deprived of their lands and have them thrown upon the patrimony of the State. There should be some showing made why there should be a new roll and why it is to the interest of these 450 infants to be now constituted allottees and ultimately thrown upon the charity of the State.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the demand for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If I understand, the gentleman from Texas withdraws his demand for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw it if the gentleman wants to discuss it further.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my objection.

Mr. ROACH. I wish to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that this is not an attempt to make up a new roll, but to complete and make final the roll of this particular tribe or band of Indians.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon what does the gentleman base that statement?

Mr. ROACH. The former allotment was made to the adults of this tribe, and it is now proposed by this bill to complete the roll by allotting the remainder of the land to the new-born Indians, born since the former allotment in 1903. It would benefit directly something like 450 Indians, born since the roll was made up, and complete and make final the roll as to this particular tribe of Indians. It would put their affairs in final shape.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me? When the original roll was made up everyone of age in that band of Indians received an allotment.

Mr. ROACH. I believe that is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. And naturally Indians have been born since.

Mr. ROACH. Does not the gentleman think that would be right?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know that they should receive an allotment if the parents received the original allotment.

Mr. ROACH. But they did not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; they did, and the property was well invested and is now valuable by reason of the growing timber that can be sold for the benefit of the entire tribe. Why tie it up by now making allotments to infants. I can see no reason for it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield to me? On the last unanimous-consent day I objected to this bill for the very reason which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] now objects, to wit, that if this land was allotted to the Indians without any restriction the Indians might dispose of the land and become a charge on the Federal Government, as has been the case in the past.

I insisted that some restriction should be put in the bill as to alienation and exemption from taxation which the bill on its face did not carry. It was claimed that the alienation would fall under the general allotment act, but I am not sure about that. On consultation with the gentleman in charge of the bill I was assured that an amendment would be placed in the bill requiring restrictions from alienation for 25 years and exemption from taxes in the usual customary way of allotment to Indians. This bill is one process of working out the Indian problem, to wit, the Indian is brought in and settled on a reservation and becomes civilized enough to take an allotment. Then the next step is to make the allotment.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are infants, and the purpose is to give them an allotment from this trust fund.

Mr. CARTER. These Indians are principally those who have been born since the other enrollment was made. I think the gentleman from Missouri said most of them, but it is immaterial whether it is most of them or all of them. These Indians when they grow up, if they are not given an allotment, will be left without any means of support. If they did not own the lands to be allotted, if we were allotting lands belonging to the public domain, taking something that did not belong to them, but to some one else, there might be an objection. This is an allotment of lands that belong to the tribe, going only to the enrolled members of the tribe and can not be sold under the amendment which the gentleman will propose for 25 years. Therefore every restriction will be placed around this allotment if the gentleman's proposed amendment is adopted.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the original allotment was made years ago there were 601 Indians on the roll. They had a residuary claim on the rest of the tribal property, and everyone, regardless of the number of such Indians born since, has a claim to that residuum. Now you are proposing to make a new division and we have no assurance that these infants will not be better off with the original allotment—that they will be better off by keeping it in the existing condition than they will by dividing it up in small piecemeal portions.

Mr. CARTER. If it is divided up you start the child out as an individual owner of property and he can not dispose of it for 25 years. There can be no claim growing out of it against the Government for allotting the lands to these new borns. In the Cherokee baby case it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that Congress had plenary power to do as it saw fit in the division of any undivided tribal property. So there can be no claim against the Government for allotting these lands to these infants.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; there could be no claim against the Government, but we are to consider what is for the welfare of these children. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS MEDAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2192) authorizing the award of the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal, provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, to Army officers brevetted for gallantry during the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or China relief expedition.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill has been on the calendar and been through the throes of objections many times. I have not much to add to the objections raised on those occasions. But I would like to know why when Congress in 1918 established a policy as to awards and medals of honor and the distinguished service cross which were to be awarded only to those then in the service of the Army and those in the service subsequently, why we should now seek to extend the provision of that act to those who were not in the service at that time?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can answer the question that the gentleman asked or not. It was my intention to have the Senate bill substituted for the House bill in the consideration of this measure if it should pass objection. As I understand the contention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], this legislation of 1918, relative to the distinguished service cross, applied to those officers in the Army who distinguished themselves prior to the passage of that act, and should go back.

Mr. STAFFORD. It applies to those who were in the service at that time, even recognizing merit that had been performed in that war or prior thereto, but does not extend the benefits of that act to those who were not in the Army at that time.

Mr. MILLER. The reason that the brevet rank did not pass at the time was that after the close of the war with Spain the Senate, believing that all legislation came to a close at the close of the war, concluded that it acted without jurisdiction, and this is simply a bill to confer on these gentlemen a long-delayed honor to which they are entitled, I believe.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that the intention of this legislation is simply to give to officers who served in the Spanish-American War and other wars the recognition provided for officers who served in the World War? The officers of the Spanish-American War, performing the same service, there being no law to grant the medal, can not receive it. This simply allows two men, one entitled to recognition, but one barred by the statute of limitations, one might say, to become eligible for the honor.

Mr. MILLER. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that is quite an accurate statement. At the time of the Spanish-American War the law and regulations provided for certain rewards for gallant and meritorious services and conduct. Later, in the World War we made other provisions, differing widely from those of the Spanish War. We made provisions which we believed were wise and proper and fitted to the conditions and situation then existing and not to the situation existing 20 years before. What is proposed now is that we shall grant the recognition intended to be bestowed upon officers of the World War upon officers of a war 20 years before. It may be that it is wise to do so. It is not very logical. If we do that I know of no reason why we should not go back to the Civil War, to the Indian wars, and to all the wars. The men of the Spanish War received the recognition that they had reason to expect at the time the service was rendered. That recognition was as much of an honor and ought to be as favorably considered as anything that we did later for the soldiers of another war; but it was recognition bestowed in another way, in a different form. Is it logical, after the passing of all these years, to say that the provisions relative to medals and recognition in the World War ought to have been made back in the days of the Spanish War?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. We did not make such provisions, and gentlemen claim now, therefore, that we should go back to the Spanish War and attempt to readjust the situation and give men recognition in a manner not contemplated, not in vogue at the time the service was rendered. I do not think it is a very logical procedure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SALE OF MILK, ETC., IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7746) to regulate within the District of Columbia the sale of milk, cream, and certain milk products, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REGULATING SALARIES OF TEACHERS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10390) to amend the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is a very important measure. It covers 14 pages. I do not know anything about the merits of it. It is said to be a very meritorious measure, but it should not be taken up on unanimous-consent day, and I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the reason stated by the gentleman from Indiana, that it is too important a bill to be considered on unanimous-consent day, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

PREVENTION OF VENEREAL DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11021) for the prevention of venereal diseases in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, for the reason stated in reference to the previous bill, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the regular order is demanded, and I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

FOREST LANDS IN TAHOE NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6651) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Tahoe National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me we have a good deal of legislation relative to national forests, and unless there can be some very good explanation given as to why this transaction provided for in this bill shall take place I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman withhold?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FREE TRANSMISSION OF CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS FOR THE BLIND.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10496) to provide for the free transmission through the mail of certain publications for the blind.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman withhold that?

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill was previously on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and it has an adverse report from the Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. It has been modified.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think under those circumstances it should stay on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be stricken from the calendar.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ENUNCIATION OF THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13194) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman interested in this measure kindly explain some reason why this legislation should be adopted?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will be very glad to furnish the information which the gentleman desires. This bill requests an authorization for the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine, and is prompted only by the desire to celebrate in a fitting manner a very important national event and international event. There is also to be held in the city of Los Angeles next year a Monroe doctrine centennial exposition. A very unique thing about this bill and the centennial which we propose to hold in Los Angeles is that we do not propose to ask the Government of the United States for one cent of money; that is to say, pecuniary outlay on the part of the Government.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield? The provisions of the bill put this issue entirely in the hands of the local clearing house. That is a unique provision, is it not?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I think not. I believe it has been customary when an exposition or other commemorative events are held in localities and a coin is specifically coined by the Government to commemorate that same event, the locality in which the commemorative event is held is usually permitted to distribute the coin. That is as it should be; that is the only reason for their asking for this, and I hope the gentleman will not object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. The coin is not to commemorate the exposition or fair, or whatever it is down there, but it is to commemorate the enunciation of the Monroe doctrine, which I do not understand took place in Los Angeles.

Mr. LINEBERGER. No; it did not take place in Los Angeles, but I want to say to the gentleman, speaking in a historical sense, I do not think that any portion of the country is more interested in the Monroe doctrine, because it was through the Monroe doctrine that California was annexed.

Ever since the Lewis and Clark expendition, as far back as 1806, England, France, and Russia had cast covetous eyes along the littoral of the north Pacific coast. California was the main attraction, but the Monroe doctrine, proclaimed in 1823, disturbed their plans and kept the European powers at a distance. However, when war was declared between the United States and Mexico, on May 13, 1846, the situation which had been long developing finally crystallized. Commodore John B. Sloat was in command of the Pacific Squadron, consisting of seven vessels and a transport. This fleet was lying in the Harbor of Mazatlan when, on May 17, word reached him that hostilities had begun between Mexico and the United States. But as the report was not official, Sloat contented himself with dispatching a single vessel, the Cyane, under Captain Mervin, to join the Portsmouth at Monterey, while he remained in the Mexican harbor with the remainder of the fleet. A few weeks later, receiving additional confirmation of the earlier report, he quietly slipped out of Mazatlan and sailed direct to Monterey.

In taking this course Sloat was not only guided by Bancroft's orders of the previous year but also by evidence, apparently genuine, that the British Government planned to check the American occupation of California. Admiral Seymour, commander of the British fleet in the Pacific, whose interest in California was well known, was then cruising in the vicinity of Sloat's command and had shown an unpleasant curiosity in the doings of the American fleet. It was credibly reported that he intended to forestall Sloat's occupation of any California port; and as later evidence showed, only the absence of official orders prevented him from making this attempt.

As it was, however, Sloat found no obstruction in his way at Monterey. His flagship, the Savannah, anchored in the harbor on July 2; but he delayed action until the morning of the 7th. The intervening time was occupied in conferences with Larkin, in the preparation of plans and proclamations for the conquest of the Province, and in exchange of official courtesies with the California authorities.

At last, however, stirred by news of Fremont's activities in the north, the fear of Admiral Seymour's arrival, and the urging of his own officers, Sloat decided to act. The occupation of Monterey then became almost a matter of routine. There had been no powder in the fort to salute the American vessels when they sailed into port; all the soldiers—a mere handful—had gone south with Castro; and a Mexican flag had not been seen in the town for three months.

Accordingly, when the formal demand for surrender was refused, because there was no one with authority to grant it, Sloat disembarked some 250 men, who marched unmolested to the customhouse, where they raised the American flag, July 7, 1846. He fired a salute and formally proclaimed California annexed to the United States. Two days later the flag was raised over San Francisco and Sonoma, and on the 11th at Sutter's Fort. In all these proceedings and in the proclamations accompanying them it is worth recording that the American officers sought, according to their instructions, to conciliate the Californians and to treat them with all possible consideration.

Thus the Monroe doctrine kept the European powers from taking action for the acquisition of California for a period of nearly 25 years, and no doubt was the final source of inspiration which caused Commodore Sloat to act in 1846, thereby forestalling the occupation of the territory by the British.

So California has an historical interest in the Monroe doctrine, and in reality owes her place in the great constellation of States to the fact of its existence. Her interest in its present maintenance and future perpetuation is no less now than it was in the past, and it is appropriate, indeed, gentlemen, that this great exposition to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the Monroe doctrine should be held upon the shores of the Pacific in the great State of California, which came under the folds of the American flag because of the foresight and patriotism of the statesman of a century ago who promulgated the doctrine and proclaimed the sentiments of the American people therein enunciated to the world.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is the gentleman willing to cut section 2 from the bill?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that omission because this exposition is to be held in Los Angeles and preparations are well on their way and that would be the natural place to distribute these coins.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say frankly to the gentleman with section 2 remaining in the bill I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. LINEBERGER. What would the gentleman suggest; from whence could the coin be distributed to better advantage than in Los Angeles?

Mr. CRAMTON. We have a lot of patriotic towns in Michigan that could distribute them if it is necessary to have a town distribute them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand from the gentleman's statement that the people of Los Angeles do not expect to call upon the Government for any funds to assist it in the maintenance of the exposition?

Mr. LINEBERGER. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that this issue of specially designed 50-cent pieces is virtually for the purpose of raising funds to defray some of the expenses of the exposition?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the purpose of having these coined exclusive in the treasury of the Los Angeles clearing house?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Simply because it is the natural place from which they should be distributed in view of the exposition. It will be an international affair, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year we authorized the issuance of a special coin to assist in the building of a highway in the President's State and those coins were sold at a premium I suppose for the purpose of contributing to the expenses.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that whenever these special things are done, either with respect to stamps or coins, or anything of that kind, eventually there is a very large premium asked for them when they reach the hands of collectors?

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be no question about the number of collectors of these coins.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of what benefit would this be to Los Angeles, or what effect would it have on the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. LINEBERGER. If the gentleman will permit me to answer him, I will say this, that it is to commemorate a national event that we are holding this exposition, and the coining of this coin which will cost the Government nothing—because the exposition pays all expense, is to commemorate the same event, and I think the coins should be distributed from the point where the exposition is to be held.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If they are not going to ask the Federal Government for help—which would be a departure from the usual custom—and if by section 2 they can sell these coins at a premium of 50 cents or a dollar and thereby secure funds to help them out, why should we object? In my opinion that is an entirely proper way for them to finance their entertainment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, it does not occur to me that this is a right way to finance the fair.

Mr. LINEBERGER. It is not financing the fair. It will cost millions. Will the gentleman accept the bill if I move to strike out section 2?

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman suppose the Senate will restore it?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I have no way of telling what the Senate will do in the matter.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will need assurance that section 2 will not be put in.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I shall not, of course, handle the bill in the Senate. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. He said he would.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will object unless the gentleman can assure us that section 2 will not be restored.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say frankly to gentlemen on the Senate side that there was objection here, and I shall do my best to cut it out. I hope the gentleman will not renew his objection, so this will not be necessary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Oh, yes; I will yield to a Senator at any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not to a half-baked one. [Laughter.] It seems to me the question is not one of selling a coin at a particular value or at a particular place. The question is whether the United States Government is going to go on from year to year submitting its coinage to this—well—harlotry. It is a question whether the dignity of the Government's coinage is going to be maintained by the Government or be let out to every ballyhoo organization to prop up somebody's fair. I do not mean to be invidious in saying this. I have thought of the same objection heretofore. We have all sorts of expositions, and many have asked for this same thing. It does not apply especially to the exposition of the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER], which is a high-class proposition. But it does seem to me we should call a halt on this business in our postage stamps and in our coins and everything. We are now doing almost everything with these Government agencies but advertise patent medicines. It is time that we should stop it. It is almost like a man renting his barn wall to advertise somebody's paint. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Vermont will not object, holding the views that he does.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TREADWAY. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, has that bill been on the calendar for a sufficient length of time to qualify it for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it was put on on Thursday. If it was put on on Friday, it would be too late.

The Clerk is now making a search to ascertain the facts. If objection is made, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then there will be no question about that.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill S. 4100 be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended is amended by striking out the words "18 months" in such section and inserting in lieu thereof "30 months."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a second.

Mr. MAPES. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the extension of time in which certain claimants for interests in property held by the Alien Property Custodian are required to commence suits in order to protect their rights. The law as originally passed provided that they could have six months from the expiration of the war. About a year ago that time was extended one year, so that it expires January 2 of the coming year. It is now asked by the Department of Justice and by the Alien Property Custodian that the time be extended for one more year.

I think the Members of the House should keep this in mind: This does not deprive anyone of any rights that he now has, but it extends his right to bring suit one year from the 2d day of January, 1923.

The bill has been passed in the Senate and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Members of the House should keep this further point in mind: This does not apply to property held by the Alien Property Custodian that belonged to alien enemies. It applies to other than alien enemies who have a claim against the property which the Alien Property Custodian has. Section 9 of the trading with the enemy act provided that these people might file a claim for the interest which they had in this property held by the Alien Property Custodian, and under certain procedure the President might authorize the Alien Property Custodian to transfer it to persons not alien enemies or allies of alien enemies; but if they did not see fit to follow that procedure clear through, the law gave them six months after the close of the war in which to begin suit or required them to bring suit not later than six months after the close of the war. This bill simply extends the time for another year in which they can begin suit. They can begin suit now, if the time is not extended, and be put and put the Alien Property Custodian and the Government to the expense of defending those suits. If this bill is passed and the time is extended it will simply give them another year before they are obliged to file suits in order to protect their rights.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As a matter of fact the accommodation in this case will be largely to the Government itself, and to the Alien Property Custodian, to make it possible for him to determine these matters in his office and with the available facilities there, rather than in a court after suit has been brought against him?

Mr. MAPES. Of course it will be for the accommodation of the Alien Property Custodian, but it will also save the claimant the expense of bringing the suits.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly. But I mean it is required by the department itself? We are not merely benefiting the claimants?

Mr. MAPES. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan a question for information?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I know of a party in my own State who has lived in Texas 40 years and has grown children and grown grandchildren born and raised in Texas, and whose property was taken away from him by the Alien Property Custodian because he had never taken out his naturalization papers. A case of that kind is not affected by this proposed act, is it? That man is not required to file a suit against the Alien Property Custodian, is he?

Mr. MAPES. Is he an alien enemy under the law?

Mr. BLANTON. Under the law, being formerly a resident of Germany, unnaturalized, but who had lived in this country for 40 years.

Mr. MAPES. If he is an alien enemy or the ally of an alien enemy, this amendment does not affect him at all.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not affect him at all?

Mr. MAPES. It does not apply to that class of people.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Government expect that a man in that kind of a situation shall bring a suit, or is his property to be restored to him some day?

Mr. MAPES. It is hoped that some day his property will be restored to him.

Mr. BLANTON. Without suit?

Mr. MAPES. Without suit, although this amendment has nothing to do with the case at all.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. I understand this amendment will inure to the benefit of a large class of claimants who were held constructively to be alien enemies because they were in territory temporarily occupied by German arms. Under an interpretation of the law by the Alien Property Custodian persons residing in territory temporarily occupied by German or Austrian arms were considered alien enemies while in fact they were not. I understand this amendment will enable this class of claimants to press their claims, or if necessary to commence actions. Am I correct in that view?

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman that I can not answer his question. Section 9, which this bill proposes to amend, applies only to the class of people mentioned in the first sentence of the section, which is as follows:

That any person not an enemy or the ally of an enemy claiming any interest in any property held by the Alien Property Custodian—

And so forth.

Mr. LONDON. During the war the Alien Property Custodian demanded that all persons who owed any money to residents of territory occupied by German arms should report to the Alien Property Custodian, but in fact those persons were not alien enemies.

Mr. MAPES. I think there might have to be an order finding that they were not alien enemies before this would apply to them and inure to their benefit; but I am not familiar enough with the situation to answer definitely the question the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will this cover cases where property held by the Alien Property Custodian is in dispute, where it is claimed by citizens of this country and yet their claim has not been fully determined?

Mr. MAPES. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to claim the time allotted to me in case anyone wishes to oppose this bill, because I am in favor of it.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to have five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am in hearty accord with the purpose of this bill. I hope it will be a spur to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to consider the bills recommended by the Alien Property Custodian, introduced, I believe, by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WINSLOW] last August, so that consideration of claims may be made by Congress, or authorization may be granted rather to the Alien Property Custodian to pay 95 per cent in number of these claims, but in total valuation a very small percentage of the total claims against the German Government.

If I have read correctly the letter of the Alien Property Custodian addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, this bill has for its purpose not alone relieving these many claimants from taking action in court, which would involve an expense to the Government and necessitate the employment of attorneys, but it is to give time for the status quo to continue, so that Congress may take action upon the bills recommended by the Alien Property Custodian so as to authorize him to give much-needed relief to the many thousands of claimants, large in number, whose claims are small in amount.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman refer to a bill that is now in the hands of the committee, which provides that all property up to the value of $10,000 be returned to alien enemies?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the bill that I had specially in mind, and the Alien Property Custodian is strongly in favor of, because it will not destroy any of the equities of our Government if we pay those small amounts, and it will be of great benefit to the small claimants who happen to be alien enemies and happen to have had their property tied up under the trading with the enemy act.

Mr. STEPHENS. Had the gentleman any information as to the probability of that bill being considered or brought before the House for consideration at a very early date?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman should direct his inquiry to some member of the committee to whom the bill has been referred for consideration. I am not advised as to the status of the bill.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. STAFFORD. We want to hasten the consideration of the bill. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I think in the case I mentioned steps ought to be taken at once to return the property to the owner. This is a case where this citizen lived in the country for 40 years. I am not excusing him for not taking out his naturalization papers. But he served on juries; he served on the grand juries of his county time and again. All of his children were born in the State of Texas. He has grandchildren born in Texas now grown up, and because he had not taken out his naturalization papers the Alien Property Custodian took charge of his home and is now holding it. It is four long years since the armistice has been signed and still his home property is being held.

Mr. STEPHENS. The bill I refer to in the hands of the committee will correct that very thing, and that is the reason we wanted it shoved through.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to be on the calendar and passed under suspension of the rules to-day, because it is time that this property was returned to this old man in his declining years. It is true he came from Germany 40 years ago, but he is an American citizen and a good citizen of the State of Texas. Not one word can be said against his stand during the war.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is quite correct about all that, but there is no reason why he should scold anybody in connection with the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not scolding anyone.

Mr. WINSLOW. The committee has had the matter in hand for a good many months and we have operated back and forth with the Alien Property Custodian time and time again. We have been all ready to bring the matter before the committee a great many times, but about the minute we were ready to take it up somebody, either the Alien Property Custodian or the Department of State or the Department of Justice, would say, "Hold on a bit; we are up against a little sharp point that we had not noticed before." It has been going around and around until now it looks as if we had come to a point where we would have these men settle the final conditions, if they have any, before the committee. I will say now, under the pressure of the moment, to the gentleman that the chairman of the committee purposes to call this up immediately after the holidays and take up the bill to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad of it, because the gentleman from Massachusetts when he wants to get something through gets it through, and he is the last man on earth whom I would undertake to scold. I am glad that the time has come when this bill will be brought out, because I think the home property of such a man as I have alluded to ought to be returned immediately.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, we all have had cases of the kind mentioned by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. A great many of the people of this country who were not advised of their lack of citizenship have served on petit juries and on grand juries and have voted in elections, men who assumed for all purposes that they were citizens of the United States. Their families have grown up here, they were good people in the communities in which they lived, but somehow they had forgotten some incidents connected with their naturalization. For instance, there were many who believed that the first papers authorized them to vote and, in fact, completed their citizenship. In some States until quite recently men were allowed to vote on getting their first papers or the application for citizenship, and were not required to secure a final certificate to enjoy the right of suffrage. All of this resulted in many people living in the country without ascertaining definitely whether they were or were not citizens. When the war came on they were required to produce evidence of citizenship, not only Germans but people born in other countries.

I want to say to those who may not know that there is a law which allows a man under the conditions to be naturalized in six months after he applies for citizenship.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to extend and revise his remarks.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to revise or extend my remarks. I note that a gentleman for whom we have been waiting has entered the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor therefor the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have as No. 1 on the calendar of motions to discharge committees the bill H. R. 263, amending section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887. I would like to ask if it is not in order for me to call up that bill at this time in view of the fact that the Unanimous-Consent Calendar has been called and all motions to suspend the rules have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. HAYDEN. Notwithstanding the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to go into the Committee of the Whole on the naval appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a novel question, but at the first blush the Chair thinks the gentleman from Arizona has that right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan made his motion and the Chair was submitting it. No point of order was raised to the privileged character of the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole. Does it not come too late to raise that question whether it is in order to entertain a motion to discharge a committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think, as the motion had not been passed upon by the House, that it is too late. There has been no debate.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chair was putting the motion.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the Chair did not know that the gentleman from Arizona was on his feet.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we could not hear. What is the gentleman's request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arizona makes the point of order that he is entitled to be recognized to move to discharge a committee in a case of the calendar of motions to discharge committees.

Mr. DOWELL. Is that upon the ground that it is privileged?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House—

After the Unanimous-Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday and motions to suspend the rules have been disposed of, it shall be in order to call up any such motion—

That is, a motion to discharge a committee—which shall have been entered at least seven days prior thereto.

The Chair will inquire of the gentleman whether this has been upon the calendar for more than seven days?

Mr. HAYDEN. It has been on the calendar for nearly a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Unanimous-Consent Calendar has not been called; that is, we have not finished calling it. The last bill has not been called.

The SPEAKER. That bill is not in order, it not having been on the calendar for three days. There was a decision rendered on January 16, 1911, to this effect:

A motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill under this rule is of higher privilege than a motion to consider an appropriation bill.

The Chair thinks the gentleman from Arizona is entitled to be recognized.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I have a bill upon the Unanimous-Consent Calendar to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] objected. He is now willing to withdraw his objection. I want to know if I can call it up at this time? I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is bad practice, after a bill has been objected to, to revive it again even upon the withdrawal of objection upon the part of the person who objected, because there may have been Members here who would otherwise have interposed an objection. This bill to which the gentleman from California refers retains its place on the calendar. No harm can be done by having it go over for two weeks. It has been the invariable practice when a bill is objected to that it shall not be reconsidered upon that same day.

The SPEAKER. It can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My impression is that I had been recognized to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did recognize the gentleman, but the gentleman from Arizona makes the point of order that he has a motion of higher privilege. The Chair thinks he is correct. Of course, the gentleman's motion must be supported by a majority of the House by tellers. He does not have an absolute right to bring the bill up.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion; what is the motion?

The SPEAKER. To call up the first motion on the calendar for the discharge of committees.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the rule simply provides that it shall be in order to make such a motion. I do not think that would give us a superior privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair just cited a decision which holds that a motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a bill under this rule is of higher privilege than a motion to consider an appropriation bill. This is a new proposition to the Chair. The rule further provides:

When such motion shall be called up the bill shall be read by title only prior to a second being ordered by tellers.

Of course, if the House does not want to consider it, it can refuse to consider it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is the motion to discharge the committee and place this bill upon its appropriate calendar?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the gentleman meant to discharge the committee and consider the bill. The gentleman has not stated his motion.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move, in accordance with paragraph 4 of Rule XXVII, to call up the bill H. R. 263 for consideration at this time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order. Only one motion is proper at this time, and that is a motion to discharge the committee and place this bill on the appropriate calendar, and that motion must be supported by a majority vote, by tellers, in order to be considered at all. Then the motion must pass this House by a majority of all the votes of the House—not of all the Members present but of the membership of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Arizona would better withdraw his motion.

Mr. HAYDEN. I will frankly say to the gentleman from Wyoming that I have been here 10 years, and I have never seen the calendar of motions to discharge committees brought into action. I want to see what will happen if my motion is considered.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan had already made a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. He had.

Mr. DOWELL. The Speaker could not recognize anyone else while that motion was before the House, could he?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks differently. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Michigan was the only person demanding recognition.

Mr. DOWELL. He was entitled to recognition and received recognition to make his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman knows that it occurs very often that two or three gentlemen rise and the Chair recognizes one, but if another one states that he has a motion of higher privilege the fact that the Chair had already recognized one Member does not prevent the other being recognized.

Mr. HAYDEN. I was on my feet seeking recognition at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Arizona to move to take up the bill, to discharge this committee, and consider the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I make the point of order against that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is plainly to be gathered from the rule itself, which is found on page 26 of to-day's calendar. I read from the rule:

After the Unanimous-Consent Calendar shall have been called on any Monday and motions to suspend the rules have been disposed of, it shall be in order to call up any such motion which shall have been entered at least seven days prior thereto.

Recognition for such motions shall be in the order in which they have been entered. When such motion shall be called up the bill shall be read by title only prior to a second being ordered by tellers, and no such motion shall be entertained as to a bill or joint resolution the title of which contains more than 100 words; after the reading of the bill by title the motion shall not be submitted to the House unless seconded by a majority by tellers; if such motion fails of a second, it shall be immediately stricken from the calendar and shall not be thereafter placed thereon. If a second be ordered, debate on such motion shall be limited to 20 minutes, one-half thereof in favor of the proposition and one-half in opposition thereto. Such motions shall require for adoption an affirmative vote of a majority of the membership of the House. Whenever such a motion shall prevail the bill so taken from the consideration of a committee shall thereupon be placed upon its appropriate calendar, and upon call of the committee from which any bill has been so taken it may be called up for consideration by any Member prior to any bill reported by said committee at a date subsequent to the discharge of said committee: Provided, No Member shall have upon such calendar more than two motions at the same time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the motion I made was to do with this bill everything that could be done under the rule relating to the calendar of motions to discharge committees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman if he wishes to move that the bill be called up. The Chair does not remember that this has occurred before. It is an entirely novel proposition. The gentleman has the right to call the bill up, and thereupon, in order to have it considered at all, his motion must be seconded by tellers. If a majority of the vote by tellers is against the gentleman, then it has no consideration at all. If, on the other hand, the majority, on tellers, should be in favor of the gentleman's motion then all that it would accomplish would be to put the bill on its appropriate calendar in order that it could be reached when that committee is called, which everyone knows will not happen in this session.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I make the proper motion to call up the bill H. R. 263.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] It is clear there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and fifty-three Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arizona to discharge the committee on the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 263) amending section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Arizona will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 90.

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House not having voted in favor thereof by tellers, the motion fails and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13374, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

The Secretary of the Navy may use the unexpended balances on the date of the approval of this act under appropriations heretofore made on account of "Increase of the Navy," together with the sum of $20,000,000, which is hereby appropriated, for the prosecution of work on vessels under construction on such date, the construction of which may be proceeded with under the terms of the treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament, concluded on February 6, 1922, published in Senate Document No. 126 of the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress; for continuing the conversion of two battle cruisers into aircraft carriers, including their complete equipment of aircraft and aircraft accessories, in accordance with the terms of such treaty; for the settlement of contracts on account of vessels already delivered to the Navy Department; for reimbursement to contractors and subcontractors of carrying charges heretofore and hereafter approved by the Secretary of the Navy to cover additional expenses resulting from the deferring of deliveries or payments under contracts and subcontracts for materials for vessels, the construction of which may be continued under the terms of such treaty; for the procurement of gyro compass equipments for destroyers not already supplied; for the completion of armor, armament, ammunition, and torpedoes for the supply and complement of vessels which may be proceeded with as hereinbefore mentioned; and not more than $10,000,000 of the additional funds herein made available under "Increase of the Navy" shall be applied to objects of expenditure under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Ordnance; and for the installation of fire-control instruments on destroyers not already supplied, and the funds herein made available shall not be used for any other purposes: Provided, That in addition to the funds hereinbefore made available for "Increase of the Navy," the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make transfers during the fiscal year 1924 from the naval supply account fund and the clothing and small-stores fund to the appropriation "Increase of the Navy," of sums aggregating $35,000,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: On page 53, line 1, after the word "vessels," insert "authorized or."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. So it will read "for the prosecution of work on vessels authorized or under construction on such date."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, before beginning I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing some extracts from the report of the Secretary of the Navy of March last, which is the last information I have on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment for the reason that it is a change of law and legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill, and I call the Chair's attention to the fact this would authorize the expenditure of money upon vessels which are now under suspension by reason of the four-power pact. That is in effect an agreement now being considered by nations and which if adopted becomes the law of the land. And this would make available money for the completion of those vessels, the work upon which has been suspended under that four-power pact.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I say in answer to that, in the first place, there is no change of law in proceeding with the construction of vessels authorized by law, and in the second place the four-power pact is expressly excepted in the last part of the same sentence, where it says we are not to construct any vessels which are objected to by the four-power pact. If the gentleman will hear me, he will find that the vessels I am going to speak about are the submarines and light cruisers which are not part of the four-power pact.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman's amendment is subject to the point of order.

What the gentleman desires is to continue work on destroyers that has been suspended?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; my idea, sir, is the completion not only of all the light cruisers which have been authorized but also the work to be done on the six submarines of large size, as well as the three which are already begun, and I want to say a word about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The word "authorized" would take in the battleships which have been suspended.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No; because in the act itself it says "vessels under contract authorized or under construction, the construction of which may be proceeded with under the terms of the treaty"; so it is limited to this. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is in order. This paragraph is a very broad paragraph, indeed, relating to the increase generally of the Navy. The Chair thinks it may apply to those authorized as well as to the others.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I begin by congratulating the House on the illuminating speech which was made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] on Thursday last, and which is printed in the RECORD, and which I hope every gentleman in the House who is interested in a well-balanced Navy will read.

A navy does not consist of battleships alone. Those battleships are in a fleet, and that fleet needs to have with it not only destroyers, which can not proceed at high speed in a heavy sea, carry only light guns, and which can carry no airplanes, but that fleet needs also the fast light cruiser. We have 10 of them authorized now and under construction. This bill authorizes the completion of seven and the continuance at work at one-third speed on the other three, and those light cruisers will take some time to complete. England has of those light cruisers, according to the report of March last, which I am going to print, as I say, a part of it—England has some 50 or 60—I have not got the exact figures here—and a lot more building. We have only 10 authorized, and we have none on the sea. Mr. Denby closes by saying as to this matter—

If we are to have a fleet fit to fight we must complete our 10 light cruisers at once. Even with those completed our strength in light cruisers will be greatly below the 5-5-3 ratio.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I pass to the other matter, that of the submarines. We have some 80 or 90 submarines, but they are all of the second class. They can go out only a few hundred miles. They have no greater range. They have a speed of from 10 to 15 knots only. They have no speed that will allow them to keep up with a fleet going at 20 or 21 knots. We have authorized, now, nine fleet cruisers, which are twice or three times as big. Three of them are building. Six are only authorized, and this does not allow anything to be done except with the three that are building, and they are not enough.

If you will turn to the hearings, you will find in the testimony of Mr. Roosevelt, on page 742, that he says:

We have no fleet submarines, V 1, 2, and 3 representing our nearest approach to such. These three vessels are large submarines. Their cruising speed will be approximately 20 knots. They can go with the fleet as our other submarines can not. Slowing the work on them—

Under this bill they are to go slow on these—from the naval aspect is indefensible.

Mr. Chairman, we are intending to do such work in increase of the Navy as will give a balance to the Navy. We need the best submarines and, as we have none now, we ought to complete those three immediately and the $20,000,000 ought to be increased to $25,000,000.

If we have no fast cruisers with 8-inch guns, instead of 3 to 4 inch guns as carried by destroyers, we want those fast cruisers as soon as possible; and the 10 are less than those held by Great Britain or Japan, and we never could expect under the agreement suggested in this bill to get Great Britain to reduce the number of her fast cruisers to 10 or her large submarines to 8. It is absolutely beyond all contemplation, and the fact that that clause exists in the bill is no answer to our statement that we ought now to have these fast, strong, long-range light vessels on the surface and underneath the surface in order to protect the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey may have two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I think the gentleman is perhaps laboring under a misapprehension or misinformation if he understands we have three cruisers authorized on which work has not begun.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I said seven were to be completed under this appropriation, and three were going to be slowed down, because of that, but which are still begun. We ought to have more authorized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the gentleman notice the statement in this morning's press from Japan that regardless of what France or Great Britain or Italy do about the four-power pact Japan is going ahead with the decrease of armament?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not of these vessels.

I append extracts from the statement of Secretary Denby of March last, made to the Committee on Appropriations as to the need of light cruisers and the larger class of submarines and the condition of our Navy in that regard:

EXTRACTS FROM SECRETARY DENBY'S STATEMENT.

THE FLEET.

Before discussing the different types of naval vessels, I desire to draw a rough picture of a modern fleet as it must be constituted to be effective for cruising on the high seas in time of war.

We will assume that the scouting force, consisting of cruisers, light cruisers, airplane carriers, and destroyers, supported by battle cruisers, has searched for and located the enemy fleet at a distance of perhaps a thousand miles from the base of the battle fleet, and that the battle fleet proceeds to sea to intercept and engage the enemy. The fleet must be disposed in a cruising formation which, with the various screening forces, will cover an area about 300 miles in depth and 80 miles in width.

The most advanced force will constitute an outer screen to guard against surprises and to drive off enemy scouts attempting to gain information. This screen will consist of light cruisers and destroyers with lighter-than-air dirigibles, if available, and airplane carriers. This outer screen extends across the front of the fleet and on each side, where it is normally drawn in somewhat closer to the main body. There will also be cruisers astern of the fleet to drive off enemy vessels attempting to trail.

Between the outer screen and the main body will be an inner screen of battle cruisers and destroyers to detect and drive off enemy vessels which get through the outer screen, and to support the outer screen where necessary.

About 20 miles ahead of the battleships will be several divisions of light cruisers, destroyers, and fleet submarines, whose duty, after deploying into battle formation, will be to protect the head of our formation from torpedo attack and to attack the enemy.

Immediately surrounding each division of battleships and the carriers accompanying them is an antisubmarine screen of destroyers.

Thus it will be seen that a battle fleet is far more than a battleship fleet. True, the battleships are the main fighting strength, but to guard this strength until the battle, and to conserve it during the battle, other types are indispensable.

LIGHT CRUISERS.

The modern light cruiser is a vessel of at least 25 knots' speed, carrying guns of at least 6-inch caliber. Those built vary from 3,500 tons to 7,600 tons and from 25 to 35 knots.

Great Britain has 68 light cruisers built, and in addition has 28 flotilla leaders of over 1,600 tons and over 30 knots—a type intermediate between destroyers and light cruisers, and a type of which we have none in our Navy.

Japan has 8 built, 6 building, and 12 projected, a total of 26. United States has 10 building.

The use of the light cruiser is threefold:

(1) The service of information (scouting). In other words, searching for the enemy fleet, and finding out what he is doing.

(2) Screening—that is, guarding our fleet against surprise and keeping off the enemy scouts.

(3) In battle supporting our destroyers in their torpedo attacks against enemy battleships, and beating off the enemy destroyers attempting to torpedo our battleships.

A military commander should engage the enemy under circumstances favorable to himself and unfavorable to the enemy. He can not decide what to do himself if he is ignorant of where the enemy is and what he is doing. Information must be the foundation of his action; it is a vital necessity.

Since a naval commander must have information, he must have many scouts. A few scouts would be ineffective to cover a large area, such as the western Pacific.

In an Atlantic or Pacific campaign a scout must have large steaming radius, long-range radio, two or more airplanes, speed to evade more powerfully armed ships, and guns to engage ships of equal speed.

Except battle cruisers, the light cruiser is the only type which meets these requirements. Our old cruisers have neither the speed nor the radius of action. Our destroyers have neither the radius, the guns, nor the radio range, and in heavy weather could not make the speed to escape enemy light cruisers. They do not carry airplanes.

SCREENING.

The immense advantage which a surprise confers on any attacking force is well known. A fleet at sea must be surrounded by a screen of vessels to guard against surprise and to prevent enemy scouting vessels obtaining information of our fleet. This duty can be performed in part by destroyers and older cruisers, but enemy light cruisers can avoid old cruisers by their speed and sink destroyers by their guns; only our modern light cruisers can properly combat enemy light cruisers attempting to pierce our screen.

IN BATTLE.

In an action between modern fleets there will be large numbers of destroyers attempting to damage or sink the battleships with torpedoes. Light cruisers support the attack of their own destroyers, break up the attack of the enemy destroyers, and in addition attack the enemy battleships with their own torpedoes. With only approximately equal battleship forces, a preponderance of light cruisers may well mean the difference between victory and disaster.

The light cruiser has been proved by the acid test of war. At Jutland a light cruiser of each fleet first found the enemy, others warned Beatty in time to save him from the fire of the whole German fleet, and light cruisers repeatedly saved the battleships of each fleet from the torpedoes of destroyers.

Our prospective naval campaigns will not be limited as were those of the World War. They will cover half an ocean. In such campaigns it is not enough to say light cruisers will be doubly important. Without them we would enter any campaign with a nearly insurmountable handicap.

The recent conference gave international approval to a naval policy of the United States by which this Nation maintains at least a naval equality with Great Britain and a ratio of 5 to 3 with Japan.

We may consider the question of light cruisers by studying their use in war or we may accept the opinion of other powers as to their value or we may follow the ratios established by the limitation conference. By any and all of these courses we arrive at but one conclusion:

If we are to have a fleet fit to fight we must complete our 10 light cruisers at once. Even with these completed, our strength in light cruisers will be greatly below the 5–5–3 ratio.

* * * * * * *

LIGHT CRUISERS IN THE BATTLE OF JUTLAND.

There were 26 British and 11 German light cruisers in the Battle of Jutland.

A British light cruiser gave Admiral Jellico the first report of the presence of the German fleet and a German light cruiser made the first report of the British fleet.

Two light-cruiser squadrons formed a screen ahead of the British battle cruisers, and Admiral Beatty reports "their work was of great value."

At 4.15 p. m. a German light cruiser led an attack of 15 German destroyers, sinking a British destroyer and breaking up a counter-attack by British destroyers. A British light-cruiser squadron first reported to Admiral Beatty sighting the German main fleet. This report enabled Beatty to turn in time to avoid the fire of the German battleships. Beatty says "their reports were most valuable."

At 5.36 p. m. a British light cruiser attempting to get information of the German battle line was driven off by four German light cruisers, who in turn fired torpedoes at the British battle cruisers. Nine German torpedoes passed through the battle line, forcing the battle cruisers to maneuver and breaking up their formation at a critical time. At the same time other German light cruisers drove off four British destroyers, sinking one of them, and thus protecting their battle cruisers against torpedo attack.

At 6.30 p. m. the British light-cruiser squadron attacked the German battle cruisers with torpedoes, hitting the Lutzow, which was the only German battle cruiser lost.

Between 6.30 and 7.30 p. m. German destroyers, supported by light cruisers, made three torpedo attacks on the British fleet. These attacks saved the German fleet from decisive defeat at this time. These attacks were eventually broken up by two British light-cruiser squadrons.

At 7.58 p. m., two British light cruiser squadrons located the enemy line after it had been lost in the mist and smoke, making it possible thereby to renew the action.

At about the same time five German light cruisers repulsed an attack of British light cruiser squadrons and a flotilla of British destroyers.

A British light cruiser was the last vessel to see the Germans during that action.

At about 10.30 p. m., there was an engagement between four British and five German light cruisers, in which one old light cruiser (German) was sunk by a torpedo.

About 11.30 p. m., German light cruisers repulsed the British destroyer flotilla, which attacked the German battleships. Four German destroyers and one British light cruiser were sunk.

At about 2 a. m. the British destroyer flotilla attacked the German battleships, but, as Admiral Jellico reports, "they were forced to withdraw by the enemy light cruisers."

From the above it will be seen that in the Battle of Jutland, the most important modern naval battle, light cruisers were used—

(a) To find the enemy and report his position and formation;
(b) To repulse day and night destroyer attacks;
(c) To support their own destroyer attacks;
(d) To attack any enemy battleships and battle cruisers with torpedoes;
(e) To attack and drive off enemy light cruisers.

SUBMARINES.

Eighty-four submarines. The uses of submarines are—with the fleet, screening and scouting; assisting in action against the enemy fleet. Acting independently, distant scouting, observation of the enemy ports and coasts, operations against enemy trade, attack of enemy warships; defense of our own coasts and stations; mine laying.

In screening, they are formed around our own fleet to prevent attacks by hostile submarines, or in thick weather or at night by light surface vessels with torpedoes. For these purposes their small amount of surface above water and their underwater listening devices make them able to detect the approach of the enemy before they are themselves discovered, and allow them to either attack the approaching vessel with their torpedoes or warn the heavy ships of what is coming, or both. In the absence of light cruisers, with which we are very poorly provided, this service has to be assigned to the destroyers and submarines.

They are particularly well fitted for scouting for the fleet by the fact that they can see without being seen, and that if they come in contact with a much superior force they can not only protect themselves by submerging but may also inflict serious damage with their torpedoes. They are the only arm we have that can operate unsupported in the presence of superior force. For observation of the enemy in his home waters we have nothing that can compare with them. They can lie off his ports and with periscopes and listening gear keep tabs on his movements and report their information by radio.

They also have a very important part in making our own coasts and our detached stations secure from enemy action. Our fleet is, and will be for years at least, entirely lacking in battle cruisers, while other navies have them. These vessels are strong enough to deal with anything less than a battleship, and fast enough to get away from anything that they do not wish to fight. The knowledge that we have an efficient force of submarines in any given locality will go far to prevent raids by such ships, or to make them costly if undertaken.

A fair allowance of first-line submarines under present conditions would be Manila 20, Hawaii 20, Canal Zone 14, fleet 48. This makes no allowance for distant independent service, but calls for a total of 102 first-line boats. We are asking this year to keep only 84 going. In addition, we expect to keep in reduced commission (with two-third crews) 27 older boats which are fit for coast service and for use in training crews for new vessels.

The 84 first-line submarines are of the O, R, S, and T classes, from 500 to 1,000 tons and from 12 to 15 knots speed. For a properly proportioned fleet we should have boats with at least 21 knots speed for service with the fleet, others with very large steaming radius for scouting and distant service, and some fitted for mine laying. None of these classes are now in service or building except three of the 21-knot type of so-called fleet submarines. They are needed, but are not being asked for this year.

All our submarines are propelled on the surface by Diesel engines, and when submerged by electric motors run from storage batteries. They are filled with a mass of delicate machinery and fittings. The storage battery requires constant attention to keep it from deteriorating and the auxiliaries and fittings can only be kept in good order by being kept in use. It has been our experience that a submarine left idle and without a crew speedily loses a large part of her value. A large part of the machinery of a submarine is highly specialized material—Diesel engines, storage batteries, and air-compressing machinery, which is not familiar to the general service and for which there is not an available reserve of personnel even in civil life. The operation of this special type of vessel and the machinery that runs her is something that requires accurate and special training. This can not be acquired on the spur of the moment even if the vessel and equipment is ready and in perfect condition. If the submarines are ever wanted for actual service, they will be wanted on the first outbreak of trouble, and they can not be ready for such a call unless they are both materially ready and manned with crews familiar with the operation of the material and with the tactics in accordance with which their vessels will be used. Therefore, if the submarines that we have are to be available when they are called for, they must be kept in commission and in operation both for the sake of the material and of the personnel that runs it.

The crew required by even the largest submarine is small compared to any surface vessel, only 4 officers and 34 men in the case of an S-class 900-ton boat. We, therefore, contemplate keeping all our submarines in commission; those that can not be fully manned, with a two-thirds crew.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] has offered an amendment which would permit the construction of vessels that have been authorized but not yet begun. The only ships, I think, that answer that description are 12 destroyers, 1 transport, and 6 fleet submarines.

As to the destroyers, of course there is no occasion for building any more than we now have. We have nearly 300 destroyers, a very large excess over the number required.

Mr. BUTLER. How many in commission?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And we have about 200 of them out of commission now but kept in good condition, and they will be useful in case need ever arises. But, of course, Congress does not desire to spend any more money at the present time in constructing ships of that type. The gentleman's amendment would permit the building of the 12 which have been authorized but not begun, and the Navy Department has not asked for any money for their construction.

The same thing is true of the transport. There is no demand by the Navy Department for the transport, and likewise with reference to the fleet submarines.

The gentleman from New Jersey, of course, is very well informed on matters of this sort, and he realizes that the construction of these large fleet submarines is still in the experimental stage.

The three that we are now building are in a sense experimental, and it is not definitely known at this time whether they will be successful when finished, and, of course, it is only the part of wisdom that we finish the three now under construction and then if they are found to be all right the other six can be appropriated for and completed later.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has the gentleman noticed that in the hearings where the Navy Department state that they have acquiesced in the Budget under protest they likewise say that the slowing down on these three submarines is in their opinion, from a naval aspect, unadvisable and that it will cost more to complete them ultimately?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is right about that. The amount carried by the Budget was $41,000,000 for new construction. The amount carried in this bill for that purpose is $55,000,000. We recognized the force of what Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt advised the committee, and as the gentleman from New Jersey will see, by increasing this building fund $14,000,000 the work on these three that are under construction may go forward more rapidly.

Mr. OLIVER. And we would destroy the very purpose the gentleman has in mind if we now undertook to put in the bill any blanket authorization for building ships, some of which, though authorized, the Navy does not need. In other words, it might take from the appropriation carried in the bill a large amount for ships not now needed, thus slowing up work on the vessels under construction. If Congress feels disposed to appropriate for new construction, there should be an additional appropriation, rather than a direction to begin new construction with the limited funds carried in the bill for ships now well advanced.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] with a great deal of pleasure. The House may recall that in 1915 or 1916 I urged upon my colleague the necessity of building fast battle cruisers, submarines, and submarine chasers instead of large battleships and superdreadnoughts; but the World War was on, and some feared we would be drawn into the struggle, and these fears were well founded, for we were finally drawn into the great World War. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], than whom there is no more able Member of this House, led the fight for fast battle cruisers, submarines, and submarine chasers. I want to take this occasion to address the House for just a few moments, because after I made that speech I was severely criticized in my State because I was supposed to be opposed to a Navy, and Florida, extending out into the Gulf about 600 miles, is, as you know, very deeply interested in the Navy.

It is gratifying to me, therefore, to see the House come around to the suggestion that I then offered. As suggested by me at that time, the superdreadnoughts have not even yet been completed, although seven years or more have elapsed. Under the 5-5-3 pact those superdreadnoughts have been cast aside, and the millions of dollars expended on them have been wasted.

It is also gratifying to me, and I am sure it is gratifying to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER], to know that Secretary of the Navy Daniels, practically all of the leading admirals of the American Navy, Lloyd-George of England, and the leading powers abroad, and, according to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], now Secretary Denby are in accord with the attitude that we assumed in 1916.

I sincerely trust that in the future when I undertake in my humble way to make a fight to save some money for the people it will not be misconstrued or misunderstood that I am opposed to anything that is progressive, but simply that I am trying to serve my country as I see my duty. If we had adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] at that time, as I said, millions of dollars would have been saved, we would have had the battle cruisers, submarines, and destroyers that we ought to have and that we must have, and we would have a well-balanced and efficient Navy.

Certainly after the speeches of to-day I will not in the future be misunderstood, at least as far as the Navy is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 52, line 24, after the words "sum of" strike out "$20,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, we have now under construction 10 light cruisers. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], in debating that question the other day, when I asked if we would have to have the new cruisers anyhow, said we must, unless by agreement other powers scrapped the cruisers they have in excess of ours; and when we state the number that other powers have there is no sort of reasonable expectation that England will ever scrap down to the number that we have.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not quite sure whether the gentleman is under the impression that there are any cruisers that have been authorized by law that are not being built.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have said they are being built, but we are only going to complete 7 of them under this appropriation, and I want the whole 10 completed under it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, they are all going to be completed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. In time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They are not to be delayed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They are not to be completed under this appropriation. This appropriation provides for completing only seven of them and going on with part of the work on the other three.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think perhaps the gentleman is in error upon that——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I know I am right.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Because we have increased the appropriation by $14,000,000.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am talking, however, about the work under this appropriation. I suppose this new appropriation is made along the lines stated by the Assistant Secretary, is it not?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I think perhaps the testimony that the gentleman has before him was based upon the Budget figure of $41,000,000, which we have increased to $55,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. The Secretary has had his own way about it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Assistant Secretary Roosevelt said at the hearing:

By the third appropriation we expect to proceed at the normal rate on the Lexington and the Saratoga, proposing to allot to each job the sum of $8,000,000. We expect to complete scout cruisers 4, 5, and 6 by allotting the sum of $855,000. We expect to complete scout cruisers 7 and 8 by allotting the sum of $2,857,000. We expect to complete the scout cruisers 9 and 10 by allotting $400,000. We will have to slow down to one-third of normal on scout cruisers 11, 12, and 13, allotting them only the sum of $3,650,000. The normal allotment would be $9,000,000.

That is on page 741. Now, when it comes to submarines, he says they will have to slow down on them, and we certainly need those three submarines, and in order to get those three submarines this appropriation ought to be increased in order to allow us to complete them within the year. That is all I have to say.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the gentleman informed as to what the Navy Department contemplates doing with the $14,000,000 which the bill carries above the Budget estimate? The gentleman is reading from a statement made when the official making the statement was under the impression that the committee would appropriate only $41,000,000, as recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. The committee, after an exhaustive hearing, concluded that it would prove economical in the end to grant an increase in the Budget estimate of $14,000,000, thus insuring the earliest completion of the ships now building.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I did not understand that it covered these vessels. Can the chairman of the committee tell me what they do contemplate doing?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We do not allocate the money to any particular ships; that will be in the discretion of the Navy Department.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman from Alabama asked me how the Navy Department expected to allocate it. Can the gentleman from Michigan answer?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I can not. If they did allocate it, they might later on find circumstances required a different allocation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think they ought to have ample funds, and I move to increase the $20,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to say to the gentleman from New Jersey that my reason for asking the question was because I felt the gentleman was under the impression that it had been so allocated as not to accomplish the early completion of the cruisers now building.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not think the committee have allocated it. Unfortunately, they do not allocate it as they did under the old form of bill, so that you can tell what they are doing. Now the committee says that it does not know where the sum will be allocated. I think the House ought to be informed where they expect it to be allocated; and, at any rate, I want enough to cover the work. Will the gentleman tell me that if all the work under construction were to be completed within the next year that is allowed by the treaty it would be more than the $25,000,000?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; there are 56 vessels now in course of construction, and there will be needed something like $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 more than that now carried in the bill to finish this construction program, which includes the completion of two aircraft carriers.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I move, then, that we have $5,000,000 more. They need it badly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in harmony with the view of the gentleman from New Jersey, who has just taken his seat, that there should be such orderly and expeditious development of the work of construction in the Navy as will, within a reasonable length of time, give us a completed Navy as now authorized under the treaty, but I believe that all that is abundantly provided for in this bill as reported. As a matter of fact, I think if there could be any proper criticism of the work of this committee—and I certainly have none to suggest—it would be that the committee has been rather liberal in appropriations for the Navy all along the line. We have under the item of construction made available $55,000,000 in addition to certain indefinite sums that still remain of the $45,000,000 appropriation for construction in the bill for the current year. This is in addition to the very considerable amount of material that is available, not only for repairs but some of it at least for new construction work. Take it altogether the appropriation and authorization in this bill, the unexpended balances, the material available for use, I think it would be a fair estimate of the amount available for new construction of the Navy for the next fiscal year to place it at about $65,000,000. Well, it strikes me that is a very goodly sum to spend on the Navy of the United States in piping times of peace and following an international agreement on the limitation of naval armament. I think that is going quite fast enough.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to gentlemen who are going about over the land endeavoring to create the impression in the minds of the people that the Navy is being neglected, that we are not building it up as rapidly as we should or sustaining it as we should, that they at least get their facts straight before they present their alleged arguments to the country as they have been doing through newspaper and magazine articles and in various sundry and divers ways.

The committee very properly placed in this bill as a concluding paragraph a suggestion for the calling of another international conference for the purpose of placing some limitation on naval craft smaller than the great battleships; smaller, lighter, and less expensive than the ships which were limited by the recent international agreement.

If I were to have had the drafting of that paragraph I think I should have drafted it in just a little different form. I do not think that the President needs any urging on the part of Congress to do this thing when it may seem wise, advisable, and practicable to do it. Considering the matter, however, as a mere expression of opinion on the part of Congress that it would be well at the proper time to call such a conference, it is an entirely proper provision.

But if I may make the suggestion, I think that the importance of suggesting to the nations of the earth another meeting grows out of the persistent agitation on the part of men, both here and abroad, who desire enormous expenditures for naval purposes rather than out of any condition existing anywhere on earth absolutely necessitating a further agreement.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. France and Italy have not yet signed the other agreement.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true. I believe, however, they will, but I prefer not to go into a discussion of that particular matter. We will discuss that a little later when it is reached. I am referring to it now only to point a moral and adorn the tale.

Mr. Chairman, I have not been very greatly impressed with the reports that certain gentlemen believe have been received or that certain gentlemen say have been received from foreign parts indicating an intention on the part of foreign governments to go far afield in the development of smaller craft, with a view of at least partly overcoming any handicap that may have been placed upon their governments by the limitations placed on larger ships.

Since any of us can remember this is about the time of year when, according to current report, armies and navies, particularly navies, are being enlarged and extended all over the world. Just about the time when we are considering the naval appropriation bill and for a considerable period prior thereto we hear a great deal about foreign proposals of increase, expansion, and enlargement of naval establishments, and we generally discover later that at least a large part of that increase exists only in the imagination of certain gentlemen who are tremendously interested in great naval expansion. It is unfortunate that we have at one time and another had experience as legislators which leads us to have doubts and reservations relative to the accuracy of information that comes to us in regard to these matters, even through official channels. Those charged with responsibility as administrators under the Government ought to realize how unfortunate it is to have the Nation, and particularly Members of Congress, inclined by their experience to doubt the entire accuracy of information transmitted either officially or unofficially from official sources touching these important matters. I hope the time will come when some one high in the Government will lay down the law to the departments of the Government, and all of them need it, that they should be very careful that any information they give out or statements they make in support of their policies or proposals shall be accurate and based upon facts that can not be denied or successfully disputed. We will have a very much better condition of affairs when that is accomplished. [Applause.]

This bill carries appropriations amounting to $291,000,000, but in addition to that the bill makes available for construction some $35,000,000, so that as presented to us to-day it is not a $291,000,000 naval bill, but a $325,000,000 naval bill.

That, however, does not tell the entire story, because, as I have stated, there are or will be certain appropriations or remnants of appropriations available that can be used for construction during the coming year, and in addition to that the Navy has large surplus supplies on which it is drawing constantly. Reference was made a day or two ago to the fact that there are a large number of Liberty motors available for use, so that our appropriation of $5,000,000 for new aircraft is, in fact, enlarged by the value of the motors now on hand that would be utilized in new airships. There are large reserves in ordnance, in supplies of various sorts, so that putting the matter in a very conservative way—and I should like to be corrected if I am extravagant in my statements by some gentleman of the Naval Committee—the Navy will have available the coming year for its various activities and operations certainly not less than $350,000,000, probably considerably more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that we have not as large a Navy, as sufficient a Navy, as well-rounded a Navy, as some gentlemen think we ought to have, but we certainly ought to have a very goodly Navy, a very sizable Navy, a high-class and efficient Navy, with an expenditure of $350,000,000 of the people's money per annum.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman think any Navy is any good that is not the best and the strongest.

Mr. MONDELL. Some time when both the gentlemen from New York and I get into the Senate, where there is no limitation of debate, I shall be very glad to discuss that question with him.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the first attraction the Senate has had for me.

Mr. LONDON. Is not that navy best which is most suitable for the purposes of the country and the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has stated it accurately.

Mr. LONDON. It is not a question of comparative numerical strength in respect to other navies.

Mr. MONDELL. Not altogether by any means.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman tell us what else it is for?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, I have settled the matter without waiting for the Senate.

Mr. COCKRAN. It is settled in the mind of the gentleman from New York, but I want to see if we can not settle this in the mind of common sense. For what else is it available or valuable except for the purpose of sustaining the power of the Government that sustains it?

Mr. LONDON. I want to say that the common sense of my colleague is too common for me.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, that is disputed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the President very properly called the Conference on the Limitation of Armament in order that we might get away from this never-ending strife for the biggest and most expensive navy. Prior to our entrance into the World War we were spending for the Navy about $140,000,000 annually. We are now spending upward of $350,000,000 annually—considerably over double the amount we then spent. We are trying to economize along all lines. We have denied many perfectly reasonable and legitimate requests for public expenditures. We certainly do not want to economize at the expense of a good Navy, of a sufficient Navy, but I think it would be very well indeed if the gentlemen who are responsible for the Navy would spend a little more of their time seeing how good a Navy they can secure with the very liberal expenditure which the Congress is disposed to make, rather than in urging new avenues, new lines of expenditure. Mind you, I do not blame a naval man, naval experts, for calling the attention of Congress to what in their opinion is essential; if we are to have a perfect Navy, from their standpoint, that is their duty; but it is also the duty of the Congress to take into consideration all of the factors of the case and view the matter, not from the standpoint of the naval expert alone but also from the standpoint of the practical legislator who desires that his country's defense shall be adequate, but must still keep in mind the fact that expenditures for defense should bear some reasonable relation to the total sum which the Nation can afford to appropriate and expend.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes. I will ask the chairman's attention to this amendment which I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending now.

Mr. OLIVER. Simply for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for information.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Can not we have the other amendment disposed of?

Mr. BEGG. Can we have it reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER: Page 54, line 8, after the figures "$335,000,000" insert "any unexpended balances from appropriations made in this bill not authorized to be carried over to the fiscal year 1925 shall constitute a fund available for any new ship construction hereafter authorized by Congress."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment as changing existing law.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the gentleman to reserve it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would the gentleman like to have it now or hereafter authorized; quite a number are authorized now.

Mr. OLIVER. I purposely put it in so that Congress will have control over it.

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer was largely suggested by the speech of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and if he will read the testimony before the subcommittee and the statements made to the House by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] in reference to the pending bill he will understand that this amendment might serve a wise purpose. I am in agreement with the gentleman that the amount carried by this bill, including authority to use reserve supplies, approximates $335,000,000, which amount should prove adequate for the maintenance and operation of an efficient Navy and at the same time provide a reasonable sum for construction. Our people are willing to properly sustain the Navy, and I believe that in normal times it can be done within the limits of the appropriation carried in this bill. The time is now propitious for sane economies to be practiced in the maintenance and operation of the fleet we now have, and certain conditions have been pointed out in the hearings and in the discussion of this bill that suggest that some of the ships of the treaty Navy are in such condition as to need modernizing before they can be considered of real military value, and since no funds have been provided for modernizing them at this time why should such ships be kept in active commission, at great expense, when by putting them in reserve, with a small personnel, the savings thus accomplished would give us a fund sufficient to build some new vessels, which all our naval experts say are urgently needed? Give to the Navy an opportunity of translating into new ships the savings accomplished by keeping in commission only the ships of real military value at present, and they will weigh the relative value of operating ships with little military value until modernized at large expense and the saner policy of putting such ships in reserve until funds are provided for reconditioning the same, and especially if by so doing they are assured a fund with which to build the new types recommended by the General Board as urgent, and which recommendations have the hearty concurrence of the Navy Department. It costs approximately $2,000,000 to keep one of the large capital ships in full commission for one year, and when you remember that at present we confessedly have six, if not more, capital ships that must be modernized before they could be made effective in any war with a foreign power you can well see what the possibilities are for raising a saving fund for the purposes indicated in the amendment I offer.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's theory is a very ingenious one on which he might believe it would work out, but does the gentleman believe that those in charge of the Naval Establishment would be particularly inclined to economy because of the fact that some savings might sometimes be used for construction when authorized which might never be authorized?

Mr. OLIVER. I will say this to the gentleman: If he will take the time to inquire fully into this whole matter he will learn how insistently our naval advisers are knocking at the door for additional funds to modernize ships now in commission, and to build certain new types, so as to make efficient those we now have, and unquestionably their admonitions must be heeded if we expect to maintain a Navy on the basis and within the limits fixed by the treaty. Give to the Navy in the peace year 1924 an assurance that any savings made will constitute a fund available for new construction, and I think they will find some way to raise that fund. I think I have suggested where large savings may be effected without endangering our country's defense during 1924, and without hurt to the Navy that we now have.

If ships now in commission are of but little military value until modernized, and Congress now fails to give the funds necessary to modernize these ships, why should such ships be kept in full commission if, by putting them in reserve, the Navy is assured of a fund which Congress may later use for new construction or even for modernizing the old ships, if the Navy Department could show that this was the wiser course to follow?

If you are interested in saving, supply, as this amendment seems to do, an incentive and a method where the relative merits of different courses can be considered and determined on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlemen has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLIVER. Now, I happen to know that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] and the committee of which he is chairman have given some study to this subject, and doubtless they would be glad to lay before Congress authorizations for modernizing some of the present capital ships and for new construction if they felt there was even a reasonable probability of securing appropriations therefor. The amount carried now for the Navy, amounting as it does to approximately $335,000,000, makes doubtful, if not impossible, any increase, even though the necessity of modernizing the existing fleet and adding new types, as recommended by naval experts, may be shown and strongly urged by the department. Any authorizations made which will involve an appropriation in excess of $335,000,000, I am afraid, will have a long, long sleep before Congress will consent thereto.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I will be glad to.

Mr. BUTLER. If the officers of the Navy would throw aside some of these old tubs that cost us a lot of money, then we would be prepared to offer them something better. But as long as they insist on sailing around and spending money on ships that can not be successfully used we can not do it.

Mr. MONDELL. Why should they use the money?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to take up the time of the gentleman from Alabama. I know what he is aiming at, and I hope he will be successful in reaching it.

Mr. OLIVER. No harm can be done by the adoption of this amendment, and, as stated above, I think it well to hold out as an incentive to those who will have the spending of this $335,000,000 during 1924 the chance and opportunity of translating into a more efficient Navy any savings that can be effected. I have great confidence in and respect for the officers of the Navy and also for the Secretary of the Navy, and I believe they are interested in trying to accomplish savings, especially where it is felt that any savings will be used to make the Navy more efficient.

I am in hearty sympathy with the last paragraph of the bill, and with the knowledge we had of what is now needed to even maintain our Navy on a peace treaty basis, if other naval powers continue the construction of new ships, we felt that it was important to request the President to call a further conference of the naval powers with a view of placing further limitations on naval construction. If it is the desire of Congress to maintain a navy such as that contemplated in the treaty, then this conference must be called and definite action taken to further check construction. If the powers are unwilling to place further limitations on construction, then there is but one thing for Congress to do, and that is to weigh carefully the advice and recommendations of our naval experts with a view of providing funds necessary to keep our Navy on the 5–5–3 basis, as provided for in the treaty. Since the signing of the treaty our country has followed not only its letter but its spirit, and has failed to authorize any new construction whatever.

The amendment as drawn makes the saving fund available for new construction hereafter authorized by Congress, and you will recognize that this is a very proper limitation on the expenditure of the fund, since the bill requests the President to call a conference of the naval powers for the purpose of limiting further construction as to the very types of vessels which the saving fund purposes providing for. I recognize that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I hope that the gentleman from Wyoming will not insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I have tremendous respect for my colleague on the committee, but I do not follow him in the recommendation he makes as suggested by the amendment. If we assume that the department, through the different bureaus, would make the estimates in any way that he thinks they are capable of being reduced, so that at the end of the fiscal year a fund could be accumulated that could be used for construction purposes, we would need to assume that the estimates made by the several bureaus would themselves be altogether too large, and that the sub-subcommittee and the full committee of the Congress shall have approved, under what you might call inaccurate recommendations by the different bureaus, items for the appropriation bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. OLIVER. I stated that I felt that the savings, if effected at all, would be effected out of operations of the fleet, and I gave the reasons why I thought that the Navy Department, if it were assured in advance that the savings thus effected would be used for the purpose of strengthening the Navy, might feel justified in taking what they would otherwise not take, steps looking to economies in the operation of the fleet, so that these economies in the operation of the fleet would be translated into a strengthening of the fleet.

Mr. FRENCH. I think there would be a good deal in the suggestion if the Navy could utilize the appropriations in the fiscal year for which the appropriations were made. But I do not think the general purpose sought by the gentleman would be attained if it were carried over through a series of years. At present any unexpended balance goes back into the Treasury. Under the plan proposed by the gentleman, instead of the unexpended balance going back into the Treasury, it would go into a fund that would be administered independent of the Congress, and under which the Navy Department could supplement the appropriations made by Congress.

It seems to me that the gentleman is probably correct in his logic as to the first year, the first fiscal year as to which the amendment would apply, but beyond that first year it seems to me that the vice of the amendment would be this: It would encourage every bureau chief to make his recommendations generously to the Budget and to the Congress, with the idea that the estimates would be accepted in the largest terms so as to swell the fund, which in succeeding years could be used as a building fund to supplement appropriations made by Congress.

For my part, it seems to me that it is altogether the part of wisdom to retain in the Congress itself, year by year, on the basis of the facts presented by the Navy Department, the authority to make the appropriations for the coming fiscal year, to shape the building program as we go along, and to look forward to a building program definitely under congressional control, rather than to turn this responsible work over to the Navy Department in such large degree, enthusiastic as it always is in the pursuit of a naval program.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman give in an outline the number and character of vessels that the department is keeping in commission at this time?

Mr. FRENCH. That is all set forth in the hearings.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to look at it some time.

Mr. FRENCH. There are 324 vessels now in commission.

Mr. BUTLER. Three hundred and twenty-four?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. It is important for Congress to know that.

Mr. FRENCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me make a few other observations pertinent to this paragraph pertaining to the increase of the Navy, and also pertinent to the final paragraph of the bill, having to do with an expression of Congress touching the building program not included in the terms of the limitation of armaments agreement.

No one can read the history of the great countries of the world during the past 25 years without being impressed by the thought that as increased naval programs were entered upon by Great Britain, the United States, Germany, France, Japan, and Italy, the main argument in favor of the increase by any country was the argument that other nations that were potential enemies were themselves making a drive looking to an increase of their navies, in other words rivalry and competition upon the sea. For a more recent lesson, look back to the armament conference of a year ago. The one thought that was in the minds of statesmen who were here at that conference from the several countries represented, was how to protect the interests of the country to which particular delegates were accredited, not measured by what the country needed within itself, but what the country needed with respect to other nations. In other words again, the principle of rivalry, of competition, if you please.

A year ago we worked out a program looking to the limitation of armaments as respects the number of battleships, their size, their tonnage; the number of airplane carriers, their size; the size and number of guns upon the several ships; and other features pertaining to a splendid program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Now, only a year having passed by, we find another program urged in responsible quarters which, as was said by the chairman [Mr. KELLEY of Michigan] when he outlined the general purposes of this bill two or three days ago, would mean not the saving to the people of this country that which we expected would be made possible by the refusal to continue a competitive program of shipbuilding, but, rather, a still greater expenditure through a program applied to craft that are now permissible to be built under the terms of the limitation of armaments agreement—a program that would absorb far more than we will save. I refer to a program of building additional craft, including the swift cruisers upon the one hand and submarines upon the other. What is the argument? It rests upon what other nations may do. If you are going to have submarines, as some nations urge, then you must have the antidote for submarines—swift sailing cruisers—in order to put the submarines of a rival nation out of commission.

For my part, then, I believe we ought to adopt the last paragraph contained in this bill, under which an expression is made of the idea of the Congress, reinforcing the President in his great purpose to bring about the limitation of armaments of the world. And I believe we may be hopeful at this time that there is in the minds of statesmen of other nations a purpose to follow along the lines suggested by the paragraph in this bill. Within the past few days the papers have carried the story of what is going on in South America, how statesmen in Argentina and Chile and Brazil have thought the time has come when among the nations in their part of the world they may have an agreement limiting armies and limiting the ships belonging to the navies of those respective countries.

Read the discussions in the foreign magazines, carried on by the writers of those great nations that had a share in the last conference a year ago. You will find some propagandists pushing for large navies, looking to see where they can find loopholes in the present agreement. On the other hand, you will find substantial statesmen who are urging that that conference agreement be interpreted in the spirit as well as the letter in which it has been written, to the end that the nations entering into that agreement and all nations shall have a standard of limitation of armament, so that in the years to come we will not be laying upon the backs of the people of the world enormous burdens for the purpose of keeping up competitive navies.

The United States is strong enough and great enough and disinterested enough to lead on in this program for humanity, and I want the world to know that the Congress applauds the President for his great accomplishments for peace, and extends to him our fullest support in more adequate understandings among the nations that will set the standard for military and naval programs.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if I could accept the view expressed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] that his amendment would result in real economies, I should be inclined to withhold the point of order; but I doubt if you can bring about economies in the Navy by saying to the gentlemen of the Navy, "If you will forego poundcake, you may have more candy."

Mr. BUTLER. It will lead in the right direction.

Mr. MONDELL. As a friend of the Navy, I do not want to admit that naval officers are retaining in commission, simply because they have the money that they can use for that purpose, ships that are of no real value in the national defense. I do not think that naval officers should need rewards of merit, suggestions of additional grants to persuade them to do what it is their duty to do, which is to tie up, sell, sink, or scrap vessels that are not useful in the national defense. They ought to do that as a matter of duty, and I should not want to believe that the Secretary of the Navy, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and the officers of the Navy, in all of whom I have great confidence, would keep in commission ships that are not necessary. And in order to accept any such amendment as that proposed by the gentleman from Alabama we must take the view that these gentlemen of the Navy do continue to keep in commission ships that are of questionable value from the standpoint of national defense. I do think it would be very well for the Navy and its officers, all of them, to take this matter into consideration, and see if it is not possible to put out of commission a very considerable number of ships that are now being utilized.

And another thing, if I may touch upon a question which is a tender one with some gentlemen of the Congress, I think the Navy might very well consider and definitely pursue a plan under which we shall have less navy on the dry land, particularly fewer naval yards and stations. There is to be found the largest leak in naval expenditures—unnecessary yards, unnecessary stations, yards and stations not needed for the maintenance of an efficient navy, as everyone knows who is informed on the subject.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is clearly legislation and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation made for the Navy shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services of civilians and of enlisted men of the Navy, except as herein expressly authorized: Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time 34 enlisted men of the Navy.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. What is the necessity for this provision? Do they not already detail men for this work when necessary and is there any danger that they will detail too many?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In response to the question of the gentleman from Connecticut I will say that the Bureau of Navigation is the only bureau in the Navy in the District of Columbia that has had assigned to it any enlisted men. All the other bureaus are operated by civilian employees. The committee was not in sympathy with the idea of assigning enlisted men to the bureaus in Washington, but the Bureau of Navigation has been made an exception to the rule. This grows out of the fact that since the war this bureau has had a tremendous amount of work, more or less temporary in its character, and we thought it proper that a few enlisted men should be assigned to it temporarily. They have a voluminous correspondence from all the States of the Union with reference to the records of enlisted men during the war. The situation has not reached normal yet, and it seemed better to permit the employment of a few enlisted men than to take on civilian employees permanently. As the work was temporary in its character, we thought it advisable to permit the bureau to use the 34 enlisted men—the number they have there now—until such time as the regular civilian force can handle the business of the bureau.

Mr. TILSON. It seemed to me a wise provision and that there was no occasion for limiting it; that there might be occasions where they might have reason for the use of even a larger number.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The portion of this paragraph coming before the proviso to which the gentleman from Connecticut draws attention provides that enlisted personnel shall not be detailed to the bureaus in Washington.

Mr. TILSON. Has not the department been doing it?

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Does not the Secretary of the Navy have authority to detail to the bureau?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; this proviso will allow him to detail 34 men to the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. TILSON. It is only current law.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. TILSON. If the first part of the paragraph were not here there would be no restrictions.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the proviso was not here the Bureau of Navigation would have to discharge the 34 men. I think it is clearly subject to a point of order; but I hope the point of order will not be made.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and that no part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that, at the time of the proposed acquirement, can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards of the United States, when time and facilities permit, for a sum less than it can be purchased or acquired otherwise.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it would be impossible for me to permit the discussion under this bill to come to an end without expressing to the House what is in my heart to say touching the chairman of the subcommittee, Governor KELLEY. I am sure that I convey not only the sentiment of members on this side of the aisle but of the full Committee on Appropriations and the membership of this House, regardless of party, when I say that it is with profound regret that we realize that his services for the time being will come to an end with the conclusion of this session of the Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY is rounding out now a period of 10 years' service, and during that time has had come into his life the experiences that come to the lives of all the Members of this body, and then some experiences that come to but few Members of the House of Representatives.

During the first year he was here he had the experience of being what you might call under observation from his colleagues. They were looking him over. They were taking his measure, if you please. All Members go through that period. Then Governor KELLEY had the experience, which does not come so generously to our membership, of having it recognized that here was a man who possessed great mental attainments, unflinching courage, remarkable industry, mental integrity, and with it all such a lovable and attractive personality as ingratiated him into the hearts of the Members of this body. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, those of us who have served here for any length of time realize that the work of the House of Representatives is essentially teamwork—important, essential, yet, after all, teamwork. Look over the record of two years just gone by and think of the work that has been done, but as you look about over the membership of this House, splendid men and women, as a matter of fact you can find but few names that will attach permanently to the legislation or policies of the Congress. Go further and look back over 20 years' work of the Congresses of the different political parties.

Much legislation has been accomplished; policies have been defined; great and strong men have moved in this Chamber; and yet as you endeavor to recall the names of Members that are attached to policies of government or great pieces of legislation, you must recognize that they are few. The greatest compliment that commonly can be paid the individual Member of this body is that which is paid when it can be said that he was a strong Member of the team.

To Governor KELLEY at once may be paid that compliment. But of him more must be said. During his service here in unusual degree there has come to him that which comes to the rare Member of this Congress—the opportunity through his own force, his own genius, of writing his name upon a great policy of government.

I refer especially to the work of last year. Ten months ago there was given to the world the result of the Limitation of Armament Conference. It represented the splendid idealism of your President. It represented a formula prepared under the leadership of your masterful Secretary of State. And yet after it had been ratified by the members assembled around the conference table 10 months ago, it would have failed in its mighty purpose if it had not been interpreted by the Congress of the United States and by the legislative bodies of other of the world's powers. To Governor KELLEY, more than to any other man, belongs the distinction of interpreting the work of the convention and writing into actuality, into a legislative program, if you please, the principle, the spirit of the Limitation of Armament Conference. [Applause.]

One other word. I am sure I voice the thought of the Members of this body when I say that it is our wish that in the earliest possible time the good people of Michigan may see fit to call upon Governor KELLEY again, to draft him for such position of responsibility where the people of this country and the world may have the full advantage of his wonderful ability and of his genius for statecraft. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill will in large measure complete the active cooperation of the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] in the work of the Appropriations Committee, because he is to leave us on the 4th of March next. As chairman of that committee I want to testify to the wonderful genius of this man, to his constant and loyal devotion to the cause of the people, to his hearty cooperation in every phase of the great work with which this committee is charged. He is a wonderful adviser and counsellor, with a wisdom and tolerance seldom embodied in an individual—always placid, always strong, always courageous, never in a state of mind that tolerates bickering, not easily disturbed; a man of great conception and influence and a master of detail, marvelous in his ability to visualize. He has a vision that is nation-wide. He has never spared himself nor has he ever had a personal objective. His work has been a real service—and what splended service he has rendered! The American people owe him a debt of gratitude for his unselfish and patriotic devotion to their cause. We will miss him in the House. The Committee on Appropriations will miss him as a great committeeman. No one will miss him as much as I, because I have leaned on him for his advice and counsel. He has always been true. His integrity of purpose and intellect are unassailable. He knows no hours, he fears no work. He denies no requisition that is made upon him. His mind, his heart, and all of his physical forces are at the command not only of the chairman of his committee but of the House and the American people. God speed him in whatever he may undertake to do in the future. I am sure that wherever he goes or whatever he may do he will deserve the confidence, respect, and esteem not only of the community in which he lives but of the great American public. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States is composed of strong men, picked men. The various constituencies of the Nation send here their strong and virile and forceful characters, men acquainted with public affairs, men who have made their mark at home, men who are qualified for the highest public service. In view of that fact, when a man stands out preeminently here in strength of character, courage, and virility, he is indeed a strong and forceful character. Such a man is PATRICK KELLEY, of Michigan. [Applause.] From the standpoint of my responsibility here I owe him a debt of gratitude. He is not only able and forceful, a man of sane views and sound opinions, but a man who realizes the importance of consultation, of cooperation, of teamwork. In all the important work that he has had charge of here he has not only performed his part splendidly, but he has consulted with his colleagues and those charged with responsibility and carried on his work in cordial agreement and cooperation with them. Through it all he has been a good friend, a pleasant companion, a delightful character, who even in his most forceful and emphatic moments has retained the smile that never comes off, and even in temporary defeat—for sooner or later all men who have responsibility in important matters on this floor meet with at least temporary defeat—he has been, as always, a suave, smiling, genial gentleman. I join with those who have spoken in wishing for our honored colleague long life and abundant success in whatever he may undertake. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as the ranking member on this subcommittee, I desire to add a few words to what has been said about our colleague. I am, of course, in hearty accord with the tributes which have been paid to him by the three gentlemen who have preceded me. I have served with many members on the majority side, and I think I can truthfully say that I have never served with any member who demonstrated greater loyalty to duty than has the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. I particularly want to say this, that during the time that I have served with him on this subcommittee never once has it been necessary to take a vote of the subcommittee, never once has there been a partisan decision, never once has there been any suggestion made as to the politics of any member of the committee, but, in accord with recognition of the fact that in the Appropriations Committee there should be no politics, every problem has been solved. Never has there been a time that I did not know that no important provision would be considered without my first being notified of the provision in question. It is a pleasure for a member of the minority to serve with such a gentleman, and I join with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in expressing the hope that whatever he may do, to whatever walk of life he may devote his efforts, success shall attend him. Certainly he will take with him the affection of the Members of this House. I know that with his efficiency, his intellect, his energy, and his ability as an advocate, with which we are all so familiar, in the private walks of life he may work to greater advantage to himself, but if the time shall come when he is again returned to public life, the public will be the gainer, for the public has seldom had a more faithful servant than the gentleman from Michigan. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, since coming to Congress I have been on the same committee with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and I know that the Members of the House, irrespective of party, share a sincere and common regret that he, our friend, will not be in the next Congress. We will miss his genial companionship, his sound judgment, and wise counsel. His splendid mind and fine spirit make his personality a very perfect human engine for worth-while accomplishments in every field of human endeavor where he labors. One need but examine the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs and before the subcommittee on naval appropriations to know that his official life has been one of great industry, of intelligence well directed, and of real achievements the memory of which will remain with us always as an inspiration and a beckoning to high and helpful public service. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I can not add in language to what has been said by the gentlemen who have preceded me, but I should not feel just right if after the many years of association which it has been my honor to have with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], after years of observation of his labors, I did not voice or try to voice, with all the sincerity which is in me, the profound admiration which I have for the character, the ability, and the intellect of the gentleman from Michigan. The Congress is indebted to him, but above and beyond that the country is indebted to him for the years of faithful, honorable, and efficient service which he has rendered to it. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, as a citizen of Michigan, as his fellow for nearly 10 years on the delegation of that State in this House, as his friend and political associate for a score of years, it naturally is highly gratifying to me to hear recorded in this Chamber to-day such splendid voluntary recognition of the great ability and worthy public services of Hon. PATRICK H. KELLEY. Such praise from men highly honored by great States, North and South, East and West, members of both the great parties, all real leaders upon this floor, given in such generous and unsolicited fashion, is praise indeed. In the busy turmoil of the strife and stress of legislation, serious and busy men have felt it worth while to stop a moment, turn aside from contest and partisanship to say to a deserving public servant, "Well done."

Hon. BURTON FRENCH, of Idaho, Republican, serving his eighth term; Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES, of South Carolina, Democrat, serving his sixth term; and Hon. W. B. OLIVER, of Alabama, Democrat, serving his fourth term, have been coworkers with Mr. KELLEY upon the naval appropriation subcommittee. Hon. MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois, Republican, serving his ninth term, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, of Wyoming, serving his thirteenth term, and chosen leader of the Republican Party in this House; Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, of Tennessee, serving his ninth term, and leader of the Democratic Party upon this floor; Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER, of Pennsylvania, Republican, serving his thirteenth term, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Praise from these men is high recognition of duty performed by my colleague with rare ability, industry, and courage.

These traits—ability, industry, and courage—have long been recognized by the people of Michigan as preeminently characteristic of "PAT" KELLEY, as our State universally knows him.

Michigan born, educated at the Michigan State Normal School and the University of Michigan, he has been a conspicuous figure in the public life of that State for a score of years.

In addition to serving on the State board of education, Mr. KELLEY's public service consists of two terms as superintendent of public instruction, two terms as lieutenant governor, one term as Congressman at Large, and four terms as a Member of Congress representing the sixth congressional district of Michigan.

In passing, it must be noted that it was while Mr. KELLEY was superintendent of public instruction that the present excellent compulsory school attendance law was enacted, such enactment being largely due to Mr. KELLEY's personal efforts in this direction.

It was during his encumbency of the office of lieutenant governor, at which time he was the president of the senate, that such important legislation as the railroad 2-cent fare law, the improved direct primary election law, and the law providing for the taxation of telephone, telegraph, and express companies upon an ad valorm basis were enacted.

Never did organized special interests and forces of reactionaryism contest more vigorously or more bitterly progress in legislation than did those elements contest that program. The State senate was evenly divided, 16 with Governor Warner for the program and 16 definitely organized in opposition. KELLEY was the presiding officer and it was then I first learned that his engaging smile and his bit of blarney were but exterior decorations, in no way detracting from the courage with which he held the course his conscience and his judgment dictated. He demonstrated a rigid backbone. Presiding always with fairness, but, sustaining the cause of progress, he made possible the success of the legislative program, and it is interesting to know that he held the admiration and affection of the one 16 equally with the other.

As a Member of Congress he supported the constitutional amendments providing for woman suffrage and national prohibition, and he has been active in reducing naval appropriations to a basis consistent with the needs of the Navy under the treaty adopted by the Conference on Limitation of Armaments. In addition, he has consistently supported all child-labor legislation, the Shepherd-Towner maternity and infant welfare measure, legislation providing for the vocational education and rehabilitation of persons injured in industry, and workman's compensation legislation.

The zeal with which he has performed his legislative duties in Congress has been set forth by some of the most distinguished men in this House with expression of regret that the Nation, for a time at least, loses his services in the national halls of legislation, expressing thus the universal feeling of this House.

His passing from this work is tribute to his courage of conviction, always characteristic. He sought to protect and he succeeded in protecting political standards in the State where he had fought so many a contest before with reaction and selfish private interest. In his defeat there is no sting of failure. A fight he has made for principle is won. Not having put self foremost, his own interest counts with him least.

His friends on both sides of the center aisle of this House may rest assured that Michigan is proud of PATRICK H. KELLEY and will welcome him back, with his smile and his courage and all. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 54, line 22, strike out the words "or other time-measuring device"; and in line 24 strike out the words "or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we have now in the navy yards of this Government 50,441 civilian employees. Under this provision, especially the words which I seek now to strike out, your Government can not have any kind of system of observation to determine how much work per day these 50,000 employees accomplished or the manner of efficiency in which they accomplish it. Their unions will not permit the Government to check up on them. This Government is the only business in the United States that can not observe its employees while they work. I call attention to the testimony of Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, when he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, when he testified before one of your committees, that since Congress had put this kind of a provision in the law that it had been impossible for the department to get more than 67 per cent efficiency. That is the testimony of your former Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Why when you have a man construct a wall for you and you are paying him by the day you want to know how many brick he can lay in a day and how he lays them and whether he is efficient or not. There is nothing in private business to keep you from it. If a man goes to paper your house, do you not want to know how much paper he can hang upon the wall and how he puts the paper upon it when you are paying him by the day? If a man is hauling sand, you have a right to know how many yards of sand he can haul and what kind of sand he hauls. If a man is constructing any kind of machinery for you in a private business, there is no business concern in the Nation but which reserves to itself the right to have a foreman upon the job to observe the manner in which the workman conducts himself and the efficiency of his work; but when you came to the Government of the United States with 50,441 civilian employees they say to the Government, "You can not observe our work, you can not observe our men, you can not observe our efficiency. If you put a foreman anywhere around us to observe, he will not get any salary from the Government." Has not the time come for business men in Congress to stop that kind of foolishness?

Mr. STEPHENS. Do not they keep a sort of record for efficiency of all these men—a sort of card record?

Mr. BLANTON. They keep a self-made report record; but whenever you go to observe the movements of men or check up the amount of their work per day or efficiency, the walking delegate comes around and calls attention to this provision in the law which says that the Government can not observe the movements of the men. Now, I am not objecting to this time-watch business. Some men do not like to have a time watch held over them. Let that stay in there. Let us prevent them from having a time watch held over them; but when you prevent the Government, through its foremen and its managers, from observing in some kind of a manner the movements of the men and their production and efficiency, you continue going lower and lower in the maximum of efficiency. Instead of having 67 per cent of efficiency, as you had when Assistant Secretary Franklin D. Roosevelt checked it up, you will finally find that the efficiency will go far below 50 per cent. It is natural, it is human nature, for a certain per cent of workmen to shirk when there is no observation of their movements, and I submit that in all fairness to the men themselves we should strike the hamstringing language of this provision out of the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hardly think it is necessary to take up the time of this committee in explaining why this language should be left in the bill. It has been debated on three bills for the last eight years that I know of, or since 1914, and this House has never failed to sustain the proposition of having it remain in the bill. It is a part of the prohibition that is put in the bill to prevent the Taylor system from being used in Government factories on this continent. I do not know whether you gentlemen understand what the Taylor system is or not; but I will say this, that the gentleman who originated the idea tried to put it into the privately owned industrial concerns of this country but they have abandoned it. It is not in use in any factory in this country that I know of to-day. Therefore this amendment was necessary to prohibit the use of it in Government-owned factories. It has been held in order and is in order to-day, and those of us who are opposed to the Taylor system are opposed to any entering wedge by which you limit the prohibition. That is about all, and that ought to be an answer in explanation to the House. It is a prohibition, and this is put in to prohibit the Taylor system in Government factories.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 10, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President is requested to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with the view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have already sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LINEBERGER: Page 55, line 11, after the word "otherwise," strike out all of line 12 and insert "The Congress indorses the limitation of armaments by international agreement and suggests to the President the desirability of entering into further negotiations as soon as he may deem it practicable," so that the paragraph will read:

"The Congress indorses the limitation of armament by international agreement and suggests to the President the desirability of entering into further negotiations as soon as he may deem it practicable with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with the view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft."

Mr. LINEBERGER. The word "requested," as it appears in the paragraph, might be misconstrued to indicate that the Congress had to bring to the attention of the President something which he had overlooked.

Now, I think the gentleman from Michigan, whom we are all very sorry to know is leaving this House and who has done truly a great work in the furtherance of this great idea of the limitation of armaments by international agreement, is disposed to accept this amendment because it in no way ignores the great principle for which he stands and for which the House stands, as is shown by the fact that last year in the naval bill, which came up at that time, a provision was inserted which carried within it the same idea that is proposed here, but in what I thought then and think now was couched in unfortunate language, because it "requested" the President to do something in which he was already engaged. So I trust that the gentleman from Michigan will see fit to accept this verbiage as a substitute, and I trust that the House, should a division be demanded in the matter, will vote to substitute the verbiage here presented.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Wherein is there an advantage in the language employed by the gentleman from California over that proposed by the gentleman from Michigan? The latter is known, and will be known henceforth, as "the Kelley amendment."

Mr. LINEBERGER. I consider that the word "requested" carries with it a false implication. It is just as though the gentleman were going from here to the Washington Hotel, and everybody had reasonable knowledge of that fact, and then somebody would run up to him at the Mades Hotel and request him to continue on his journey.

I think the fact that the President has shown to the country and to the world his intense interest in the question of the limitation of armament, and his intense desire to further activities along all legitimate lines in that direction, should preclude that the word "requested" should appear in referring to the President in this matter. It is not necessary under the circumstances.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINEBERGER. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I also suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the use of the words "as soon as he may deem it practicable" is also very advisable.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I thank the gentleman. I agree with him.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The paragraph as originally drawn is a straight-out request to the President to do it, without regard to circumstances and conditions. Those of us who know the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] know, of course, that he would not want the President to do it regardless of circumstances and conditions.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that, as everybody knows, Italy and France have not yet approved the provisions of the five-pact naval treaty. It is expected that they will, but how can the President comply with the "request" of Congress until they do? Let us be reasonable in the matter, lest the nations who are observing the actions of this body consider us ridiculous.

Mr. COCKRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] paid the gentleman from South Carolina a very high compliment which was in no sense exaggerated. I think, indeed, if it erred at all it was on the side of inadequacy. For that speech, besides being of very unusual excellence makes it clear, in my judgment, that some provision of this character is not merely a desirable addition to the pending bill, but it is an absolutely necessary precaution to save civilization from the complete collapse with which it is now threatened. [Applause.]

I do not care much about the language of this paragraph. I am not very hopeful of immediate salutary results from the conference it urges—if one be held. But as an expression of the ardent desire of the American people to cooperate with all nations and peoples in measures which must be taken, and taken soon, if the world is to be delivered from evils the like of which have never yet afflicted the human family, I think the declaration in favor of a conference is the most important action within the capacity of this Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, besides the five minutes allotted to me, I would like to ask a little additional time for the purpose of explaining and vindicating what I have just said. The gentleman from South Carolina has made it painfully clear that the late Disarmament Conference has failed utterly to end competition in armaments among the nations that were parties to it. In the light of that demonstration, the declaration of Mr. Bonar Law in the English House of Commons a few days ago that England can not pay her debt to this country assumes portentous significance. That was an admission of bankruptcy, for inability to pay one debt—and that her largest obligation—impugns her ability to pay other debts. That astounding confession has attracted little attention. And yet the bankruptcy of England, whose credit for 250 years has been the very corner stone of international commerce, must inevitably entail the ruin of prosperity everywhere and imperil the very existence of the human family.

But even worse than Mr. Law's confession of England's bankruptcy is his statement, made at the same time, that at this moment England is paying every year—and apparently will continue to pay for an indefinite time to come—£100,000,000, or $500,000,000, to support the unemployed.

Think of it. One hundred million pounds—$500,000,000—is more than was appropriated for the entire support of this Government the first year that I became a Member of Congress. That enormous sum neither produces nor contributes to produce a penny in commodities or things of value. And it is but the lesser part of this dreadful waste. Every one of these unemployed receives as a dole no more, at the outside, than one-half the value of what he could produce if he were actually engaged in labor. Diminution of production through unemployment amounts at least to a million dollars. So that the net loss to the British people is not $500,000,000. It is, at the very least, $1,500,000,000. This frightful drain on a country already impoverished by the enormous losses suffered in the war can not fail to cause total collapse of its industrial system. And the collapse economically of England will extend far beyond her own territorial limits. It will be the source of calamities worse than those now scourging some countries which a few years ago were the fairest in the world, and which will engulf all countries, including our own, unless means be found to end them.

Is this exaggeration? I wish it were. That it is an accurate statement of conclusions which are irresistible from facts that are undisputed can easily be shown.

When we speak of the money losses suffered by England through unemployment, or of $350,000,000,000 worth of property destroyed in the late war, few of us realize the real meaning of the expressions we are employing. We are very apt to think of these stupendous amounts as though they described mere bundles of bank bills or bags of coins—gold or silver, as the case may be. Now, the only value or importance of money is the commodities for which it may be exchanged. And because we always express the value of these commodities in terms of money it has come to pass that many persons think this money is itself the value which it merely describes. How grievously erroneous this notion is will be plain if we realize the functions of a single dollar in the ordinary small transactions of life.

With a dollar in my pocket I go out in the morning and buy a dollar's worth of oranges at a fruit stand. The proprietor of that stand with that dollar goes to a shoe store and buys a dollar's worth of shoe laces. The man who sells the shoe laces with that same dollar buys a dollar's worth of note paper at the stationery store, and the man who keeps the stationery store takes that dollar and buys a dollar's worth of neckties at the haberdasher's, and so on. That dollar passes from one hand to another, perhaps sixty or seventy or eighty times in the course of a day, each time effecting exchange of one commodity for another. To speak of all those transactions as trade or commerce, aggregating $60 or $70 or $80 would be entirely correct. But it would be radically wrong to assume that sixty or seventy or eighty separate dollars had been employed to effect it. The one dollar was but the symbol or agency by which each of these different persons obtained what he desired by parting with something he possessed.

The same principle governs the larger transactions of commerce. Trade, whether small or great, whether internal or foreign, is always exchange of commodities. Money is but the wheel by which the exchange is effected.

You hear a great deal these days about stabilizing exchange through international conferences and about restoring the volume of trade through some common action by governments. Mr. Chairman, there is no power in this Government, there is no power in the Government of Germany, there is no power in the Government of England, or in all the governments of the world combined, to stabilize exchange or create trade in the absence of commodities. Before commodities can be exchanged they must first be produced. Exchange of commodities is going on around us every day; and yet because in foreign trade the term "bill of exchange" is applied to the piece of paper which merely attests each particular transaction the minds of men have become oblivious of the fact that it is the commodities themselves that are the basis of every exchange and not the agency by which the exchange is effected.

Let me illustrate. A ships a cargo of wheat from Chicago to Liverpool. He draws a draft on London for the value of it, say, £2,000. He takes that draft to Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. or to Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. or some other international bank, and offers it for sale. Under the conditions that prevailed before the war that draft would be bought at the rate of about $4.84 for each pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. COCKRAN. I should like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. Now, B, in Philadelphia, owes for a cargo of silk purchased, perhaps, in Lyons. He comes to J. P. Morgan & Co. and buys a draft for $10,000. Here there was an exchange of one cargo of wheat for one cargo of silk. The person who sold the wheat never met or heard of the man who bought the silk. None the less, it was the exchange of those commodities which formed the basis of the bill of exchange issued by Mr. Morgan to the silk merchant and of the check given to the seller of wheat. One balanced the other. Mr. Morgan bought a draft and issued another for the same amount. He has paid out no money of his own. He has simply effected the exchange of these two cargoes of commodities. It might be that the check given to the seller of wheat would be balanced not by a single foreign draft but by two or three aggregating about the same amount. Instead of issuing one bill of exchange to one silk merchant for $10,000, a bill for $5,000 was sold to him, and another for $2,000 to a dry-goods importer for a cargo of cloth, and a third for $3,000 to a dealer in hardware for a cargo of cutlery; but the system would remain the same. It would always be the issue of paper tokens or symbols attesting actual exchanges of commodities. That is all there is to exchange throughout the world.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. If you will get me plenty of time.

Mr. BEGG. I am very much interested in the gentleman's statement, and I wish to ask him this question: Suppose the man who owned the silk did not want the wheat. There must be something of value in the country on the other side to exchange to the man over here. The gentleman's philosophy would not follow out if the man of one country was through trading or if he ran out of tradable property.

Mr. COCKRAN. I fear I must explain a little further in order to get this matter within the range of the gentleman's concepts.

Mr. BEGG. I will yield to the gentleman all the time he wishes for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me, then, explain to the gentleman. The check or bill which Mr. Morgan gives to each of these men is believed implicitly to be equivalent to gold in value. If there was the slightest doubt about that, it would not be accepted, of course. But the fact remains that it was a mere symbol. There was no gold exchanged. Very little gold enters into these international operations. None except the small amount required in normal times to balance the difference between debts paid abroad and amounts collected by Americans in foreign countries. Before the war commodities were exchanged amounting in value to many hundreds and thousands of millions of dollars without any use of gold beyond a very few millions sent from one side or the other, mainly to settle balances or differences between exports and imports.

Exchange, in the very nature of things, rises or falls according to the movements of commodities, and not, as some gentlemen seem to think, according to the whims or wishes of bankers or the desires of governments. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] I am sure will realize that when the bills of exchange offered to bankers for discount exceed in number the foreign drafts they are asked to issue, rates must go down and vice versa.

If the number of cargoes of wheat and other products, for instance, exported from this country exceed largely the cargoes of commodities purchased abroad, then exchange would go down. In other words, Mr. Morgan would give a little less than $4.84 per pound for each draft he was asked to buy. He would offer $4.83 or $4.82 or $4.81 until desiring to pay debts abroad would be encouraged by these low rates of exchange to purchase drafts on foreign banks, and this would operate to restore the normal rate. But in every case the actual basic transaction would have been the exchange of commodities by producers in this country for commodities produced abroad.

Now, suppose there were no commodities to exchange, then manifestly no bills of exchange could be issued. That was the case after this war broke out, when there were practically no imports into this country. Everything produced in the countries at war was used by their own governments for military purposes. We had abundant commodities to export. The result was that bills in enormous numbers were offered to American bankers, but there were no purchases of drafts on foreign countries. And the rate of exchange went down and down and down, until trade practically stopped. It was only by extensive borrowing of money here by foreign governments and traders that it was reestablished. Foreign countries having no commodities to give us in exchange for those they needed, offered nothing but promises to pay; that is to say, they promised to give us commodities equal in value at some future time.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. COCKRAN. I should lik to very much, but my time is very limited.

Mr. BEGG. Then I will not trouble the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am endeavoring to explain these economic terms at this length, because when it is understood that there is no value in money itself, that its only value lies in the commodities that it can obtain, the task of bringing within your realization a full conception of the situation disclosed by Mr. Law's statement and by the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is very much simplified.

When I am about to build a house, and I borrow $50,000, what do I get? What does my creditor give me? Not $50,000 in coin, not $50,000 in bank bills. Those would be of no use to me except for the fact that with them I can obtain the mortar and the bricks, the lumber and the plaster, besides the aid of bricklayers and mechanics by which the structure that I have planned can be erected. And the money paid in wages to these workers is valuable to them only for the food and clothes and shelter it will obtain. When, therefore, we learn that there was destruction of capital amounting to $350,000,000,000 in the late war we must realize that chairs, and tables, and houses, and machinery, and cattle, clothing, and articles of food equal in value to that stupendous sum, all of them essential to the support of human life, were destroyed. The entire agricultural product of our country this year is valued at $7,500,000,000. The destruction and waste caused by the war just ended was therefore nearly fifty times the total agricultural production of this country during one of the most prosperous agricultural seasons in our history.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCKRAN. The conditions already produced by this waste and the graver conditions that are impending can be remedied in just one way. No loan from one government to another will suffice.

The world is suffering from destruction of the things on which human prosperity—not to say human existence—depends. How are they to be restored? In one way only, and that is by replacing them with other commodities taken from the earth by the labor of human hands exercised on its bosom. There is but one way by which this can be effected, and that is by taking the weapons of war from the hands of men everywhere and replacing them with the implements of industry. The weapons of destruction can indeed be removed from their hands by treaties between nations. Governments organize armed forces and governments can disband them.

However, I do not believe international conferences to be the most effective method of reaching universal disarmament. I am one who believes that we had it in our power at the close of the war to effect disarmament, complete and universal, by simply declaring to all the world that so long as any nation maintained military establishments by land or sea we would outarm the strongest of them; but if they all consented to disarm, we would disarm with them. But that course was not adopted. A different policy was pursued. We entered into treaties by which we and the other great naval powers agreed not to maintain navies beyond a certain size. Now, surely, it was self-evident that a navy to be good for anything must be able to overcome any other navy.

There can be neither sense nor reason in maintaining a military force for any other purpose. An attempt to avoid recurrence of war by maintaining navies of equal strength is to my mind about as foolish as if two men should agree as a measure of peace between them that each would carry a revolver, but that he would load only half its chambers.

If the nations mean peace they can make peace secure in just one way, and that is by discarding the means of making war. There is no other way.

There is no disarmament worth considering unless it be complete. Partial disarmament means continuous armament. To speak of limiting armaments is to employ contradictory terms. Armaments are essentially and intrinsically competitive. They can have no purpose except to prevail against other military forces.

To appropriate the enormous sum of $325,000,000, as we are doing in this bill to maintain a Navy which we have solemnly bound ourselves by treaty shall never be strong enough to effect the only object of which a navy has ever before been organized by civilized men, is to my mind a course more befitting opera bouffé than enlightened statesmanship. But that is exactly the position this country has assumed. There is no prospect that any different policy will be pursued while the present administration remains in office. The only course now open to the patriotic citizen is to make this policy, which can not be changed, as effective as possible.

Whatever can be obtained by conferences between nations, we should seek to attain. I am, therefore, in favor of the international conference recommended by this measure. It by no means follows, because the last conference has been fruitless to the degree which the gentleman from South Carolina has made so clear, that another conference may not produce better results. Much has happened since then to chasten resentments and to impress upon all who may attend such a gathering much clearer notions of the perils that overhang our civilization. There certainly can be no harm in bringing the nations together, if only to take full account of the appalling conditions prevailing throughout a part of the world and threatening to overspread the whole of it. I do not believe they can engage in such a study without becoming convinced of the truth that unless they disarm they will perish.

I said two years ago on this floor that unless they disarmed they would perish. They did not disarm, and now, by the admission of every one of them, they are actually perishing.

The collapse of Austria, the impending ruin of Germany, together with England's declaration of bankruptcy, all show that the whole fabric of civilization is in imminent peril of destruction. Already the roof has fallen in, and unless the process of disintegration can be checked, the whole structure must soon perish in confusion and disaster.

I believe that this civilization can be saved, but to avert the ruin which threatens it all civilized nations must act together and act quickly. Not merely do I believe this civilization can be saved but it can go to a higher plane than it has ever attained, if we can only succeed in taking the weapons of destruction from the hands of men. If from all this confusion and disaster there should ultimately emerge a world entirely unarmed, where every pair of human hands and every dollar of capital would be employed in productive industry—none diverted to war or preparation for war—the gain to civilization would be greater than that which followed emancipation of the serfs in Russia, or abolition of slavery in this country, or liberation through the great revolution of the land in France from the surviving feudal restrictions which excluded the people from possession of the soil.

This world is as rich to-day as it has ever been in natural resources. In the implements and agencies by which it can be cultivated and its products made available for human use, it is richer, vastly richer, than it has ever been. Yet numbers of people are perishing for lack of food. And the continuously rising cost of living attests with ominous distinctness the steady growth of scarcity throughout the whole world. With all men engaged in industry, and everyone enabled to enjoy in peace all that has been produced by the labor of his hands, the whole aspect of human affairs would undergo a revolution salutary and beneficent beyond our power now to comprehend.

The capital destroyed in the war would not merely be replaced but it would be increased enormously. And remember, when I speak of capital, I speak of it only in the sense that it embodies the three essentials of human existence—food, shelter, and clothing.

If the economic collapse which now seems imminent be not averted, the people of this earth can no longer be fed, nor clothed, nor sheltered. But if by disarmament all men are liberated from military enterprises and enlisted in productive enterprises, all difficulties will be removed, and the pathway opened to abundance greater than the world has ever known.

The first step toward this consummation, let it not be forgotten, is to dissolve armaments. They must be put away if civilization is to survive. It is no longer a question whether nations will maintain armaments or abolish them, but a question whether they will disarm now while some capital is left by which industrial conditions can be restored, or whether they will wait until disarmament is forced upon them by collapse of the whole industrial structure.

I myself am hopeful, aye, confident of the future. I believe men ere long, realizing the actual conditions surrounding them, will turn to industry for their salvation. And when in every country weapons of destruction are discarded, implements of production in the hands of hopeful workmen—the miner's pickax, the farmer's plow, the mechanic's tool, the laborer's implement, striking this earth which its Creator has made so bountiful—will bring forth from its bosom in ever-increasing abundance all the essentials not merely of human existence but of human comfort and prosperity, even as the rod striking the rock in the desert under the inspiration of the Most High brought forth the generous tides that relieved the thirst of His famishing people. The prosperity created by world-wide industry under conditions of peace will be distributed with justice—that is to say, with evenness among all who have contributed to it—and it will be inexhaustible, because justice and peace will be its fountain. [Applause.]

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to strike out the last paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LOGAN moves to strike out the last paragraph in the bill.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is that a substitute for my amendment?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers the amendment as a substitute.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am glad to take this opportunity in the discussion of the pending bill to make appropriations for the Navy Department to say a few words in behalf of the Charleston Navy Yard, which on several occasions has been the object of attack, for the purpose of showing that the yard was only established after a most painstaking, careful, and exhaustive examination by an official board composed of some of the most capable and competent officers of the Navy, and that on every occasion since when the yard has been investigated it has been adjudged to be a most important, useful, and valuable asset to the Naval Establishment.

It will be recalled that the Charleston yard was established about 1901, as the result of the report of a board of officers, of which Rear Admiral Frederick Rodgers, United States Navy, was president. In considering the merits of the location attention was especially invited to a consideration of the following subjects:

(a) The depth and size of the harbor and the character and depth of the navigation from the sea to the harbor and from the latter to the station, if upon a river.

(b) Its defensibility and the character and extent of the defense, if any, now in existence.

(c) The facilities, at or in the immediate vicinity of the location, for furnishing labor, materials, and supplies with promptness and at moderate cost and its ability to supply labor which may be required in large quantities for irregular periods of time.

(d) The suitability of the sites for founding public works, especially dry docks.

(e) The elevation of the lands with respect to grading or filling that may be necessary.

(f) Direct railroad or other lines of communication with commercial centers.

(g) The supply and cost of good water.

(h) The depth and extent of the water frontage.

It will be seen at a glance that the subject which the board was called upon to consider covered quite completely all the elements which enter into the location of a proper site for a navy yard, and was so regarded at the time by those highest in authority in the department. Each of the questions submitted to the board were gone into fully and in detail and as the result the board selected the site where the Charleston yard is now located as a proper one.

In 1905, about four years after the Government had determined to establish the yard and while it was still in course of construction, Admiral F. W. Dickins visited Charleston Harbor in command of the coast defense squadron of the United States fleet. At a dinner given at that time in honor of the new cruiser Charleston Admiral Dickins, in the course of a speech delivered by him on that occasion, made the following remarks:

It has been exceedingly fortunate for the squadron that there was such a port as Charleston to select as our headquarters. It has proved to be an ideal place for the work we have in hand. The harbor is a commodious one and the water on the bar will now permit any of our battleships to enter this port. The flagship Texas has the distinction of being the first battleship to enter this port. As is well known, there is about 30 feet on the bar at high water.

After entering the harbor 50 battleships with 26 feet draft can be anchored in Charleston Harbor at single anchor, 400 yards apart with a scope of 45 fathoms of chain. Sixty-five battleships with the same draft and with the same scope of chain can be moored in Charleston Harbor 1,000 feet apart. Thirty-five battleships can be moored above the battery.

The new navy yard now under construction at Charleston is about 7 miles up the Cooper River from the battery. Twenty-eight feet can be carried to the yard at high water. The naval reservation has about 1,200 acres and a water front of about 1¼ miles.

The climate of Charleston is a genial one in the winter months, free from prolonged freezing weather, and such a climate that workmen can be employed out doors all the year around. The resources of the city are ample to provide for the personnel of a large number of vessels. All of these conditions would seem to indicate that this place is well worthy of the fostering care of the Government in the interest of a great naval station.

The people are loyal and patriotic, and their courtesies to the officers and men of the squadron have been most hearty and most generous. It is particularly gratifying to know that the uniform of the American bluejacket is held in high esteem and honor by the people of this city, and that the press of the city is most complimentary and sympathetic in all it has to say of the Naval Establishment.

Strategically, the Charleston Navy Yard is nearer our bases in the West Indies than any other yard on the mainland; it is a little nearer the Panama Canal than Galveston and about 10 miles nearer than New Orleans.

Certainly this was very high praise from one well qualified to speak; and since that time the harbor of Charleston has been considerably deepened, and the opinion of the admiral would be even more pertinent now. Again, in addition to the magnificent harbor of Charleston, the city has the advantage of being closely connected up by rail with all the great manufacturing centers of the United States; so, from the standpoint of the constancy of supply, both of labor and material, we might say that there is no place but Charleston south of Norfolk on the entire coast line of the United States—Atlantic, Gulf, or Pacific—which offers so favorable a location for a yard.

We take it that the object of a navy yard is to furnish a convenient and economic rendezvous for the ships of all classes of the Navy. If the Charleston Navy Yard were abolished, there would be none such between Norfolk and San Francisco. While we understand that at one time there were those who contended that it was the proper naval policy to have only a few yards and all work concentrated at these, yet we submit that that theory was never sound, being founded upon conditions existing in other countries which had an extremely short coast line as compared with that of the Atlantic seaboard, and that such views have now been entirely abandoned.

Every naval board and every naval officer of standing and experience who has seen the Charleston Navy Yard has been most favorably impressed with it.

In the preliminary report No. 6 of the Commission on Navy Yards and Naval Stations, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, Document No. 1946, the commission, of which Admiral Helm was chairman, on page 27, paragraph 33, will be found the following:

After weighing all the advantages and disadvantages, including cost, of the various sites between Cape Hatteras and Key West, Fla., the commission is of the opinion that on this coast line Charleston Harbor most nearly meets the physical requirements of the Navy Department for a first-class navy yard.

In the report of Rear Admiral E. A. Anderson, commandant of the yard, dated December 7, 1921, he states as follows:

The Charleston yard is at present the only active navy yard on the Atlantic coast south of Hatteras. The South is lacking in private establishments at which, in need, naval vessels could be docked and repaired, while there are many such private yards north of Hatteras. For this reason it would be more disadvantageous to the safety of the Navy in emergencies to close the Charleston yard than any or all Government yards north of Hatteras.

In 1914 Rear Admiral J. M. Helm, at that time commandant of the yard, wrote as follows about it:

The fact is, as all naval men recognize, that with the opening of the Panama Canal the Charleston Navy Yard becomes an invaluable asset of the Navy. The prime purpose of the canal is to afford a quick means of transferring our battleships from our Atlantic to our Pacific coast. The incomparable superiority of the Charleston Navy Yard lies in the fact that not only is it the nearest yard of first-class equipment to the Panama Canal but it is the only yard south of Norfolk which is impregnable against an attack by sea. Charleston, although under siege throughout two great wars, has never been captured from the water. Its defenses to-day guarantee it against such a fate in future, and make the Charleston Navy Yard, sheltered from storm and protected against any hostile fleet, the great strategic base from which any possible naval warfare of the future is most likely to be conducted.

In 1916 Rear Admiral John R. Edwards had this to say of the yard:

It behooves the thoughtful and progressive officer of the Navy to give immediate, extended, and careful consideration concerning the possibilities of development of the Charleston (S. C.) Naval Station. Whether viewed from an industrial, financial, or strategic standpoint, the progressive, if not the rapid, development of this naval station intimately concerns the efficiency and operation of the fleet.

For military and strategic reasons it appears of paramount importance that there be developed on the Atlantic coast, at some point south of Cape Hatteras, a naval station capable of docking and repairing our largest and most important battleships. The protection of the Isthmian Canal, a project that involves the expenditure of about $400,000,000, combined with the generally existing belief upon the part of naval experts that if the fleet will ever be called upon to engage in battle the contest will take place in the Caribbean makes it a matter of importance to the efficiency of the fleet that there be developed on the mainland of the Atlantic coast (and independent of any outlying naval base) a first-class naval station.

The channel and harbor conditions of the Charleston Navy Yard, together with its industrial possibilities, appear to be measured by some of our naval experts from conditions existing about the period of the close of the Civil War. As evidence of the satisfactory existing character and extent of the channel conditions on the navy yard water front it is only necessary to state that the battleship Connecticut about two years ago with packed bunkers and a full supply of ammunition and stores made a complete turn in the channel in front of the navy yard and proceeded to sea without the aid of tugs.

In a report dated October 23, 1916, Rear Admiral B. C. Bryan, at that time commandant of the yard, had this to say:

From Hampton Roads to Key West there is a stretch of coast of approximately 1,000 miles, Charleston being slightly north of the center of this stretch, about 415 miles from Hampton Roads and 588 miles from Key West. In all this coast line Charleston is the only harbor offering facilities for a navy yard with positive assurance of a deep channel from the sea at a reasonable cost of original construction and yearly maintenance and with a protected anchorage ground for a large number of vessels of deep draft.

An idea of the advantage of location may be formed from the following:

Charleston is nearer than Hampton Roads to all Gulf ports by about 350 miles.

It is 200 miles nearer Guantanamo than Norfolk, 270 miles nearer than New Orleans, and 170 miles nearer than Pensacola, and is less than 200 miles farther from Panama than either Pensacola or New Orleans.

Its central position on the long stretch of coast below Cape Hatteras and its comparative proximity to the Gulf, Caribbean, and the isthmian ports makes Charleston a port of strategic importance.

Rear Admiral J. R. Helm, head of a commission on navy yards and naval stations appointed under an act of Congress approved August 29, 1916, in a preliminary report of the commission has this to say of the yard:

The commission is of the opinion that it is necessary, advisable, and desirable to take immediate steps to improve this yard so as to permit full utilization of its docking and repair facilities for work of all kinds within the limits of the capacity of its dry dock and the depth of water which can be maintained, without undue additional expenditure, in the channel approaches from the sea to the navy yard. * * * Viewed as an existing navy yard, with resources and equipment capable of most effective expansion with a reasonable additional expenditure, the most important problem is: How can this yard be most advantageously utilized for naval needs? Its large land area, excellent dry docks, present shop equipment, extensive adjacent harbor, sheltered location, capability of defense by fortification, mines, and the natural character of the terrain, its accessibility to the sources of supply, and excellent transportation facilities by land and water, renders the problem one of comparatively easy solution. * * * After careful consideration of all data submitted and the conditions previously set forth in this report, the commission recommends as follows concerning the navy yard, Charleston: That it is necessary, advisable, and desirable to improve this navy yard in order to meet the requirements of such portions of the fleet as may be assigned to it for maintenance and repair, including additional facilities as a submarine and destroyer base, and to utilize to the greatest advantage its facilities within the limitations of the capacity of the dry dock and the 30-foot approach channel to the navy yard already provided for by Congress in the last naval appropriation bill.

All these reports show conclusively and beyond dispute the Charleston Navy Yard is ideally located and worthy of the most fostering care on the part of the Navy Department. Not only, however, has the Government looked with kindly eye upon the port of Charleston as the proper place for the establishment of a navy yard, but the Standard Oil Co., recognizing its manifold advantages, has recently established just south of the yard a magnificent refinery costing millions of dollars, and during the war the Government located, several miles above the navy yard, the most splendid and complete terminals, costing upwards of $17,000,000, which will compare favorably with any on the Atlantic or Pacific seaboard.

Of course, from time to time the Charleston navy yard has been attacked just as the navy itself is attacked, but as the navy is essential to the safety of the country, so the Charleston Navy Yard is essential to the Navy.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I assume that the vast majority of the committee is in favor of the bill carrying language requesting a further conference on the subject of the limitation of armament. I think the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] was accurate in stating that the only question here is one of language. That question is raised, however, only by the gentleman from California himself, because I know of no one else who objects to the language in the bill.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Oh, I talked the matter over with various Members of the House, and I hope the gentleman will correct himself to the extent of admitting at least that I feel convinced there are others who agree with me in this matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was only expressing my opinion that he alone objects to the language now in the bill.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I decline to yield any more. I ask that the gentleman from California be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I expressed the view, gentlemen of the committee, when interrupted, that the opinion expressed by the gentleman from California was not shared by others. He says not. I accept his statement that there are others who entertain the same opinion, but I reiterate that the views of the great majority of the committee are not in accord with his views. Now, here is the language—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asked a question at the time as to the difference in the language of the amendment and the language in the bill: "The President is requested to enter into negotiations." That is the language of the bill. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] it is, "the Congress indorses the limitation of armament by international agreement and suggests to the President the desirability of entering into negotiations." When it was shown to me I said I had no objection to it, and it was fully my intention to vote for it, but the gentleman made a speech, and he said that his objection was that the language contained in this bill carried a false implication. When he made that statement I made up my mind I was not going to vote for his amendment, nor do I expect to vote for it. There is no false implication. Why the necessity for changing the language? That is the question the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asks. There is no necessity except to placate the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER]. What difference does the language make? When the Borah amendment was considered there was received a letter from the President, and listen to what the President said about it:

> I have said to inquirers, as I am now pleased to say to you, that it is not of particular concern to the administration what form the expression that Congress shall take, though it is most agreeable that Congress shall express itself in favor of securing, if possible, an international agreement upon a program for the limitation of armament.

Again:

> It is wholly desirable to have the expression of a favorable opinion on the part of Congress relating to this world question, and it would seem to me ample if it should be expressed in the broadest and most general terms.

I am vastly more concerned with the favorable attitude of the Congress on this question than I am as to the form of expressing that attitude. You may be sure that the Executive will be ready to give every consideration to such expression as the Members of the two Houses of Congress and themselves disposed to make.

The Borah amendment was then before him and the language was that "the President is requested." There is absolutely nothing to justify the Lineberger amendment except the desire to placate the gentleman from California. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, is there any reason why this should not remain—the Kelley amendment instead of the Lineberger amendment? I know of none. So far as I am concerned it ought to be the Kelley amendment and I hope it will remain the Kelley amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Let it remain the Kelley amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope this House will vote down the Lineberger amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it your desire as well as mine to request the President to do this thing?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is.

Mr. BUTLER. Who suggests the desirability of this other language?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Nobody except Mr. LINEBERGER.

Mr. BUTLER. Why do not we ask it plainly? Let it stand as it is.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The position of the President is not so insecure that a request from Congress will harm him. He will not take offense at a respectful request from the representatives of the people.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from California, and much prefer the amendment of the committee. In the first place, the gentleman from California in his amendment is in effect contradictory. The gentleman says that the Congress indorses the limitation of armaments by international agreement, and then practically condemns the Washington conference by wanting to call another conference to undo the work, as it were, of the conference which met in Washington a year ago.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I yield briefly, not for an argument, just for a question.

Mr. LINEBERGER. The gentleman misstates the intention of the amendment. It is to further negotiate in addition to those which have already taken place.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If the gentleman indorses the one already conducted, if it was really effective, there would be no occasion for going further. I want to call the attention, however, of the committee to the fact that even the committee amendment, which I am going to support, probably will be ineffective. We are presented with this situation: The present limitation of armament treaty, though not ratified by all the signatory powers, has been ratified by the United States, and that treaty provides that it shall be in effect until the 31st day of December, 1936. In other words, we have signed that treaty, we have agreed it shall be binding until 1936. The nations have gone ahead with the building of auxiliary fleets under the treaty, and will it not appear that we now go before the world and say we want to back out and start over again after they have expended millions of dollars in building auxiliary ships of below 10,000 tons displacement in agreement with the treaty, under terms to which the United States agreed?

Is there prospect of success now that did not come a year ago? Why, gentlemen of the committee, do you not suppose that Mr. Hughes, the Secretary of State—do you not suppose that he undertook, when the conference was in session, to secure a limitation on the building of warships under 10,000 tons? Do you not suppose he endeavored to place a limit on submarines, destroyers, and other auxiliary craft? Do you not suppose that the President of the United States and our technical advisers undertook in the disarmament conference to secure the limitation of all armaments, large and small—limitation in number as well as size? If they did not, then they were blind to the great importance of the question. If they did not, then their efforts were vain and empty. If they did, if they sought to secure an agreement by the other powers of the world and to secure the limitation as to building ships below 10,000 tons and the limitation of submarines as to number and size, and to secure the limitation of armament below 8 inches in caliber of guns—if they did undertake to do that, then, gentlemen of the House, they failed; and if they failed a year ago, if the other nations of the world that sat in the Washington conference a year ago were not willing to make an agreement to place a limit upon ships below 10,000 tons, and if they were not willing to limit their armament below 8 inches in caliber of guns, do you suppose they are now more inclined than then to follow a different course?

I am going to surrender whatever doubts I may have as to the success of another such conference and shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] to this bill. But I want to say to you, gentlemen, that the real problem can never be solved merely by treaties of this character which merely seek to limit the size of navies and the caliber of guns.

Wars will never cease until the cause of war is removed; nations will fight so long as there is no forum for the settlement of their quarrels except the battle field; the peoples of the earth will continue to pour out their blood so long as the only final authority among nations is that of the bayonet and the bullet; armies and navies will continue to struggle until the peoples of the world establish an agency to settle international disputes according to law and reason. Taking away battleships, taking away craft above 10,000 tons, only increases the necessity for building more auxiliary ships. The disarmament conference provided that the signatory powers could not build, except within certain limits, ships of above 10,000 tons. Ergo, they must therefore build a great many more under 10,000 tons.

The foreign representatives in the conference knew the terms of this treaty. The American representatives knew the terms of this treaty when they signed it. They knew that the nations of the world could go on building warships, submarines, and auxiliaries below 10,000 tons and increasing their armament below 8 inches in caliber of guns. And, knowing that, they signed it. But, gentlemen, I trust that the President will respond to this request of Congress, and that we shall go on in the endeavor to limit the armaments of the world. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this amendment has been the source of a great deal of discussion here on the floor of the House, I had hoped my amendment would be voted up or down on its merits, but as the distinguished gentlemen from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who is my friend and whom I respect, has seen fit to make this a matter of personal loyalty of the membership to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and made it a question of whether we shall have "the Lineberger amendment" or "the Kelley amendment," I want to say to the House that I have no personal pride of opinion in the matter whatever. I only think I am right, but inasmuch as this is the last naval bill in which the genial gentleman from Michigan will take part, I am going to withdraw my amendment and, without further debate, let it be "the Kelley amendment," and I hope this will please my friend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Let us vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER] withdraws his amendment.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LOGAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 54.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, have you considered my amendment to the last paragraph? I will ask the gentleman from Michigan to let us consider this amendment, which comes at the end of the last paragraph.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It has not been reported yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LINTHICUM: Add the following after the period, page 55, line 17: "And it is also requested that he enter into negotiations with the said governments and the governments of other nations, with a view to the United States becoming a party to an international association, whether now existing or hereafter created and by whatever name it may be called, designed to preserve the peace of the world or at least diminish the possibility of war on land and sea, and in that connection to limit the construction of all types and sizes of surface and submarine craft and aircraft."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have not had the opportunity to speak on this.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 54.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object. I am at least entitled to say something on my amendment, whether it is in order or germane or not. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to withhold his request.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland object to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman is given five minutes will he object?

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is all I ask for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I have offered an amendment requesting the President to invite the nations of the world to the consideration of an association of nations and through that association to provide for a decrease of the armaments of all kinds. I can not but believe from the result of the last disarmament conference that little can be accomplished through conferences of that nature. The treaty framed by that conference between the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy has been ratified by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, but not by France and Italy. It has therefore to this time accomplished but little. It has accomplished so little that when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] was asked what had been the results, he said there had been none. No ships have been scrapped except several worthless ones out of commission. While the treaty provided against the building of battleships and cruisers except according to the 5-5-3 ratio in excess of 10,000 tons, it did not provide any restriction upon the building of those less than 10,000 tons. While it provided for the number of 16-inch guns, it did not provide any limitation on the number of smaller guns, and any nation can manufacture two 8-inch guns in lieu of every 16-inch gun it is prohibited to manufacture. In the turmoil and confusion which prevails among the nations of the world at the present time, scarcely any action in conformity with the treaty has been taken.

To-day we are asked to vote requesting the President to call a disarmament conference for the purpose of limiting the building of ships less than 10,000 tons. While I shall support such a provision in this bill, I must admit that from our experience of the disarmament conference which met on the 12th of November, 1921, there is little prospect of any results from another disarmament conference. To-day the press tells us that the nations are preparing to construct a great fleet of warcraft of the smaller type not restricted by the disarmament treaties. To-day we are faced with the possibility of another race for leadership in naval affairs. Realizing what has taken place, I can not but believe that the only possible way to bring about disarmament is through an association of the great nations of the world, providing against the construction of powerful navies and also against great armies. I care not whether you call it a League of Nations, a league of peace, or an association of nations, but let it be some agreement between the great powers for the prevention of war and for the preservation of peace. The nations of Europe are looking to America to lead; they look to our country, the only solvent and creditor nation of the globe, to lead in that effort to make the last war bring about the permanent peace of the world. The chaotic condition which prevails in Europe and the Near East should certainly stimulate us to quick action to preserve the stability of nations and again establish them upon a permanent footing whereby trade and social intercourse may again bring about the friendship of the various peoples who are now at enmity with one another.

Our Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, in the letter which he and some 30 other prominent citizens signed, recognized the fact that there should be an association of nations, and said they were supporting the Republican ticket because they believed that to be the quickest way to get results, or in similar words.

We have now been under the Republican administration for nearly two years and confusion has become worse confounded. Is it not high time that we should resort to other means to secure stability? Mr. Bonar Law, Prime Minister of England, has told us that England can not pay her debts. Around England are clustered the financial conditions of Europe. Let this Gibraltar of finance default and it would be nothing short of disaster. France, Germany, and Italy, all practically bankrupt, would doubtless collapse. I believe if my amendment were adopted we could yet save these various countries, and likewise place ourselves in a far better condition than we are to-day. Our great exports, in fact, our entire foreign trade, depends upon the stability of the nations across the water. To bring peace and prosperity to our own people we must not neglect a friendly hand to these great customers of ours. The world looks to America. What is the answer of the present administration? The people of our country look to the present administration for a definite and concrete foreign policy, and when this definite policy is outlined, then and not until then can we take our place in the galaxy of nations to which we are entitled. The press tells us that France has no faith in what is being said on the part of America. How can she have, or how can any other nation, until President Harding and his Secretary of State lay down the policy of America for the guidance of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 54, line 13, with reference to the proviso which was stricken out upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

The CHAIRMAN. The entire paragraph was stricken out.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Indiana withdraws his point of order with regard to the paragraph.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to line 9, page 54. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. After the Chair has made a ruling and it has been approved by the committee and the paragraph has been passed, it is not in order to withdraw a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOWELL. I think not even by unanimous consent, because the record is already made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the House by its unanimous consent can permit the gentleman to withdraw his point of order, which would vacate all the proceedings. Of course, it can not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I agreed with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] that this proviso was subject to a point of order, and as the Chair states, of course, that made the whole paragraph subject to a point of order, and it all went out of the bill.

The first part of the paragraph prohibits the employment of enlisted men in the departments in Washington, so if that went out of the bill there would be no limitation whatever on the subject, and the Secretary of the Navy could assign to the bureaus of the departments in Washington as many enlisted men to supplement the civilian force as he saw fit. Of course, the gentleman from Indiana did not want to accomplish that. In the next place, these 34 clerks who are now in the Bureau of Navigation are there in a more or less temporary capacity. If they are thrown out, in all probability in another body the amount of the appropriation for the Bureau of Navigation will be increased so as to permit the employment of 34 more civilian clerks, and they would then in all probability be continued indefinitely. It seemed to the committee that for this one year these 34 enlisted men might well be permitted to remain in the bureau. Therefore, I hope no one will make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. It was on the assurance that this was not to be permanent law and that no effort would be made for a permanent transfer of enlisted men into the department that I withdrew the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Do these enlisted men receive the salaries of civilian clerks?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; they receive their enlisted pay, and this is the only case in the departments in Washington where enlisted men are so employed.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman asked that the whole paragraph be reincorporated into the bill?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the point of order is not made, I will ask to have the whole paragraph reinstated.

Mr. BLANTON. It would require an amendment providing that it be reinserted in the bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph to which we have just referred, on page 54, beginning at line 9 and ending with line 16, be restored to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the language be restored to the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. On page 9 of the bill, after line 12, a heading "Recreation for enlisted men," was omitted by the printer. I ask unanimous consent that that heading, "Recreation for enlisted men" may be inserted in the proper place.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. OLIVER, and Mr. LINTHICUM were given leave to revise and extend their remarks on this bill.]

On motion of Mr. KELLEY of Michigan the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 13374), had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: On page 54, line 22, strike out "or other time-measuring device," and in line 24 strike out "or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 9, noes 103.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present. I think it is an important matter, on which we should have a roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order that there is no quorum present. It is evident that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion to recommit be read again before the roll call.

The SPEAKER. That is impossible, because the gentleman from Texas has made the point that there is no quorum present, and the Chair has declared that there is none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. That is not necessary. The only thing in order is either a motion to adjourn or a roll call. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members. As many as favor the motion to recommit will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 6, nays 228, answered "present" 2, not voting 194, as follows:

HOWARD W. AMBRUSTER ON THE ARSENIC SITUATION.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an article on the calcium arsenate situation that I think will be very interesting to the farmers of the country.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOUNDBROOK, N. J., December 7, 1922.

The Hon. JOSEPH FRELINGHUYSEN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In view of the recent adoption of the resolution introduced by Senator Smith of South Carolina calling upon the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the present arsenic and calcium arsenate situation in relation to the problem of boll-weevil control, it occurs to me that you might be interested in some articles written by that well-recognized expert on this subject, Howard W. Ambruster.

Mr. Ambruster was the man who designed, built, and operated the largest calcium-arsenate plant in the world. It is located right here in Boundbrook and was owned originally by Mr. Frank Hemingway, whom you may know personally.

It seems to me as a close student of this problem of boll-weevil control that it might be extremely valuable to the cotton growers if these articles were spread on the records of the United States Senate, so that copies might be sent to those who stand to profit most from the information contained therein, namely, the southern cotton growers.

Very truly yours,

PAUL MCMICHAEL.

[Reprinted from November 27, 1922, issue of Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter, 100 William Street, New York.]

WHENCE WILL COME THE ARSENIC?

Arsenic, being wholly a by-product, is, productively speaking, immune from the stimulating influence of demand. The supply is measured solely by the activity of production in the metallurgical field, especially copper, and the price of arsenic would have to rise far, far above even to-day's high level before smelting for the sake of getting the arsenic content of a metallic ore could be looked upon as a profitable undertaking.

Under normal conditions in metallurgy this country produces something like 15,000 tons of arsenic a year. In the years when that output was normal almost the entire quantity found ready consumption. What could be the effect of adding a demand for some 4,000 tons for the manufacture of calcium arsenate? The answer will clarify, but it will not relieve, the situation resulting from the enormous demand for calcium arsenate to combat the cotton-boll weevil. Metallurgical operations are not now normal; they have been subnormal for several years. Need one seek further for evidence that there is a shortage of arsenic? The high price now prevailing has a very substantial raison d'etre.

The cotton planter is faced not by a shortage of calcium arsenate, or a "corner" in that product, but by the stubborn fact that manufacturers of the desired insecticide are extremely hard put to get the raw material to make it out of. There is no lack of firms ready to make calcium arsenate and market it at a reasonable price, and new ones are looking for an opening every day; but to get arsenic—and the arsenate is 40 per cent arsenic—the manufacturer has to bid against the industries which in former years took the greater portion of the available supply, and even then he finds that the smelters have a tendency to take care of their older customers first.

Arsenic can be produced otherwise than as a by-product of smelting. There are several arsenical minerals deposited in different sections of the United States. But no process has as yet been devised for making arsenic from orpiment, realgar, mispickel, and other native minerals at a price which would afford relief from existing market conditions. A few firms are producing arsenic direct, or are about ready to do so, but they will not be able to offer it at a bargain.

Orpiment, practically the most promising arsenical mineral, which contains 50 per cent of arsenic, has been located only in Utah. Realgar, which contains 70 per cent of arsenic, is found in Utah and Washington. Nevada and Washington have deposits of other minerals of good arsenic content. Mispickel (arsenical iron pyrites) is more widely distributed, deposits having been located in 17 States. These minerals offer a potential primary source of calcium arsenate, or of some equally effective compound of arsenic. Their practical application in the boll-weevil fight requires, however, a great deal of development.

There is talk in some of the cotton States of cooperative or State calcium arsenate plants. If we may make a suggestion in this connection it is this: First get the arsenic. Mispickel deposits exist in Georgia, Arizona, North Carolina, and Virginia (to name only the locations convenient to the cotton belt). Perhaps the State universities can be induced to study the problem of turning these deposits to account in the campaign against the boll weevil. The need justifies a goodly measure of research.

Not so much is heard now as was common talk a few months ago of the possibilities of getting arsenic cheaply from abroad. This material is on the free list of the new tariff law, but importations have not developed any marked proportions. Metallurgy is at as low an ebb in Europe and the Far East as it is in this country. The agricultural peoples of those regions in their intensive practices and because of the large proportion of garden vegetables among their crops need considerable arsenic in the form of Paris green and other compounds. This condition leaves little, if any, to be exported. Even a high price would likely have but a temporary effect in attracting sellers to the American market; the home governments would soon act on the plea of their agricultural peoples and impose restrictions on exports.

Investigation of the calcium arsenate situation has been asked of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission. The question seems to be a chemico-economic one rather than a matter of monopoly, as is hinted in the request for a probe. The ingenuity which developed the fact that calcium arsenate eradicates the boll weevil has now the bigger task of developing the production of the insecticide.

ARSENATE SHORTAGE A SERIOUS REALITY—CALCIUM ARSENATE DEMAND FOR BOLL-WEEVIL CONTROL LEAVES SUPPLY OF RAW AND FINISHED MATERIAL BEHIND.

(By Howard W. Ambruster, calcium arsenate consultant.)

Many contributing factors have brought about a rise in the arsenic market, which buyers among insecticide producers claim is getting top-heavy. From a low mark of between 7 and 8 cents several months ago it advanced at first slowly and more recently by leaps and bounds to 13 cents and over.

The writer has analyzed various phases of the arsenic and insecticide situation from time to time during the past year and has pointed out numerous reasons why arsenic must reach higher price levels. It would seem now that every one of the many facts which could affect demand has been suddenly accentuated.

The arsenic-buying season for next year's requirements of insecticides started in with all stocks of both the raw material and the finished products reduced to the lowest minimum in years by the pressure for late shipments of lead arsenate and Paris green and finally the scramble for calcium arsenate in July. Meanwhile the smelters having shipped all old stocks were still producing less than normal on account of the condition of the metal market.

CALCIUM ARSENATE IN A BOOM.

As reports began to come in about the boll-weevil control this year as conducted by the progressive cotton planter and investigator alike, it became evident that calcium arsenate had, indeed, come into its own. The success of this method of control has definitely proved itself as the main defense of the southern planter against the insect invasion. By contrast was the short crop from those plantations in the infested areas which were not dusted either because the owners were unable to secure supplies or unwilling to use the dust if obtainable.

The result has been a pyramiding of the preseason agitation in the South for contract offers for next year's requirements of calcium arsenate, which agitation started almost before the last cars were shipped South during the summer. Dealers and consumers in the South could not understand why northern manufacturers should have charged a so much higher price late in the season than the figure set before the season opened by one large manufacturer. They did not realize that this earlier price made on the State of Georgia contract was induced by the fact that the manufacturer had carried the stock for two years, and therefore sold it not on the basis of cost plus a legitimate profit but practically as distressed merchandise.

As a matter of fact, the bad judgment displayed by the seller in this instance, while it saved the Georgia planters a large sum of money and permitted them to secure calcium arsenate while the rest of the South begged for it, at the same time cost the seller a large sum, and also caused the rest of the insecticide makers to delay their manufacturing program until late in the season, and thus actually induced the shortage of calcium arsenate last year to such a degree that the balance of the cotton States lost a great deal more than Georgia actually saved.

But with last season's peculiar record a recent experience, the buyers immediately started a campaign for prices for next year, and this important factor in bulling the market price for arsenic itself gradually gathered impetus until finally the pot boiled over when early in November Georgia's State Board of Entomology asked for bids for next year and was unable to obtain any.

FOREIGN SUPPLY NEGLIGIBLE.

Meanwhile the tariff agitation re white arsenic had culminated in the final passage of the tariff bill with this product on the free list. Many consuming buyers had held back on their contract purchases on the fallacious theory that as soon as the tariff was definitely settled the domestic market would be flooded with foreign arsenic and prices would go down immediately. However, the nonexistence of any available foreign surplus beyond that quantity which has come into this country in previous years prevented any response to the new demand from the United States.

The fact that these bidders for foreign arsenic all became active at the same time simply boosted the market up ten or fifteen dollars a ton immediately after the tariff was signed.

In addition to the already existing makers of insecticides a number of new producers have appeared on the scene and many others have been considering the manufacture of calcium arsenate. Inquiries for actual purchases for these accounts have helped along the cry for arsenic, spot and future, and the methods used by some buyers to secure quotations on comparatively small purchases have caused requests for prices on a carload to be multiplied in the New York market to several hundred tons. Instead of buying through one source or bidding quietly, these bidders have gone from one seller to another, including both producers and importers or dealers, and finally to all of the brokers.

In itself constant repetition of requests for prices will bull the market on any product, and when there is an actual shortage the effect is many times multiplied. One strange feature of it has been the way the bidding price level has kept just under the market, but has advanced with the market. In this respect it differs from the market in many chemicals during the war when wise buyers would bid over the market and get their purchases and then sit back and watch the other fellow get caught. In this arsenic situation many of the bidders who still are just under the market are actually offering prices in excess of the figure at which they were apparently willing to buy a few weeks ago.

The increase in the price of cotton has kept in step with the increase in the potential demand for calcium arsenate and the bidding for white arsenic. Granted that the planter always should use calcium arsenate to raise a maximum crop when the boll weevil appears, yet naturally it has been easier for the South to foresee the big demand for this insecticide while cotton is going up than might have been the case should cotton have been going down.

COTTON PLANTERS WAKE UP.

One of the strongest features of the potential demand for calcium arsenate next year is found in the wider distribution of the product in all parts of the South this last season. A large percentage of the planters would not begin to dust their cotton as a result of the most intensive propaganda by county, State or Federal entomologists, newspaper advice or sales efforts of local supply men. These unprogressive planters waited until one of their more up-to-date neighbors successfully used the poison to fight the boll weevil. As the results of the dusting were so uniformly effective this last season many thousands of these doubting Thomases have been converted and are now proclaiming loudly that they, too, are going to buy poison and use it next year.

A remarkable feature of this demand for calcium arsenate so far ahead of the consuming season is the fact that very little additional evidence will be available until next season's "bugs" actually appear. The case for the demand is closed, so to speak, but the real verdict can not be rendered until the first generation of the progeny of the hibernating weevil appears on the scene next year.

That the South wants a tremendous quantity of calcium arsenate is amply sustained by the evidence. There is no doubt also that this poison can not be widely used if it gets too high in price, and it is equally true that the lower the selling price the more actual consumption will finally result. The demand is for more and cheaper white arsenic to produce the commercial poison. Meanwhile the curious phenomenon is observed of the actual buying demand increasing months ahead of the season while the price of arsenic advances with leaps and bounds. This, of course, has pulled the price of the finished product along with it. But the South's real need is for a much greater supply of calcium arsenate at a lower, not a higher, price level than last season.

ARSENIC CORNER A MYTH.

The cry of speculation and an arsenic corner has been raised, but there is no evidence of the latter and the real speculative element is to be found among those consumers of long standing who months ago foresaw at least what their minimum requirements would be but refused to take advantage of the market level at that time. They have simply speculated on the short side of a bull market.

That any one merchandising house or group has effected a corner on arsenic is unbelievable and the smelters actually have been advising newcomers in the industry to stay out, giving as the reason for this advice that they will not have enough arsenic for their regular customers let alone any new ones. That this condition is not confined to the United States is indicated by constant communication with the producers the world over.

The impartial observer is forced to admit that if the smelters were trying to force a situation they would feel that the more new consumers the better, and they would hold out all possible encouragement in order to induce the building of new plants to use arsenic. As a matter of fact, the smelters or by-product producers of arsenic have not had to force the present situation nor can they control it; a logical sequence of events has created it in spite of them and will continue to control its progress despite anything the smelters themselves may do. While here and there a dealer may have accumulated some little tonnage in arsenic futures these parcels exist largely on paper, as they are mainly contracts for shipments obtained through second or third hands from abroad. Until foreign arsenic is actually afloat or stored in this country it can not properly be said to be held for speculative purposes.

DIRECT PRODUCTION STARTED.

The direct production of white arsenic from mispickel ore to supplement the smelter's by-product, which has been predicted by the writer when arsenic should reach present price levels, is an accomplished fact. Among several such ventures contemplated or undertaken, the Toulon Smelting Co. in Nevada has its product on the market and promises expansion if prices continue at higher levels.

It must be remembered, however, that the direct production of arsenic does not mean cheap arsenic and is not going to supply the cotton planter with the low-priced calcium arsenate demanded in such enormous quantities for next season.

The only direct production of arsenic which might result in lower priced calcium arsenate for next season is that controlled by the Salt Lake Insecticide Co., in Utah, whose process is based on a unique deposit of arsenical ore already oxidized by nature, which permits the direct production of arsenates. However, the present tonnage program of this new company is too limited to make even a dent in the demand for calcium arsenate in the South, especially as the alfalfa weevil in the Rocky Mountain States will also require a large quantity of this same insecticide.

It is idle for anyone to contend that arsenic can not go any higher without killing the demand. A higher price will affect demand, but it can not kill it. Arsenic has gone to higher price levels heretofore, and the product has been used for its usual purposes in orchard and crop sprays, weed killers, and glass; and the highest level to which arsenic has been forced in recent years was in the spring of 1920, when the first real excitement about a short supply of calcium arsenate for the South was ever heard. As a matter of fact, a considerable quantity of the calcium arsenate which was sold at a low price to the State of Georgia this last season was made out of the highest priced arsenic sold in 1920. True, it was sold at a loss, but this illustrates the always present speculative nature of the arsenical spray industry as heretofore conducted based as it was principally on a small package business. The calcium arsenate demand on a tonnage basis is changing this largely by creating a dependable demand, and it will be changed altogether when a dependable supply is made available. This must be a supply which will adapt itself to the demand from year to year and month to month.

A cold-blooded analysis of this kind of a situation should convince anyone interested that granting there exists a shortage of a given quantity of arsenic to supply an already developed and potential demand, then some of the users are going to pay very high prices to cover their needs, and other users will not get sufficient to cover their needs.

It is an interesting picture with many phases possible between now and the time the last carload of next season's insecticides moves forward to the consumer's freight station. Meanwhile, the puzzled consumers of both the arsenic itself and of the finished insecticides can not be sure whether the part of wisdom is to plunge into the market and try and cover their maximum estimated requirements, or, in the apt words of Robert Louis Stevenson, to "await events."

CALCIUM ARSENATE FOR BOLL WEEVIL CONTROL AND THE ARSENIC SITUATION—THE INSECT INFESTATION OF THE COTTON FIELDS OF THE SOUTH HAS DEVELOPED A NEW BRANCH OF THE CHEMICAL INDUSTRIES, THE GROWTH OF WHICH WILL BE CONTROLLED BY MANY AND CONFLICTING FACTORS, INCLUDING THE AVAILABLE SUPPLY OF THE PRINCIPAL RAW MATERIAL.

(By Howard R. Ambruster.)

The insect pests as a group are said to be the most powerful enemy of mankind to-day, the hazard to humanity being the starvation of the peoples of the earth through reduction of crops. And that part of the chemical industry which is devoted to the production of compounds for the destruction of insect pests is believed by those engaged in it to be the most hazardous of any industry based on applied chemistry from every standpoint. Of the insect pests which have been identified and combated by the combined ingenuity of agriculturists, entomologists, and chemists none has attained more prominence or greater disrepute than the Mexican or cotton boll weevil (Anthonomus grandis), which, though it does not attack a food crop, is equally as destructive from an economic standpoint as any insect now known. In the battle for the control of the boll weevil in the cotton States of the Union, after many methods have been tried by Government officials and private investigators, the greatest encouragement that has resulted has been from the use of the compound known as calcium arsenate, $Ca_3(AsO_4)_2$. This product, made by the combination of arsenic acid and lime, is now manufactured in this country by about 15 or 20 of the companies making agricultural insecticides.

IS A SHORTAGE OF WHITE ARSENIC LIKELY?

The probable increase in demand for calcium arsenate for boll-weevil control has brought up the question as to whether the supply of commercial arsenic which is now available in this country and abroad is sufficient for any such quantity of calcium arsenate as some enthusiasts claim will be required annually within the next few years.

There are so many different factors, statistical and otherwise, which must be considered in reaching any conclusions on this subject that the latter are bound to be more or less controversial. But some phases of the situation are sufficiently defined to permit the contention that an acute shortage of arsenic probably will develop should the demand for calcium arsenate reach any sizable proportions. It must be acknowledged also that should the production of arsenic remain stationary, while the demand for calcium arsenate increases, the future program of the entomologists for the use of this spray for the cotton crop will be endangered.

That feature of the situation which is not appreciated by many of those directly interested in the industries affected is the fact that at present the world's available production of arsenic has no relation whatsoever to the market demand for the product. In this respect arsenic is somewhat unique among those products or commodities which may be described as basic raw materials. The white arsenic of commerce, or "arsenic oxide," is more correctly arsenic trioxide, As_2O_3 (also known as arsenious acid and arsenious anhydride). Practically all of this arsenic which is produced to-day is the by-product of the smelters, known first produced in the crude state at the smelters in what are known as bag houses attached to the furnace flues, and in more recent years by the Cottrell process by electrical precipitation of the arsenical or black dust from the smelter fumes.

As the attorney said in advising his client, the latter's case had a "nuisance value" which made it worth while; just so is the arsenic production regarded by metallurgists and smelters. It is a nuisance and has a nuisance value only. It is usually regarded as the most objectionable content of the precious and semiprecious ores, and any ore is selected for its low arsenic content in preference to another ore equally available and valuable but containing a higher percentage of arsenic. It will be conceded generally that if it had not been for the legislation directed against the smelters on account of the damage done by their fumes the use of arsenic as an agricultural spray material would have been seriously retarded from its inception for lack of sufficient supply of the raw material.

METHOD OF MANUFACTURE OF WHITE ARSENIC.

The crude arsenic as it is first collected varies in content all the way from 40 to 90 per cent As_2O_3, though the bulk of it approximates the higher level. To refine it to 99 per cent so that it is marketable as white arsenic the crude must be treated one or more times in volatilizing furnaces, by which process the other ingredients in the original crude product are separated and driven off with the exception of a minimum one-half to 1 per cent of impurities which are found in all commercial white arsenic. The crude product varies greatly in percentage and character of impurities which are at times extremely difficult to reduce, and the smelters therefore sell a certain percentage of their output as off-grade arsenic testing between 90 and 99 per cent.

This off-grade arsenic can be used for a part of the market requirements, but is unsuitable for the most important use, which is the manufacture of arsenic acid, or H_3AsO_4, the first step in the production of the important arsenical insecticides, lead and calcium arsenate.

It should be obvious, therefore, that in case of sudden increase of the demand for arsenic we shall have to look elsewhere than to the smelters, which produce the crude because they can not help themselves and refine it to make it marketable. The selling price has, therefore, no relation to the cost, but reflects in a way an open bidding by the consumers for the given tonnage of arsenic which is available each season.

The real cost of production comprises, first, the transportation of the crude to the refining plant, the revolatilizing cost, which varies according to the number of treatments required, grinding if the product has solidified in the flues, and packaging for the market. If as an accounting policy a part of the actual cost of smelting is allocated to the arsenic by-product as such, a considerable item may be added to the total cost of the refined white arsenic, and as the latter is now a standard market commodity of wide distribution it is of course an entirely logical policy to divide total operating costs among all of the various products of the smelters. But this point should be taken into consideration when considering the actual cost of production in relation to selling price.

The direct production of arsenic from some of the many low-grade iron ores (mispickel or arseno-pyrites) containing a fairly high percentage of arsenic has been commercially attempted many times, but never with sufficient success to insure a stable enterprise. Should the demand increase to such a point as to put the market on a permanent level, about double its present selling price (6 to 7 cents per pound), many of these developments could undoubtedly be firmly established, but any such increase in the selling price of arsenic would seriously affect the cost of manufacture of calcium arsenate as well as all other arsenical spray materials. Calcium arsenate for boll-weevil control must be sold at an even lower figure than it is at present to insure the utmost development of its use and value to the South.

On the other hand, spray materials for all other purposes and likewise all other uses for white arsenic, should necessity demand, can afford to pay increasing prices. This has been demonstrated in the recent past. So while it is a safe conclusion that the direct production of arsenic is a possible development at a higher price level for many other requirements it does not follow that the increased supply thus made available will contribute to the protection of the cotton crop. Aside from the various known methods of direct production of commercial arsenic from mispickel, the only other alternative is the possible development of the production of arsenical compounds for spray requirements direct from an arsenical ore.

USE OF ARSENATE ORE AS SHORT CUT.

A short cut to the final product precludes the process of extracting the arsenic as As_2O_3 and its subsequent oxidation to As_2O_5 and requires an ore in which the arsenic is present in its natural state as an arsenate instead of an arsenite. Deposits of the latter classification are found in many parts of the United States and elsewhere, but there is only one known deposit of the former in any appreciable quantity, and its development, though contemplated for some years, is still in the future as a commercial enterprise. A very considerable saving in final cost would result should it prove to be practicable to produce the commercial arsenical sprays such as calcium and lead arsenate direct from an arsenical ore and without the successive steps of refining white arsenic and converting the arsenic to acid before combining with the lime or lead.

EXTENT OF MARKET.

Of the 16,000 tons of arsenic which it is estimated is now consumed annually in the United States between 80 and 85 per cent is required by the insecticides and related industries such as the manufacture of weed killers and cattle dip. The bulk of the remainder of the total goes to the glass maker and for the manufacture of pharmaceuticals. Of the requirements for insecticides the largest part is converted into arsenic acid in about 25 different plants, mostly located in the East and Middle West. The majority of these are small and operate only a few months in the year. The same intermittent schedule of operation applies to the other plants, about 20 in number, including those which compound spray materials like Paris green direct from the white arsenic and those making weed killer and cattle dip. This irregularity of consumption has always brought the maximum demand within a few months for a basic raw material which is produced normally over the entire 12 months. The effect on the market price is obvious.

The other principal demand for arsenic, for the glass industry, is an all-the-year-round requirement, as is also the limited use of arsenic acid for the production of arsephenimine, or salvarsan, and small requirements such as for rat poisons, preserving hides, and the reduction of metallic arsenic. In times past arsenic was an important raw material for the dye industry, it being used in the production of fuchsine colors, but this method has been abandoned, and the industries enumerated above cover practically all the uses to which arsenic is now put.

Official figures indicate that the present production of by-product arsenic in the United States is at the rate of approximately 12,000 tons annually, and the remainder consumed here comes mainly from Canada and Mexico and from Germany, Japan, and Belgium.

The figures for the world's production of arsenic are exceedingly difficult to compile intelligently, as official statistics are irregular in classifying white arsenic with the crude, with ore content and with red arsenic, and with the metal itself.

From such figures as are available, however, it is evident that the annual production of commercial white arsenic from all world sources is not much in excess of 30,000 tons when the smelters are at normal production, and the total is probably less than that figure during the last two years of restricted metal output.

A large quantity of arsenic was imported into this country in years past from Spain and England, as well as from Germany, but more recently the English supply has been consumed at home or gone elsewhere, and unsettled conditions in Europe since the war have permitted the Japanese producers to make considerable inroads on the importations to America. In addition to the countries named, arsenic is also produced in South Africa, Australia, Greece, Portugal, and France, but in none of these countries is there any surplus for export to the United States.

The demand abroad is fairly stable, and the uses are similar to those in the United States, though a much larger proportion of the total is consumed by the industries other than the agricultural sprays. Of the latter broad classification the use of arsenic for cattle dips is in much greater proportion abroad than in the United States. In South Africa, South America, and Australia, where cattle raising is highly developed, the use of arsenic for dips preceded this use in the United States. All agricultural countries are using insect sprays in a greater degree than ever before, though nowhere to the same extent as the American farmer and fruit grower. The cotton planter abroad has his own weevil problems to help along the consumption of arsenic. There is no reason to believe, therefore, that a normal or steady increase in the world's consumption of arsenic will not keep pace with any possible normal increase in the by-product production of the smelters, and this leaves a margin of only a few thousand tons available at present prices for any abnormal increase in demand which the situation in the South may develop.

LOSS CAUSED BY WEEVIL.

Anything like an exact estimate of the actual loss caused by the boll weevil must be an exceedingly argumentative conclusion, based on unreliable premises. The shiftless planter blames on the weevil everything which he can not unload on the weather and the cotton traders; the intelligent cotton raiser in boll-weevil districts tries every precaution or remedy recommended by Government and State officials and admits that the weevil is at least largely responsible for the difference between a minimum and a maximum yield per acre. However, there can be no valid objection raised to the statement that the loss to the cotton grower due solely to the destruction by this one pest has already reached a total of hundreds of millions of dollars.

POOR QUALITY OF EARLY PRODUCT.

When the use of calcium arsenate was first advocated a few years ago a number of manufacturers began to produce it. The quality of this first material was so irregular, however, that a great deal of distrust was developed, and this retarded greatly the use of calcium arsenate. In some sections the cotton crop was seriously injured by the high percentage of soluble arsenic. The resulting prejudice is so strong that it is very doubtful if the Government can ever altogether overcome it. In addition to the poor quality of the product, the lack of knowledge of how to apply it also caused considerable damage to the cotton crops. It is perhaps not unnatural that the ignorant negro planters cultivating a few acres of cotton should be slow to learn the proper way to use the insecticide. Chemical manufacturers, however, have not the excuse of ignorance which the poor negro planter has, and it is therefore not unreasonable to expect that they should have known better. The manufacture of calcium arsenate, according to the chemical and physical specifications recommended by Doctor Coad, the Government entomologist, is not a difficult problem, but many producers have found its manufacture tricky and many tons of material have been condemned by Government agents.

PRESENT PRODUCTION AND FUTURE ESTIMATE.

The production of calcium arsenate thus far reached its high point in 1920, when upward of 5,000 tons was manufactured in the United States. Much of this was made too late for the 1920 season, and was carried over for 1921. On account of the condition of the South last year, the use of this spray did not develop as expected, and part of the 1920 production was carried in stock for the second year. In some quarters it is felt that the prospects this season are for an extremely heavy demand. The manufacturers, with last year's disastrous losses in view, have declined to pile up any new accumulation of stock ahead of the selling season, and it is entirely possible that the demand this season will exceed the available supply, though this is not likely, as there are large stocks in the southern warehouses of many companies.

Such manufacturing capacity as the plants now have, if operated continually through the year, would be more than ample for any possible demand at present. In the recent past, however, the erratic market records for the product itself and for white arsenic, the principal raw material, have made it unwise to anticipate the demand before it actually comes about.

It is improbable that this marketing condition will continue to prevail should the demand for calcium increase as expected. But the estimating of just what the possible or probable increase shall be has led some of the producers far astray in the past and will probably continue to do so for years to come. One enthusiast in the early years of the use of calcium arsenate based his calculations on the number of acres planted in cotton in the South and the maximum amount of calcium arsenate which could be used per acre. The result was startling and disastrous to those who were influenced by the figures. There was not enough manufacturing capacity available or enough white arsenic in sight to produce in a long period of years the amount of calcium arsenate which would be consumed in a single season on the basis of this simple calculation. Far below the figures of that brilliant statistician is a conservative estimate for the ultimate consumption of calcium arsenate. When that time will be reached and whether more effective means will be devised in the meantime only a reckless prophet would predict.

PROBLEM OF PRICE.

It would be somewhat desirable to get a rough estimate of just how the price of calcium arsenate affects the extent of its use. Official recommendations from the Department of Agriculture advise the use of about 5 pounds of arsenate of lime per acre and at least four applications during the season if the weevils are actually damaging the crop. Calcium arsenate now sells at from 9 to 12 cents a pound, which represents more than half of the total cost of dusting the cotton. Assuming that we dust four times in a season and use 5 pounds per acre at 10 cents per pound, the poison alone would cost $2. Adding $1.50 for application, the total expense per acre would be between $3 and $3.50. When it is realized that the average yield per acre is a third of a bale and that cotton has been selling for as low as $50 per bale, it is seen that the cost of applying the spray may represent a very considerable percentage of the selling price of the cotton. Dusting with arsenate of lime pays the farmer well if the control is successful and if the yield is a bale per acre or over, as it is in the heart of the Delta Cotton Belt. In the poorer sections, however, the situation is very different, and a planter who can not hope for over a quarter of a bale per acre would really just about as soon have the boll weevil eat his cotton as have his profits go to the manufacturer of calcium arsenate. If the price of arsenate of lime could be cut in half, this would very naturally extend its application to the poorer fields. Likewise, when cotton is selling at a high price, the cotton planter can afford to buy calcium arsenate, when otherwise he could not. It is not a simple problem, but one which involves considerable guesswork as well as experience in the yield of the particular land which the planter is cultivating.

Another handicap to the development of the use of calcium arsenate is the method of marketing the product, which has been both erratic and expensive. The product, being an agricultural spray material, has been handled along similar lines as other insecticides, the sale of which is largely a package proposition. Calcium arsenate is a spray material, but as a marketing proposition for boll-weevil control it must ultimately be sold on a tonnage basis and the margin for sales expense and middleman profit must be reduced to the minimum permitted for fertilizers and similar products. Time will bring about this change in the natural course of events, and the State of Georgia in a way has forced the issue this season by purchasing direct from a manufacturer and distributing to the planter at cost.

The production of calcium arsenate must be classified at present as an "infant industry," but it is evident to any careful investigator of all phases of the situation that a demand for a great many thousand tons will develop in the next few years if the price is low enough.

SUMMARY.

For every hundred pounds of calcium arsenate which is made, approximately 40 pounds of white arsenic is necessary. The supply of white arsenic annually consumed by this product thus far is not large, but it is an appreciable percentage of the total supply, which, it must be remembered, is a relatively stationary quantity. The use of calcium arsenate for the boll weevil will increase, but at a rate which can not be anticipated. It will depend upon the supply of arsenic which is available, upon the price of cotton, upon the yield of cotton per acre, and upon the price of calcium arsenate itself. In addition, other uses of calcium arsenate are increasing from year to year, notably those which have to do with truck-garden produce. Finally, calcium arsenate has been recently recommended as an effective means of preventing the alfalfa weevil from spreading. It is barely possible that this use may eclipse the use of calcium arsenate as a cotton insecticide. Other uses of white arsenic in various insecticides are also increasing, and these uses can easily outbid the cotton market for the available white arsenic. It will be seen, therefore, that many factors enter into the use of calcium arsenate as a cotton insecticide. Besides those already mentioned in this summary, we must refer to such things as the fashions for cotton fabric, the smelting of semiprecious metals, the education of the southern darky, and many others far afield from chemical engineering.

INVESTIGATION OF NICARAGUAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. LADD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 383), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas it has been charged on the floor of the United States Senate and substantiated in great detail by many newspaper reports that United States marines invaded Nicaragua in 1910, killed some 200 citizens of Nicaragua, took forcible possession of the capital of Nicaragua, and set up as nominal President of that country an employee of an American corporation who could not have remained for 48 hours without the backing of American marines; and

Whereas while the United States marines still remained in control of the Nicaraguan capital and United States naval officers virtually dictated the policies of its nominal "President," the United States Government consummated an important treaty with Nicaragua; and

Whereas the officer in charge of the United States military forces in control of Nicaragua admitted under oath before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations that 80 per cent of the Nicaraguan people opposed the Government we set up arbitrarily and maintained by force and would have refused to ratify the treaty which was forced upon a nonrepresentative Government under our military domination; and

Whereas it is currently reported that an attempt to enforce the terms of this treaty obtained under these questionable circumstances has created disputes between the United States Government and certain other Central American nations involving territorial grants for a naval base and commercial concessions; and

Whereas the nominal Government of Nicaragua, still under the domination of United States naval forces, refused to abide by the provisions of an arbitral ruling handed down by the International Court of Justice at Cartego, which court was instituted at the request of the United States Government, which also guaranteed to enforce its rulings; and

Whereas it is reported in the public press that with the aid of United States military forces democracy in Nicaragua is under the heel of a very small minority, which have seized political power and exploit the economic resources of the country under the direction of certain New York commercial firms; and

Whereas in support of this claim it is an admitted fact that Diego M. Chamorro is President of Nicaragua; Rosendo Chamorro, Home Secretary; Salvador Chamorro, president of Congress; Gustave A. Arguello, brother-in-law of President Chamorro, Secretary of the Treasury; Augustin Chamorro, Finance Advisor; Miguel Vigil, son-in-law of the President, Secretary to the President; Filadelfo Chamorro, military commander at the capital; Frutos Chamorro, commandant of the principal fortress at the capital; Leandro Chamorro, commandant at Corinto, principal port of Nicaragua; Charles Chamorro, military commander of the northern zone; Dionisio Chamorro, collector of customs; Octavia Chamorro, congressman; Clarence Bergheim, son-in-law of President Chamorro, military surgeon; Augustin Bolanos Chamorro, Nicaraguan consul at New Orleans; Fernando Chamorro, Nicaraguan consul at San Francisco; Pedro J. Chamorro, consul at London; Carlos Chamorro Bernard, diplomatic representative at El Salvador; Emillio Chamorro, Nicaraguan minister to Washington; Octaviano Cesar, brother-in-law of President Chamorro, financial agent; and Diego M. Chamorro, jr., attaché at the Washington Legation; and

Whereas resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of the people of Managua (Nicaragua) have publicly accused Dr. Maximo H. Zepeda, delegate to the Central American Peace Conference, now in session in Washington, D. C., of being "a traitor to his country," and "a lawyer of Wall Street bankers against the legitimate interests of his country"; and

Whereas the same mass meeting and other mass meetings and editorials in the Nicaraguan press have demanded the withdrawal of United States marines so that the Nicaraguan people can restore a representative government; and

Whereas it has been publicly charged by a United States Senator through the press that "The Nicaraguan people have been wholly deprived of any semblance of self-government and their national resources are being exploited in shameless fashion by American corporations under the protection of United States marines"; and

Whereas military occupation of Nicaragua, which has now continued for 12 years, has been declared by a United States Senator who is a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to be "in contravention of international decency and in opposition to the legal rights and material interests of the Nicaraguan people"; and

Whereas no state of war exists between the United States and Nicaragua which would justify the permanent quartering of our military forces upon the territory of a friendly neighboring nation; and

Whereas the executive department has no constitutional powers to maintain such invasion without the consent of Congress; and

Whereas such permanent occupation conflicts with the traditional policy of the United States and is inimical to the continuance of friendly and harmonious relations with our Central American Republics: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to hold hearings to ascertain the true state of affairs in Nicaragua; the facts concerning our original occupancy of that country; the reasons why United States military forces are still quartered there; the connection between certain New York commercial houses and the Chamorro-clan Government of Nicaragua; and the diplomatic conversations which preceded and followed the so-called Nicaraguan Government's repudiation of the decree of the International Court of Justice in disputed matters which concerned Costa Rica, Salvador, and Honduras, as well as the United States Government; and to this end that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or its subcommittee be empowered to subpœna witnesses and documents which will throw light upon these matters; that the committee be empowered to employ agents, attorneys, stenographers, and to hold hearings in Washington or elsewhere as they may find necessary, and that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations shall within six months report its findings and recommendations to the Senate or to the President of the Senate for the use of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 3 to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and concurring therein; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 and concurring therein with an amendment as follows: In lines 13 and 14 of the matter inserted by said amendment, strike out the words "or the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator state the nature and effect of the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill as it passed the Senate provided that a certain certification should be made by the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Labor. It refers, however, only to proceedings of the Department of Commerce, so that the amendment strikes out "or the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, at the conclusion of yesterday's session a question was raised by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the effect that the shipping bill would not be of any aid to the coastwise shipping. That is the way I understand it. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Washington if that is correct?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill does not affect the coastwise shipping.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I have some information with reference to the apple situation which I desire to place in the RECORD this morning. On the 17th instant I sent the following telegram to the president of the Farmers' Union, Washington State:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1922.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS,
President Farmers' Union, Spokane, Wash.:

In the Senate we are trying to substitute consideration of the Norris marketing bill for the ship subsidy bill. Our purpose is to defeat the subsidy and provide immediate relief for marketing of farm products by governmental action. I am also informed you are destroying one-third of your apple crop because price will not pay freight, and that you will dump 10,000 carloads in the Columbia River. Wire me the facts and also your advice as to action upon the subsidy and marketing bills.

SMITH W. BROOKHART.

To that telegram I received this morning the following reply:

SPOKANE, WASH., December 19.

Senator SMITH W. BROOKHART,
Washington, D. C.:

You are correctly advised on apples. Same conditions true of potatoes, tomatoes, and other seasonable products. Farmers favor any legislation that will provide immediate relief. All opposed to ship subsidy. Letter follows.

J. Q. ADAMS.

Mr. Adams, as I said, is the president of the Farmers' Union of the State of Washington.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how many members there are in that union?

Mr. BROOKHART. It has a large and active membership in the State. I could not give the exact number, though I know it is a large and active organization. There are over 1,000,000 members in the United States.

Mr. President, it would seem to me that the voice of the people in the far West is just like it is in the Middle West and, for that matter, in the East. I think the common people of the country everywhere are against this special legislation. I hope the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] can hear something in that voice. He himself read some letters at the beginning of the consideration of the bill which were of the same tenor as the telegram I have read. I believe his own State is just like the State of Iowa when its wishes in this matter are thoroughly understood.

At this time I had expected to put into the RECORD certain data in reference to cooperative marketing as the solution for this situation. I have not, however, collected that material completely, and so I shall reserve it until such time as I can have it completed for use on a future occasion. With that statement I will now yield the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], whom I do not now see, had a small matter which he desired to bring up, and I told him I would have no objection if it took no appreciable length of time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Rhode Island has submitted the matter to the Senator from Mississippi, who wished to look over it for a little while.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. Mr. President, the pending motion, if it should prevail, would have the effect of displacing the so-called ship subsidy bill and bring immediately for consideration before the Senate the bill named in the motion. That bill has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and has behind it the unanimous report of that committee. The bill is not offered as a remedy to cure all the evils afflicting this country or even those afflicting agriculture.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator state that the bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had the unanimous support of the whole committee?

Mr. NORRIS. It had the unanimous support of all Senators who were present, and there were many more present than a quorum, there being only one or two absentees. The bill was ordered reported on a roll call from the committee without a dissenting vote.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand the Senator to assert that every member of the committee favored the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. I think it would be proper for me to state that at the time the bill was reported out certain members of the committee, including myself, reserved the right to oppose the bill or any part of it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, both the Senators who have just spoken anticipated me, for both of them have made statements that I would have made had I not been interrupted. There were only two Senators, however, who expressed the opinion that they might oppose the bill. Others stated that they would favor certain amendments and one Senator in addition stated that he expected to offer certain amendments to the bill should it be taken up for consideration. I am not trying, either directly or indirectly, to bind any member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I think, however, that the Senate ought to know that the motion to report the bill with the amendments which we have suggested received the unanimous vote of every member of the committee who was present; and nearly all of the members of the committee were present.

As I have stated, Mr. President, the pending bill is not presented as a remedy for all the evils that affect even agriculture. We do think, however, that it will meet one very important contingency. It is, we must concede to begin with, a remedy that is new. It provides a new method of attempting to regulate trusts and combinations that are dealing in food products. It proposes to do that by setting up a governmental corporation with a capital stock of $100,000,000, to be contributed entirely by the Government of the United States, with the right to issue bonds not exceeding at any one time five times the amount of the paid-in capital, whatever that may be. The corporation proposed to be created by the bill will be handled by a board of directors consisting of three men, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, holding office under a term of eight years; but the first appointments are made one for four years, one for six years, and one for eight years, and thereafter for eight years as vacancies may occur. The corporation will have power (1) to build, buy, lease, and operate elevators and storage warehouses; (2) to buy agricultural products from any person, firm, or corporation, or cooperative organization of producers within the United States, and to sell such products to any person, firm, or corporation, or cooperative organization of consumers within the United States, and to any person, firm, or corporation, or cooperative organization of consumers, or to any government or subdivision of government without the United States; (3) to act as agent of any person, firm, or corporation, or cooperative organization producing or dealing in agricultural products, either in their natural or prepared state, within the United States, in the sale of such products either within or without the United States; and (4) to make advances for the purpose of assisting any person, firm, or corporation, or cooperative organization in financing the sale, or exportation and sale, of such agricultural products, but in no case shall any of the money so advanced be expended without the United States.

There are some provisions of the bill in regard to the net earnings of the corporation. It is provided:

Sec. 11. That the net earnings of the corporation not required for its operation shall be accumulated as a reserve until such time as such reserve amounts to $100,000,000; and thereafter all the net earnings of the corporation not required for the redemption of any of its bonds shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States until such payments equal the amount advanced by the United States for the capital stock of the corporation.

There are also certain other provisions, which ought now probably to be stated, in regard to the taxation. The bonds to be issued by the proposed corporation "shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority, except," as follows:

(a) Estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) graduated additional income taxes, commonly known as surtaxes, and excess-profits and war-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, upon the income or profits of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations. The interest on an amount of such bonds the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000 owned by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, shall be exempt from the taxes referred to in clause (b).

The franchise of the corporation is not taxable; neither is the surplus, nor its reserve, nor its capital stock; but any real estate owned by it is subject, the same as other real estate, to taxation by the taxing authorities. The provisions in regard to exemption from taxation, as I remember now, are copied verbatim from the War Finance Corporation act, with the exception, perhaps, of one provision which is copied from one of the Liberty loan acts, exempting the income of $5,000 worth of bonds owned by any one person.

Then, Mr. President, there are various provisions in the bill of a criminal nature imposing punishment for violation of the various provisions of the act.

The bill contains one other proposition that I deem of considerable importance. It provides—and this has some relation to the ship subsidy bill that we are seeking to displace—that to this corporation shall be turned over by the Government any ship or ships that it owns, not chartered to any other corporation or not in use, with the provision that this corporation can use such ships as may be necessary in transporting the products it handles from this country to foreign ports without any compensation for the use of those ships except to keep them in repair and pay the expense of operation, and that in case of war, or when the President at any time believes there is danger of war, he shall notify the corporation, and the ships shall be immediately turned back without the payment of any money. This will enable the Government to recuperate its merchant marine without any expense whatever.

As to the intention of the bill, I quote from its terms as follows:

It is hereby declared to be the object and purpose of this act to provide a market for the sale of agricultural products, and to eliminate as far as possible the commissions and charges that are exacted upon agricultural products from the time such products leave the producer until the same reaches the consumer, and to thereby increase the price which the producer receives and decrease the price which the consumer pays.

Mr. President, it will be seen from the brief outline of the bill which I have presented that it seeks to set up a gigantic middleman who shall stand between the producers and the consumers with the object of benefiting both. As I said at the beginning, it is a new remedy; so far as I know nothing of the kind has been attempted in this country in the regulation of trusts and combinations. We have had, Mr. President, the regulation of railroads and trusts and combinations for a great many years; we have paid enough money in the effort to regulate the railroads to buy a large portion of them; and I think every student of the subject must admit that the undertaking has proven to be a failure. We have been regulating trusts and combinations for many years; but to-day we have more trusts and combinations exacting toll for the products of the farm as they travel from the producer to the consumer than ever before in the history of the United States. So we are confronted, I think, with a condition that is abnormal, a condition that so far is unmastered, a condition that everybody admits ought to be changed and remedied; but the laws up to this time, although enacted with the best of intentions, have not brought about the remedy.

The producer is producing at a loss, while the consumer is paying exorbitant prices; the farmer gets too little; the consumer pays too much. As a remedy the bill proposes to set up a corporation, and our idea was to free that corporation of shackles of all kinds and to make it as free within its field as outlined as a natural person would be under existing conditions.

With its capital, with its ability to buy, to store, to loan, and to sell even on time, it seemed to me and it seemed, I think, to those who favored this character of legislation that if we shall pass this kind of an act we will have put into competition with the trusts that are now engaged in various kinds of businesses a gigantic person, with an enormous capital, having for its object justice instead of profit, having for its object the alleviation of the difficulty that confronts the producer and likewise confronts the consumer.

Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture has not jurisdiction to cover all the evils that exist to-day and that confront agriculture. There is no intention in proposing this bill to interfere in any way with any proposition that may come from the Banking and Currency Committee that will provide for rural credits. I realize that that is an important kind of legislation. I favor it just as much as does anyone else, and we are not offering this bill to take the place of any such legislation. It ought to go hand in hand with it. Those who favor this legislation will be found doing their best to bring about the passage at this session of Congress of proper rural credits legislation. We realize, too, that there is another very important difficulty that confronts all the people of the United States, and that is the freight proposition, the railroad question. The Committee on Agriculture has no jurisdiction to solve that. After all, Mr. President, a railroad is nothing more nor less than a gigantic middleman. It makes its money, all of it, upon the products as they travel from the producer to the consumer. Of itself, my personal opinion is that it presents the most important single question among the difficulties to-day in our cost of living and in the trouble that now afflicts the producers and agriculturists of this country.

So, Mr. President, I do not want to convey the idea that we are offering this legislation as a cure-all for the difficulties that exist, nor that we are offering it to take the place of any legislation that will bring about cheaper freight rates, or any legislation that will bring about a proper law providing for rural credits; but I want to pause here to call the attention of the Senate to one viewpoint that I think we ought to have in mind on rural credit legislation.

There is such a thing as credit being injurious. However low we fix the rate to the farmer, if we offer to loan him money on the products that he has produced, unless there is reasonable ground to believe that at the maturity of the loan he will be able to sell his product at an advanced price, enough to pay the interest and give him a profit, such a loan is an injury rather than a benefit. The time will come, the time must come, when there must be liquidation. No matter how low the rate of interest, no matter how long the money may be loaned, the loan is going to mature some time; and if the product in the meantime is not enhanced in value and the market conditions are just the same as, or practically no better, than they were when the loan was made, it spells bankruptcy in the end. However low the rate of interest may be, in time it will eat up the product and bring ruin instead of prosperity.

I do not want anyone to get the idea now, because I have said that, that I am opposed to rural credit legislation or that this bill is offered as a remedy on that score. We believe that one of the difficulties in the cost of living, and one of the serious questions presented by the producer on the farm, is that the marketing conditions are so unfavorable. There must be a place to sell the product, and as it travels from the man who produces it to the man who consumes it it must not be eaten up by profits of the middleman.

If we remedied the railroad difficulty, and if we provided proper rural credit facilities for the producer, there would still be the enormous expense connected with the sale of the farmer's products, all of which must be paid by the consumer or lost by the producer. The railroad question is only one of those, as I said awhile ago; and in all the figures that are given about the cost, freight is an important item, but not the only one.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator whether we are taking any steps to improve the transportation facilities in this country?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so, and I think we ought to; but as we look at it the Agricultural Committee is helpless to do that.

Mr. DIAL. Only yesterday I received a communication stating that one of the largest coal mines in the South was shut down four days last week because it did not have a single car; so it seems to me that we should put some of our energies toward trying to improve the transportation facilities in this country.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I think, Mr. President, as I said before, that it is the most important one item; it is the largest item of all, I think, on most commodities—not all of them.

The people of the country do not realize that every dollar charged for freight must be paid by the consumer in the end. They do not realize that every manipulation that has ever taken place from the beginning of railroad history down to the present hour by which water has been converted into gold has been done at the expense of all the people of the United States; that a freight rate is paid upon everything that is transported, in the same way and to the same extent that we pay our taxes to the tax collector. Every particle of water in the railroads, variously estimated to amount to from seven to ten billions of dollars, that has been made of value—and practically all of it has—has been made so by the toiling masses of the American people. We have paid for it just as completely and just as fully as though it were an itemized statement on our tax receipts when we pay our taxes. If the people realized that, if they really understood that after all freight charges are a part of the cost of living, that they are taxation under another guise—as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] said, in reality taxation without representation—they never would stand for the gigantic manipulations that have taken place in the 50 or 75 years in our railroad system.

I was reading the other night a history of the New York Central road, and it is a story that applies to most of the big railroad systems. It showed how in the beginning here was a little road, and here was another little road. After a while they met in the same town and terminated there. The owners of one road and the owners of the other road got together and combined them. That was a good thing, I think. I am not objecting to that. They made it one continuous road. They added the value of this road to the value of that road, and then they added about a third in capital stock that was issued without any consideration whatever. Over here was another little road. Here was another little one. They were put together in the same way, and so on, until, gathered together, they constituted the great system of railroads known as the New York Central; and every time they were put together, without any exception, a whole lot of water was poured into the capital stock, and by the operation of the printing presses the American people were saddled with a debt upon which we have been paying interest ever since. We are not only paying interest on it but by our toil, by our money, by our labor we have turned all that water into gold, not for our benefit, not for our financial advancement, but for the benefit of the fellows who are doing the manipulating.

That would not be so bad if it were not for the fact that after it has been done, after we have toiled, paid rates that made water good, and made it 100 per cent or better on the stock market, we have then been saddled with a freight rate sufficient to bring an income for a reasonable rate upon all that capital stock that we ourselves made by our own toil. So that the people have not only been confronted with capitalization without any value being put in, but after they have done that, after their own money, their own toil and labor have been spent to make it good, they have then been penalized for their own generosity by being compelled through all time to pay a freight rate that would make that kind of business profitable.

Mr. President, the continual pyramiding that has been going on from time to time in this way with our railroad systems has finally reached a climax, and rates have gone so high that, in my judgment, we must either by some means or other reduce freight rates or we must reconstruct our civilization on a new basis, using the railroads of the country as a basis for our operations.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. I am very much interested in what the Senator says. Has the Senator any remedy to suggest for the condition of which he speaks?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to be led into a discussion of that subject.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not want to anticipate the Senator, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not expect to discuss a remedy for the railroad situation. I realize that it is not in the bill that I am trying to get up and therefore I did not intend to discuss it at all; but it has been brought out by a question. The question of the Senator will lead me still further into the side field.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to do that; but, since the Senator has discussed the matter—and I am glad to know that he is interested in it—here is the proposition that disturbs me: It is true that there is no defense for the fantastic financial operations of which many carriers were guilty in years past, resulting in the watering of stocks and the issuing of fictitious securities in vast amounts; but, quoting from memory now, I think it was in the fiscal year 1920–21 that we carried more freight than in any preceding year, and we collected in excess of $500,000,000 more money for carrying that freight. Yet the earnings of the roads were less than 4 per cent, below 3 per cent, on the capitalization. The operating cost mounted from a little over 60 per cent to nearly 90 per cent of the total cost. So the trouble that confronts us now is not the question of the capitalization of the roads so much as the fact that the cost of operating these systems, even if nothing were paid upon the securities at all, is practically prohibitive in a great many cases.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I said to the Senator before, I do not want to go into that question at much length, because it is not before the Senate. I have some definite ideas about it. I think the capitalization would not be the only question involved in the railroad situation. I do not mean to suggest that. It would be one of the very important things. To my mind, just briefly, without intending to go into a detailed discussion, the capitalization of the railroads must come down. In my judgment, they will and can be managed more efficiently than they are being managed now. Instead of there being a great many railroads they ought to be combined into one system, or at least into a less number of systems. While some road is failing, some other road is making an exorbitant profit.

While the Senator could, no doubt, give illustrations of what he has just said, I can, to counteract that, state that the great Burlington system for years paid to its stockholders dividends running all the way from 8 per cent to 25 per cent; that during that time they accumulated a surplus of $60,000,000; that within the last year or two they have been allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to issue stock dividends amounting to $60,000,000 on that surplus. Whose surplus was that? Who paid for the surplus? It was paid for out of the cost of living of the American people. Every man who wears a coat or a hat or eats food or rides in an automobile or a horse-drawn carriage has contributed his share to that surplus. During all the time it was accumulating they were making profits that were beyond what they ought to have been allowed to make.

The surplus, instead of being issued in the way of new stock, ought to have been used for the purpose of retiring either stock or bonds, and thus lessening what the people would have to pay in the future instead of increasing it. So in that case the people have paid more freight than they should have paid, amounting on one road to $60,000,000, and now for all time we and posterity have to pay higher freight still, in order to bring an income on that $60,000,000, which in reality was our money in the very beginning.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. At one time I was led to hope, with some degree of probability that the hope was well founded, that the consolidation of railroad systems would remedy this evil, and I voted, with much reluctance, notwithstanding its multiplied iniquities, for the transportation act of 1920, which provided for that very thing. I have since come to the conclusion that the remedy suggested by the Senator and the remedy contained in the transportation act of 1920 is worse than the disease.

As the Senator has pointed out, the trouble with us now is that this very consolidation about which he talks prevents cheap rates anywhere.

The Senator knows of the reckless building of railroads, the financing of all sorts of lines, the practice that existed for so many years of going out and bonding a road for what it was worth, and arranging so that whenever any stock was bought the return was velvet to the fellows who sold it; the bonds paid for the roads. The conversion of stocks into bonds, and the like, has curtailed that evil, and now you have roads recklessly or dishonestly financed, illy located, which can never be operated at a profit at anything like their capitalization, and on the other hand roads which were sanely financed, which were laid along the lines of industrial needs and which make great profits. Whenever you attempt to distribute that profit, and carry these lame ducks, you consume the profit of all. The only way I see to lower freight rates is to enable the roads which can operate at a lower cost to operate in that way, and not to force them to turn over their earnings to some other allied road, or some road artificially consolidated with another, which never was a financial success, and never will be.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with the latter part of the Senator's statement I most fully agree. I know there are a good many evils in the act the Senator mentions. So many there were that I voted against it when it passed the Senate. I am not doubting but that many, many Senators voted for it with the best of intentions, and they may still think that it was proper. Some, like the Senator from Kentucky, have reached the conclusion that it was a mistake, as I construe his remarks.

I would not combine these railroads and take in what the Senator describes as lame ducks at stock and bond face value. If men get together and build a railroad where there should not be any, and lose money by it, they ought to be in the same predicament I would be in if I go into the manufacturing business where there is no demand for the product I turn out and fail. I would have simply lost out as a business proposition. There is no reason why all the taxpayers of America should make good the mistakes of financiers who build railroads where there should not be any, and those railroads ought not to be permitted to charge rates on their excessive valuations. If they can not maintain themselves on what would be a fair rate, then they ought to fail, as any other business ought to fail under such circumstances. They have made a mistake. There are some roads in that condition, I have no doubt, although I do not claim to be an expert.

I want to say briefly, in passing, because the Senator asked me the question, if I had my way I would meet the railroad question along the same lines I have attempted to meet this question. I would organize a governmental corporation and take over some of the railroads of the country, perhaps not all, but many of them, at what they are worth and operate them for service instead of profit. Railroad transportation is as common as the water we drink. It enters into everything we eat, or wear, or handle, either for necessity of for pleasure. We ought to get the speculation out of the railroads and whatever squeezing process is necessary in order to do that ought to be administered. A corporation operating these railroads along the lines I have suggested would bring every railroad down to a fair, honest system of profit, and would squeeze out the water.

Going back directly to the subject again, I have outlined three difficulties which, in my judgment, confront the farmer and confront the consumer; and, after all, I am just as anxious to protect the rights of the consumer as I am to protect the rights of the producer. I am not aware of having any prejudice or bias in favor of the producer as against the consumer. According to my judgment, if we are perfectly honest and meet the question fairly we will find that what is fair to the producer will be fair to the consumer. I think their interests are identical. The consumer can not afford to want the producer to produce at a loss, because in the end it would mean the ruin of the consumer as well as of the producer. The producer can not expect to produce at an unreasonable profit, because thereby he loses to a great extent his best customer, who is not able to consume so much. So if the producer makes a fair profit the consumer ought to rejoice. If the consumer is not compelled to pay an exorbitant price, the producer ought to rejoice. This bill is intended to protect one as well as the other.

Going, now, to the condition of agriculture, we have heard a great deal about it in the committee, and we have heard a great deal about it here. We have read a great deal about it in the newspapers. Every honest man who has fairly considered the subject or investigated it, without bias and without prejudice, must reach the conclusion that the conditions surrounding and overshadowing the producers of our country are horrible; they are outrageous.

I listened to a description of the condition of agriculture before the committee until I wanted to escape from the committee room. It had the effect of depressing anyone who was listening to it all. It is almost beyond imagination that in our great West, Middle West, and Northwest the producers of the country are brought down almost to a state of poverty. Most of the men who appeared were so-called country bankers, and we had testimony from the bankers of North Dakota, where the farmers produced a crop this year.

The bankers are interested in this matter because the ruination of the producer means the ruin of the country banker. They are in the same boat. If we help the producer and enable him to pay what he owes the country banker, we have helped the banker.

We were confronted with advertisements of tax sales. Newspapers were presented with 9 or 10 pages filled with notices of farms for sale in one county under the tax laws of the State, every one of them mortgaged. As a rule, the personal property was mortgaged, the farmer being unable to pay even the taxes, being unable to pay the interest on his farm mortgage, being unable to pay the note which he owed the local banker, or even the interest on it, and all that after he had produced a crop beyond the normal, a crop which everybody concedes cost him more to produce than he could get for it. The farmer has been confronted with the fact that everything that he has to buy must be bought at prices fixed by trusts and combinations which made the prices so high that it meant ruin to buy, and it was ruin if he did not buy. That is the condition of the farmer.

We were told that in one county, for instance, 19 men had committed suicide within the last few months. Eighteen of them were farmers who had become insane, living and toiling for years from early morn until late at night. They had some failures a few years before, but they kept on remortgaging until they had mortgaged everything they had, and it was all done with the hope that some time they would produce a crop; and year after year they kept on, and this year they produced a crop, but found that when the crop was produced they were worse off than when they did not produce any. Men were unable to care for their families, seeing their little homes disappear under foreclosure proceedings, becoming insane, and being taken to asylums for the insane. As I said, 18 committed suicide in one county.

What is the remedy? In my judgment, if the farmer's crop thus produced could have reached the consumer without an unreasonable premium being exacted from all kinds of people, including the railroads, he would have made some money; he would have been able to pay some of his debts and he would have kept on farming next year. As it is, he can not do it. Something ought to be done to relieve him. He is brought into that condition through no fault of his own. We have invited men to go west and open up the great prairies of the country and irrigate the lands on the coast and in the intermountain region.

I have here a little notation that I made in conversation with a man who came here from an irrigated section in Nebraska where they raise immense crops. He is a banker there, and he told me just yesterday that in his vicinity one man had produced 20,000 bushels of potatoes. The man made a mistake in raising potatoes this year. He said that if that man had produced sugar beets, while he would not have made much, he would have made something, but he produced 20,000 bushels of potatoes. He did not have money enough to harvest them. He had to borrow some money. The man who was talking with me was one of the officers of the bank in the locality that loaned him $2,000 on his potatoes. They were harvested carefully and stored in a cave, where they are now. He is unable to sell them for a price that will pay anything like the cost of production.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The potato crop is always uncertain. One year it is a big crop and the next year it is a little crop. The famines in Ireland are attributed to the capriciousness of this crop. Where there is a full crop it will produce more of essential foodstuffs to the acre than any other crop known, and the next year it is liable to be a complete failure. In Germany they have equalized this seasonal change by turning potatoes into alcohol, which is under normal circumstances just as salable a commodity as gasoline.

Does not the Senator think that a sane regulation of the manufacture and sale of alcohol would relieve the farmer very much and find a market for the potatoes? Millions of gallons of that alcohol could be used in coloring everything we use, in driving automobiles, in making automobile tires, in 500 different essential articles, but that business is practically at a standstill on account of the arbitrary, indefensible, and absurd regulations of the Government in controlling the manufacture and sale of alcohol.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me say in answer to the Senator that no legislation would cure all the evils. The market for potatoes, like the market for other products, will go up and down. There is no question about that. Neither is there any question but what the charges for potatoes, as they travel from the man who produces them to the man who consumes them, are many, many times the original cost of the potatoes. What would we have to pay for potatoes in Washington if we bought them now?

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will permit me further to interrupt him, the German farmer takes a load of potatoes and hauls it to a near-by distillery. The starch in the potatoes is converted into alcohol there. The other food values in the potatoes are brought right back and fed to his stock. There is no transportation problem except for the alcohol itself. The potatoes grown in this country and referred to by the Senator could be thus converted. Every potato in the United States could be converted to-morrow into salable alcohol and we would have very little transportation to pay if the Government would act with some common sense.

Mr. NORRIS. That might help it to some extent. I am not claiming that it would not. In fact, I think it would help; but it would not be the only remedy. We ought to make it possible for food products in America to travel from producer to consumer without such an exorbitant cost.

One of the men testifying a year or so ago before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was the representative of a cooperative association of fruit raisers in California. They produced various kinds of fruits. He told the committee that they had on hand at one time a vast quantity of some certain kind of fruit—I have forgotten just what it was. He was the manager of that organization; he was the only man in the corporation who was not an actual producer. He was hired and paid a salary to handle the sales of the producing corporation. He said that a year or so before he was testifying he found himself confronted with the fact that of one of the products he had a very large supply in the warehouses. He was not able to sell it. They sold only to wholesalers and jobbers. They would not dare to sell to retailers, and his ordinary customers would not take the product because it was not selling. So he got out some circular letters and sent them to the retail trade, a great many hundred of them, and put a price on the product. Immediately the orders commenced to come in and the product commenced to move. But about that time he commenced to get letters from the jobbers and wholesalers, and he called the attention of the committee to one letter in particular from a jobber, which said:

> We have recently ordered several carloads of some other kind of fruit from you. This is to notify you that that order is canceled and that we will never do any more business with you, because we have learned that you are trying to sell to retailers.

He was asked what he did. He said that he apologized, that he wrote to the wholesalers and the retailers who protested, and said if they would forgive him he would never do it again. He quit that kind of business; he said he had to do it or go out of business altogether. There were several middlemen whose pockets had to be lined at the expense of the producer and the consumer. This man, of course, might have made complaints under the antitrust law, but if he had had any experience in going through our courts—or even if he had not, he probably could see from observation what would happen—he would realize that he would have been out of business long before the suit had traveled its weary way and been finally determined by the Supreme Court of the United States.

He said one of the things they produced in large quantities and handled and shipped was a certain kind of grape of exceptionally fine quality. He told us what the fruit producers received for those grapes that year. I think it was a fraction either over or under 2 cents a pound. When he got here to Washington he went down to the market, where even the retailers buy their fruit here, and bought some of the same grapes, some of his own grapes, and he had to pay something over 25 cents a pound. He knew exactly what the freight was. He was an expert. It was a very small portion of the price, although unreasonably high. The balance was taken up in commissions to the middlemen.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly; if I can do so.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did he buy those grapes on the public market?

Mr. NORRIS. That is my recollection.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The public market and public regulations do not seem to have worked very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course they do not work very well. There were too many middlemen between the producer and the man who sold it on the public market.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is true on the public market when one buys direct from the farmer.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; probably that is true.

Mr. STANLEY. It was some time ago that he had the trouble about the grapes?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Several years ago?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STANLEY. Five or six years ago they were selling raisin grapes in Fresno County for 1 cent a pound. After the enactment of certain legislation here a great farm organizer of the West stated that those grapes went up to 30 cents a pound. Grapes went up within six months on the Great Lakes from $10 or $20 a ton to $120 a ton. The difference is this: The home brewer is utilizing the grapes to make beverage alcohol, and we can not utilize potatoes to make industrial alcohol.

Mr. NORRIS. I have a letter on my desk written from Hyannus, a point in the western part of Nebraska, where a man in the general merchandise business bought a carload of apples which were shipped to him from Idaho. The freight on the carload of apples from Idaho to Hyannus, Nebr., was $508.53. It does not take an expert to tell that there is something wrong with that.

While the producer is laboring under these difficulties and while the consumer is paying exorbitant prices on account of the taxation of the product as it travels from one to the other, what is the condition of big business? How is big business getting along? The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] yesterday put some figures in the RECORD, and I want to call attention to some of them. The first is a quotation from the Wall Street Journal of December 5, 1922. The heading is:

1922 stock dividends—

That means the escaping of taxation—

1922 stock dividends now over $1,000,000,000. Standard Oil Co. declared over three-fourths of this enormous record-breaking figure.

Then it gives a list of many of them, and has this to say:

More stock dividends to come.

They are not through:

There are also proposed capital increases waiting approval of stockholders. For example, Prairie Pipe Line's proposed stock dividend will be $54,000,000 and that of Prairie Oil & Gas $36,000,000. If these and others contemplated go through, they will aggregate $500,000,000, which would bring the year's total above $1,500,000,000.

It is interesting to notice some of the dividends. I shall mention only a few. There was the American Machine Foundry Co., which declared a stock dividend of 200 per cent, amounting to $4,000,000. The Atlantic Refining Co. declared a stock dividend of 900 per cent, amounting to $45,000,000. The Bigelow-Hartford Carpet Co. declared a dividend of 100 per cent, and the Great Northern Paper Co. 200 per cent. The National Biscuit Co. declared a stock dividend of 75 per cent, amounting to $21,920,000. The Standard Oil declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent; the Standard Oil of Kentucky 33⅓ per cent; the Standard Oil of New Jersey 400 per cent, amounting to $393,353,200.

Then here is a news article put in the RECORD by the same Senator from the Baltimore Sun of Wednesday morning, December 6, 1922, in which it was said:

Two hundred and eleven million five hundred thousand dollars given to stockholders. Stock dividends voted in one day throughout the country make vast sum.

It puts the total for 1922 at $1,600,000,000.

Mr. President, I have only touched on these. I have here the information to show while one part of our country, one class of our citizens, are suffering and crying now for help and are in a deplorable condition, there is another class of citizens reeking in wealth and spending their time in issuing stock dividends to avoid taxation, while the poor fellow who is producing food to feed the Nation is compelled to pay if he can pay at all.

None of them are able to avoid it, at least, and are seeing their homes and farms sold to pay taxes, while $1,600,000,000 of stock dividends are issued by another class of citizens to avoid taxation.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRELD. I am very much interested in this discussion. There is a question involved in it concerning which I should like to hear from the Senator from Nebraska, and that is this: Every corporation which is organized must take into consideration the possibility of failure. The Senator states that the corporation proposed under the bill is not intended to be organized in order to make profit; that it is to be a go-between, between the producer and the consumer, and necessarily it will not make any special attempt to make profit. There is, therefore, a probability of its failure. I should like to ask the Senator to explain to us what would be the relative position of the Government should the proposed corporation, after a few years, collapse, as other corporations sometimes collapse? Will the Government be morally obligated to liquidate the indebtedness of the corporation? Will that indebtedness become the debt of the United States? Will we be called upon to appropriate money to liquidate its affairs? What will become of the corporation under such a contingency? I should like to hear from the Senator from Nebraska on that point.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator suggests might be true, but there would be a difference of opinion as to that. Technically the Government would not be liable, of course, but, having set up the corporation, whether or not the Government would be morally liable would become a question for proper consideration, upon which honest men might disagree.

As a matter of law, there is no implied obligation that the Government is liable for anything in connection with the corporation or anything which is provided in the bill—none whatever—but I must admit that the corporation may fail. I am not offering this proposed legislation as a perfected certainty. I realize that men could be put in charge of the corporation who would make it fail, though I do not assume that would be done. The same suggestion might have been made as to the Finance Corporation when it was designed to provide that money should be loaned to bankers. That corporation might have failed; it might have lost money. The same suggestion might also have been made in connection with the United States Wheat Corporation for which we provided during the war. There was a possibility of its failure, but, as a matter of fact, it made about $50,000,000. I do not understand why this proposed corporation also should not be able to make money. I would not desire them to make big profits.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me proceed for just a moment.

If my theory is correct the proposed corporation would devote a great deal of its energy to working in harmony with great cooperative organizations and would act as their agent. Instead of having many middlemen to handle their products, a cooperative organization of cotton men, we will say, or of wheat men, would combine all their products and turn them over to the corporation, which would handle those products for them on an agreed percentage which would be much lower than that which they would have to pay the middlemen. The corporation would advance them perhaps 75 per cent of the value of the products at the time the contract was made. It would then handle the products, sell them as it could to the best advantage, shipping them to Europe or to other places, and when the transaction was completed would divide the proceeds among the members of such associations. I think that would be one of the main things that would be accomplished by such a corporation. It would also induce consumers to organize. In the city of New York, for instance, a great organization could be formed of the men who consume the food, and they would buy, by the trainload, perhaps, through the instrumentality or agency of the corporation. The corporation would be paid a commission for their work; they would be paid a reasonable fee for carrying on the business. It seems to me that, properly managed, it would be almost sure to make as much money as such a corporation should desire to make. They could themselves regulate that matter. I take it they would not operate at a loss, that they would undertake to make a small profit.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. This further thought occurs to me: The bill proposes the establishment of a corporation, and if, as the Senator has stated, there is a possibility that the Government would be morally bound by the obligations of this concern, then it is practically the Government that engages in these purchases and these sales. If that be true, would not the question of the constitutionality of the law be raised?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not believe there would be any question of constitutionality involved in it. This corporation has no governmental function. The corporation is just like any other corporation. It could be sued and could sue; it could buy and sell; it could act as agent; it could loan money. The idea is to make it as perfectly free as an individual, with a free hand and not surrounded by any red tape. So it could act as a person may act, as any other corporation may act. The fact that all of its stock is owned by the Government would show, of course, that the Government owned the capital stock of the corporation, but the Government has given it a right to be sued, to act, and the bill gives it a right to transact all business that an individual may transact. When it was proposed to organize the War Finance Corporation to loan money to banks and trust companies we heard no one question the constitutionality of the procedure. Even if it should operate at a loss, I can see how that would be better than not to operate at all.

We saw the remarkable condition of the Government of the United States spending $20,000,000—I think that was the amount—for Russian relief, the principal part of that sum being used in the purchase of corn, and we saw the price of corn in the United States go up from a point away below the cost of production to the American farmer. If the wheat and cotton and corn which the proposed corporation should buy were absolutely lost and the money paid for it were lost, yet the expenditure would at some time bring about a profit instead of a failure to the man who produced the commodity.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we can not go on as we are going. We can not see one class of our citizens rolling in wealth, making money and avoiding taxation, when another class are toiling and suffering for the very necessaries of life. I am not a prophet, but many governments have gone to pieces because they have not heeded the voice of caution in time. Carry out that idea to its logical conclusion and ruin must come. We can not build upon the sufferings and pangs of hunger and cold and chill of one-half of our population while aristocracy reeks in wealth and luxury; the foundation will not sustain such a top-heavy burden; it will not stand. We must halt; we must pause, Mr. President, and do something to equalize conditions. If the remedy proposed is not effectual, if the bill needs amendment, let us amend it, but do not stagger and run because it is something new. We are confronted with a new condition, and we need a new remedy. Do not be afraid of it because it has never been tried by this Government before. We have stretched our ingenuity and tried everything that we have known, and we have failed. We must devise new remedies; we must meet abnormal conditions by remedies that will relieve them.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand the Senator from Nebraska, he claims that the spread between the cost of wheat, for instance, at the farm and the cost of wheat when purchased from the mill is too great; that there is too much spread, for instance, between what the farmer receives for his wheat and what the miller obtains for his product. Is that correct?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is one of the conditions which should be remedied.

Mr. STANLEY. That is one of the conditions which should be remedied. I merely take that as an instance. Is the Senator of the opinion that the Government corporation which his bill proposes to create, with power to buy and sell, will handle wheat at a less cost, or, in other words, that there will be a less spread?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I assume that the proposed corporation or its managers would be men of reason, of judgment, and of ability, and that they will not necessarily undertake to operate in all commodities.

Mr. STANLEY. I am speaking about wheat.

Mr. NORRIS. But they will see where there is something wrong with conditions, and they will operate in that place. When they see that there is something wrong with the cotton situation and middlemen are taking the profits that ought to go to the producer, they will commence to operate with cotton and lessen the burden to the producer.

Mr. STANLEY. I was not speaking about the extent of the proposed corporation's operations; I was referring to one operation to illustrate the character and scope of the activities of the corporation. Taking wheat, for instance, the reason for authorizing this new instrumentality to buy and sell and hold the grain is that there is a loss to the man who eats bread by virtue of too high a price and a loss to the man who produces wheat by virtue of too low a price; in other words, the spread between the producer and the manufacturer of the article is too great. In order to remedy that situation is it proposed that the Government shall take over the functions of the middleman, who, in the case of wheat, is the elevator man?

Mr. NORRIS. The corporation will have the authority to do that.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator expect they will do that?

Mr. NORRIS. I expect they will do so if they find that the spread is so great as to justify such action.

Mr. STANLEY. We are merely assuming that it is.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming that it is, the corporation would not act unless they reached the conclusion that there was too great a spread, and then they would buy wheat. Perhaps there would be a cooperative organization of the producers of wheat, of which there are many now, some of them covering two or three States.

Mr. STANLEY. I know that in some States such organizations have taken hold of the situation.

Mr. NORRIS. They would make a contract with the producers and handle their product; there would be no middlemen's profits anywhere; and if they followed out their authority, they would have elevators; they would have warehouses; so that if the grain were not sold immediately it would be stored and sold at seasonable times so as to even up the price.

Mr. STANLEY. Of course, the Government would have to have elevators, because wheat can not be handled without them, as it would be likely to spoil; but in case the Government constructed its own elevators and handled the wheat crop, what would the Senator propose to do with elevators which are privately owned?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would not interfere with the privately owned elevators unless the corporation created under the bill should buy some of them, as they could buy them, if they agreed on a price; they would have the right to do that; but I do not anticipate that the corporation is going to do all the business either in the wheat line or the cotton line or any other line. They will not be able to handle all the farm products of the country.

Mr. STANLEY. That is what I am trying to get at. Assume that they concluded to remedy the evil in the wheat industry, which is the great staple of the Middle West, and they found it necessary to handle the wheat. In handling the wheat, and handling it successfully, of course every elevator they constructed would put out of business an elevator now constructed.

Mr. NORRIS. No; it would not. Oh, no, Mr. President. I have not any such conception of it. That is not my idea.

Mr. STANLEY. In the event the construction of the Government elevators rendered unprofitable or obsolete or empty a corresponding number of privately owned elevators, what steps, if any, would the Government take to save the owners of those private businesses?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it would take any. I am not assuming that that condition would happen. I have no desire to put any man out of legitimate business. As I said, this great corporation would only be one, probably the biggest corporation in the business. It ought to be large enough to compete in such a way that it could effectually prevent the charging of enormous commissions as the product travels from the producer to the consumer; but I do not anticipate that it would have a monopoly in any line. There would still be avenues for everybody else to do business if he wanted to, and if he could not do business, of course, he would quit. What happens to the elevator man now if somebody else builds another elevator—the farmers, perhaps? They build lots of them in my country.

Mr. STANLEY. That is all right.

Mr. NORRIS. What happens to the man who owns the other elevator, that has been having its own way about it? He has not gone out of business. He is there yet. He probably does not make the same profit that he made before, but suppose they got the charges down so low that he did go out of business? That happens somewhere every day.

Mr. STANLEY. Does the Senator draw any distinction between the injury that would result from competition between two independent, privately owned concerns and competition that might exist between a concern operated by the Government without profit and a privately owned concern? I readily concede that any loss that one man suffers because he can not compete with another man, both doing an honest and legitimate business, is damnum absque injuria, and that the Government ought not to interfere; but I would draw a distinction between bankruptcy that would result from competition of that kind and bankruptcy that would result from competition with a Government agency of similar kind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in my judgment we ought not to borrow trouble from sources from which probably no trouble will come. If we have in our country a condition where the producer is being ruined, and the consumer is likewise to a great extent being ruined by enormous prices that he has to pay for the necessaries of life, and we want to remedy it, if this is a remedy—we have tried everything else, and if anybody has a better remedy I should be willing to follow it—why should we hesitate, when all the people on one side or the other of the equation, and perhaps on both, are suffering from the present condition, to alleviate that condition because we fear that in carrying out the plan some man may own an elevator somewhere that will not be profitable afterwards? I hope that will not occur; but if it does, let it occur. We must meet the proposition and we must bring about a remedy, or ruin stares us in the face.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, at that point may I make an inquiry? Then I will not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not contending, of course, that private porperty can not be taken for public use. It can; but hitherto when the Government has taken private property for public use it has provided some means for compensating the owner of that property. I was just inquiring, not in the way of criticism at all, at this time, at least, as to whether any provision had been made for compensation to the owner of private property for any injury directly resulting from the operation of the Government instrumentality?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this bill does not provide any way for this corporation to condemn property. It has no authority to condemn anybody's property. It is just like any other corporation. If it does anything that is illegal, and thereby injures another man or another corporation, it is liable for damages just the same as I would be as an individual, or the same as any private corporation would be if it had performed the same act.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator whether he does not think that one reason why agriculture does not prosper more is on account of unjust laws governing future transactions on exchanges?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know to what law the Senator refers. I think there ought to be a law regulating transactions in futures, especially in all food products.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I should like to see if we can not fix a definite hour at which we may vote on this motion. There are several Senators who have had to go away, but who expect to be back later in the afternoon. There may be others who will have to go; and I ask unanimous consent that a vote may be had upon the motion of the Senator from Nebraska at 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum here if we are going to take any such step at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to see if we can not fix a time for a vote. The Senator can make the point of no quorum, and then we can see.

Mr. DIAL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURSUM in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell
Bayard	France	Lodge	Reed, Mo.
Borah	George	McCumber	Robinson
Brandegee	Glass	McKellar	Sheppard
Brookhart	Hale	McKinley	Shortridge

Curtis	Kendrick	Page	Townsend

Dillingham	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Ernst	Ladd	Pittman	Watson
Fernald	La Follette	Poindexter	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the request for unanimous consent made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. KING. Let the request be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the request.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. That at 4 o'clock p. m. on this day the Senate will proceed without further debate to vote upon the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator from Utah whether he will suggest a time when we may vote on this motion?

Mr. KING. I fancy that on account of the importance of the motion it requires further discussion. I think the Senator ought to be willing that those who desire to speak should have full opportunity to do so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, I can not prevent Senators from having a full opportunity to speak, but I wondered whether the Senator could not suggest a time which would give full opportunity. My desire is to have a definite time fixed for a vote upon the motion.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the Senator should not object to the course which is being pursued, because there is constantly a discussion of the bill which the Senator is championing; its virtues and its vices are being depicted by Senators in the discussion of the pending question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not entering any objection at all. Several Senators, some for the motion and some against it, have expressed to me a hope that a definite time might be fixed so that they would be sure to be present. They would like to know definitely when the motion would be voted upon. There are two or three Senators away this afternoon for a while who said they would be back in an hour or two, and they said they would like to have a definite time fixed. Of course, I can not force it. I am merely asking the Senator to suggest some time at which we might vote.

Mr. KING. Let me suggest to the Senator that he renew his request this afternoon before we adjourn, and I think perhaps a time may be agreed upon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Has the Senator any objection to making it 6 o'clock to-day, or half past 5?

Mr. KING. For the vote?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; for the vote.

Mr. KING. What I had in mind was that the Senator this afternoon renew his request for unanimous consent to vote at a given time, say some time to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator suggest now some hour to-morrow, if he is not willing to set an hour to-day?

Mr. KING. Speaking only for myself, I suggest 3 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am perfectly willing to submit that request, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the Senate vote at 3 o'clock to-morrow on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I see no reason for fixing a time to vote on a motion of this sort. Why not let us proceed in the regular order and when the debate closes take a vote on the motion? We may be ready to vote on it now—I do not know; but I can see no reason for this new custom of agreeing on a definite time to vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to suggest that at any time I get recognition I can move to lay the motion on the table. I do not care to use that drastic method. I would prefer to have a time fixed. Otherwise I shall feel disposed to make that motion before a great while.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand there has been objection made to the request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. At the same time, I deem it proper to say that my object in casting that vote is to supplant the pending bill and bring before the Senate the subject matter of rural-credits legislation. I do not favor the Norris bill as it is presented to the Senate. It has been demonstrated conclusively, in my opinion, during the course of this debate that the bill now under consideration will not accomplish the purpose which it is designed to accomplish, that it will not restore or maintain an American merchant marine. While the bill presented by the Senator from Nebraska requires amendment in many important particulars, I shall vote to bring that bill before the Senate, in the belief that the Senate will reform the bill so as to make it acceptable to those of us who favor fair rural-credits legislation.

The bill which we know as the Norris bill has received the approval of many practical farmers in various portions of the United States. They are entitled to have their viewpoint considered by the Senate. It would seem to me unjust to them to deny them that opportunity. At the same time, as stated by its author, the bill contemplates a new procedure of very far-reaching importance. It is an experiment.

In so far as the bill proposes to put the United States Government permanently into the business of buying and selling agricultural products, it is objectionable, and I have no hesitancy in saying so. If the United States Government is to enter upon the business of buying and selling agricultural products, the probability is that in the end that procedure will redound to the detriment of those whom the legislation is designed to benefit. It may result in price fixing by Government authority, and this will cause a clash between producers and consumers which likely will destroy the independence of the producers.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator has suggested that one of his reasons for voting to take up the Norris measure at this time is that he has the hope that we may so amend or remodel it that it will meet the situation. I think I ought to call attention to the fact that the Committee on Banking and Currency has several bills under consideration which cover this whole subject. We began hearings a week ago, and we expect to finish those hearings to-morrow, and report out a bill in the near future. I am wondering if it would not be better to postpone action on the Norris bill until the bill which will be reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency is before the Senate, in order that we may take both measures into consideration and, if possible, cover the subject under one title.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is undoubtedly true that the Senate should proceed with caution in the enactment of legislation touching the subject of rural credits, but it should also move promptly in the matter, and if the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency authorizes the report of a bill to-morrow it will be ready for the consideration of the Senate before any action can be anticipated by this body on the subject. The statement of the Senator from Connecticut, instead of being a justification for postponing taking up the subject of rural credits legislation, is, in my judgment, an argument in favor of it.

Mr. McLEAN. The bill will not be reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency inside of a week, and I assume that if the Norris bill is put before the Senate it will be voted on in less than a week. I do not know about that, but it would seem to me that no time would be gained by discussing the disputed points which gather around this subject, when the Committee on Banking and Currency may be able to report a bill which will cover the subject and upon which we can all agree.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am not materially concerned with the rivalry which exists between the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and the Committee on Banking and Currency. I think it is fair and proper that all proposals touching this subject which are well considered shall be before the Senate and be considered by the Senate when the matter is to be disposed of. There is not the slightest doubt, however, that if the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Norris bill with the understanding that it will reform the bill in important particulars, the Committee on Banking and Currency will find it necessary and convenient to bring its proposals before the Senate speedily, in order that we may choose between them and the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, which is reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

We will at least accomplish one result which nearly everyone here seems now to desire. We will for the present get rid of a bill which has been thoroughly discredited, during the course of the debate, as not calculated, in its provisions, to accomplish the restoration of the American merchant marine. It seems to me that the arguments submitted touching the pending bill, the merchant marine subsidy bill, have conclusively shown that the plan proposed in the bill is not fairly calculated to accomplish any wholesome purpose, and, at the same time, that it will cost an enormous sum and put the United States and her present merchant marine in a more disadvantageous position than is now occupied. For that reason I want to get rid of this pending bill and get before the Senate a subject which practically all Senators agree requires consideration.

I have made this statement in order that there might be no misunderstanding concerning my position, and I think I express the viewpoint of a large number of Senators on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that I have no desire to interpose any objection to the immediate consideration of any measure intended to bring relief to the agricultural interests of the country. But the Senator knows that there are several bills pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that committee has been hearing not only interested parties from outside but Senators who have already introduced bills covering this subject, and it has seemed to the committee that time would be gained rather than lost if, as the result of our efforts, we could bring about an agreement upon the important points involved in the proposed rural credits legislation.

The purpose of the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, as I understand it, is to improve the marketing facilities now possessed by the farmer for the distribution of his products, and I want to say to the Senator that that is precisely the purpose of the bills pending before our committee. The Committee on Banking and Currency felt it not only was its duty to hear Senators who introduced bills covering this subject before the Senator from Nebraska introduced his bill but it seemed to the committee that that was an exceedingly wise course to follow.

There is no member of the Banking and Currency Committee who is not as anxious as is the Senator from Nebraska to expedite legislation upon the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McLEAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator is referring to bills pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am familiar with some of those bills, but I understand none of those measures traverse the ground that is covered by the bill offered by the Senator from Nebraska. It is true they seek to extend credit to the farmers, but the bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska goes further. If I understand the measures now pending before the Senator's committee, they do not in any manner conflict with the Norris bill.

Mr. McLEAN. They do most seriously conflict, because, while they all seek to accomplish the same general purpose, they do not use the same method that is employed in the bill of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, they extend credit to the farmer upon his giving sufficient security such as is prescribed by the bill, but the measure offered by the Senator from Nebraska goes further than that. He sets up a corporation which may buy and sell grain and acquire elevators and warehouses for the storage of agricultural products, and so forth.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me all the more important, if the Committee on Banking and Currency is trying to devise other means to accomplish the purpose than those proposed in the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, that the Senate should wait until our report is out, and the methods proposed by the Senator from Nebraska can be compared with the methods proposed by the Committee on Banking and Currency. Both bills could then be before the Senate at the same time.

No member of the Committee on Banking and Currency assumes ultimate wisdom on the subject. Many of the questions are difficult to answer. We felt that it was wise to hear from Senators who have given the problem long and careful study. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] was chairman of a special commission of agricultural inquiry and his bill attempts to follow largely the recommendations of that commission. It seems to me all important that we should, if possible, try to cover the legislation in one bill and not try to do it by piecemeal.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator before he resumes his seat that I can see no impropriety—indeed, I can see many advantages—in proceeding to a discussion of the Norris bill now? That does not preclude the Banking and Currency Committee from considering the measures now before it and presenting a measure which they think will relieve the situation. But I venture the prediction now—and I make the suggestion without intending in any way to criticize the committee—that any bill which may emanate from the Committee on Banking and Currency will not contain the important and fundamental provisions found in the Norris bill, and that the Norris bill can be easily distinguished from any measure which will be reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McLEAN. I assume if we consider the Norris bill it would be voted on at an early date; and if it is voted upon and is passed before our committee's report comes in and the bill is sent to the House, it would hinder rather than hasten legislation upon the subject. There is no question about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McLEAN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator feel confident that his committee will be able to present a bill on the subject to-morrow?

Mr. McLEAN. No; I have already stated that we expect to close the hearings to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. How long after the hearings are closed does the Senator think it will be before a report can be made to the Senate?

Mr. McLEAN. It will probably be a week. That is my opinion. It is an important matter. As the Senator knows, among the Senators who have introduced bills there is a wide difference of opinion as to the best plan to be pursued; and our effort is, if possible, to reconcile those differences and thus avoid long discussions when the bill comes to the Senate. I think the time will be well occupied if in executive session the committee can harmonize the different opinions. This may be impossible.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Connecticut? He thinks it will probably be a week, but suppose it is two weeks, or suppose it is three weeks. We can not tell when the bill will be reported out, but if it should be reported within a week then the Norris bill, if taken up by the Senate, would be under discussion, and the committee could come in with its bill and propose to amend the Norris bill by offering the committee bill as a substitute. In the meantime we would have had an opportunity thoroughly to consider the Norris bill, and no time would be lost. I believe the program is to recess from Friday until Wednesday next, and therefore if a bill comes out of the committee within a week, there will be no time lost if we go on with the consideration of the Norris bill.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I simply desired to call to the attention of the Senate the situation so far as the legislation now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency is concerned. I have no objection to a vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska. The sooner we can get a vote on that motion the better, but I think it would be unwise to expect a vote on the Norris bill before the bill prepared by the Committee on Banking and Currency is reported.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it would be impossible, if the committee reports within a week, for us to vote on the Norris bill before that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I need not say, because it is well known in this Chamber, that I am and have been for many years a champion of legislation in favor of granting adequate credit facilities to the agricultural and live-stock interests of the country. Ever since the hearings began before the Committee on Banking and Currency on the various bills with relation to the subject I have attended their meetings, with the exception of one day, because I was deeply interested in what was going on in the committee and was extremely anxious that a bill should be brought out which would be satisfactory to the friends of the agricultural and live-stock interests.

As the result of what I have heard there I hardly agree with the chairman of the committee. I doubt very seriously whether the committee is going to be in a position to report out a bill within a week or within two weeks. The hearings have now been going on very nearly, if not quite, a week. Sometimes there have been both morning sessions and afternoon sessions the same day. Up to this time the committee has only considered two of the four or five bills which have been introduced with reference to the subject. Two of the bills that have been introduced have had practically no presentation or discussion before the committee up to this time. It may be that the hearings as to the two bills which have not been considered will not be as extensive as the hearings upon the two bills which already have been considered. But in my judgment the two that have not been considered deserve equal consideration with the two which have been discussed. I doubt very much whether it will be found quite expedient or quite fair or just to close the hearings to-morrow, but if they should be closed then, with those four bills before the committee and with the different views that I am led to believe exist among the members of the committee, it will be impossible for the committee to reach any satisfactory conclusion for some time after the hearings shall have been closed.

I am also apprehensive that when the committee shall have concluded its executive sessions it will not be able to bring out a bill that would be satisfactory to the friends of agriculture. Of course, if we should wait until that bill comes out and then move to substitute that bill as the only bill then to be before the Senate, there probably would be motions to substitute for the bill brought out by the committee some of the other bills which have been introduced. I can not very well see how we are going to expedite the discussion by postponing it until after the Banking and Currency Committee reports a bill.

I have taken the precaution to offer as an amendment to the ship subsidy bill a bill prepared by myself providing rural credits for the farmer. I did that because at that time there was no bill on the calendar which I or any other Senator could move to take up and thus displace the ship subsidy bill, and I wanted to create a situation whereby the rural-credits legislation could be brought before the Senate in antagonism to the ship subsidy bill. Of course my purpose was to offer that bill of mine, if there was no other satisfactory bill on the calendar, as a substitute for the ship subsidy bill and thereby make the issue between the two bills, just as the issue is now made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who has moved that the ship subsidy bill be displaced by the bill reported out by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which he is chairman.

We are, therefore, in a position where no vote can be taken under any circumstances upon the ship subsidy bill until we shall have first discussed a proposition for agricultural credits, and we are also in a position where a measure supposed adequately to provide for agricultural credits may be offered as a substitute for the ship subsidy bill, even should the Banking and Currency Committe not act at all.

In view of these conditions, Mr. President, there does not seem to me to be any reason why we should wait for the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency. One of the proposed bills—that introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], the bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], the bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], or that introduced by myself—may be offered as a substitute for the shipping bill.

Mr. President, I wish for a moment to make some observations in reference to the bill of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] which he now asks the Senate to take up in displacement of the ship subsidy bill. I am very much in the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who so interestingly addressed the Senate on the subject on yesterday. I am not in sympathy with either of the two bills. Of course, I am against the ship subsidy bill, and I shall be exceedingly earnest, as I have been from the beginning, in my efforts to bring about its defeat. I think the best interests of the country require that it should be defeated. I believe it proposes a policy which is in conflict with all the sound principles and traditions of the country and upon which we should under no circumstances be justified in entering. On the other hand, I do not think that the bill offered by the Senator from Nebraska will be of any material assistance to the farmer. I do not believe it will help the farmer for the Government to go into the business of buying and selling agricultural products. What the farmer needs is stimulation of the prices of his products, enhancement, if you please, of the value of his products, and the opportunity adequately to finance the production and then the distribution of those products. That is what the farmer needs. I have not found that Government control of prices has resulted in increasing those prices. I think if the Government should become a buyer and a seller of farm products, it would more likely have the tendency of reducing prices than of increasing them. I do not think that is what the farmers need; I do not think that would help the farmers, but I think in the end it would hurt them very much.

However, I am opposed to the policy, not only because I do not believe it promises any relief—certainly no adequate relief—against the conditions with which the farmer now contends, but I am against it because I think fundamentally it is unsound and is a policy upon which our Government should never enter. If the Government should enter upon the policy of buying and selling the products of one industry, no mortal man knows where it will end, and no mortal man can tell what the final result upon our institutions and our system of government will be. In my judgment, it would not only be dangerous legislation but would be utterly ineffective to accomplish the purpose at which it is aimed.

I am not going to commit myself definitely now as to what vote I shall cast upon the question of supplanting the ship subsidy bill with this utterly unsatisfactory so-called farmers' relief bill. If I shall ultimately vote for the motion, Mr. President, it will not be—and I wish that distinctly understood—because I favor the proposed legislation as being either wise or sound legislation or as adequate legislation even tending to give the farmer the relief for which he is now asking and to which he is so obviously entitled; but I shall vote for it, if I do decide to vote for it, simply because it would probably enable us at once, if the motion should prevail, to take up legislation that is of the most urgent character and most necessary to be passed in order to relieve the situation of more than half our population, and would displace legislation the viciousness of which, in my judgment, is probably without a parallel in the legislative history of the United States.

Of course, I know, as every other Senator knows, that if the Norris bill shall be made the unfinished business, the Senate need not necessarily act upon the Norris bill, but that any of the farmers' relief bills which have been introduced may be offered as a substitute or that a composite bill made out of all of them which may be satisfactory to the farming interest as represented in the Senate and as it exists in the country may be offered as an amendment or as a substitute for the Norris bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I was interested in what the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], had to say in reference to what the committee would be likely to bring out as a result of their hearings and conferences which are now being held. I am sorry the Senator has left the Chamber, because I should have liked to have asked him some questions which would possibly have determined my attitude in acting on the pending motion. There are two questions which I should like to have asked which, in my opinion, are vital: First, how soon may we expect a report from that committee in the form of a bill; and, next, the character and scope of that bill? Taking into consideration the fact that the revenues of the Government, according to the report of the Treasury Department, are running something like $1,500,000,000 or more short, with the tax returns from the several States to support the governments of those States running as much as 50 per cent below the returns even of last year, we are confronted with a question so broad, so fundamental, that it affects not alone an adequate system of credit or financing for the farmer, but one the proper solution of which involves the perpetuity of our commercial and economic life. It is impossible to conceive that this country can continue to conduct its ordinary commercial and industrial affairs with the returns from the very basic industry shrinking to less than one-half of their customary volume and the real estate upon which that industry is founded shrinking to one-fourth of its ordinary market value.

Mr. President, I deplore the fact that the farmers of this country and their interests are looked upon as being rather a negligible consideration unless they become so insistent as to become annoying. Senators and Members of the House and the ordinary business world do not look upon the farmer as a serious factor in our commercial life. Why? The attitude of the bankers toward agricultural paper is notorious. Up to the time of the passage of the Federal reserve act real estate was not allowed to be accepted in a national bank as collateral for a loan. It was only after the passage of that act that we permitted our great financial institutions, as a banking proposition, to recognize the very basis of all prosperity and life in this country. Farm paper was looked upon and was spoken of as a slow and doubtful banking asset. Mark you, when an intimate understanding is had of the attitude of the commercial and banking world the objection to handling farm paper is not so much that it is slow as that it is considered a doubtful risk.

Why should the agricultural securities of this country in the form of farmers' notes be a doubtful security? I challenge the Senate this afternoon to point to a single staple agricultural product as to which the producer has a word to say about the price he is to obtain for it. Point to a single agricultural producer in this country who has a word to say as to the price of the things that he purchases for the production of the commercial asset that he proposes to put upon the market. The very nature of his business is such that he can not organize as other businesses organize.

The woolen manufacturers of this country have a fixed and standardized form of goods that they produce. The manufacturers of those woolen goods can get together and determine the extent to which the market will absorb their production. They can get together and determine the quality of that production, and they can give to that market just the quantity and quality of their particular goods that the market will absorb at the greatest profit to them. If the manufacturer gets an order for the future delivery of a given quantity of goods, he can take it with absolute safety. Why? Because he can determine both the quality and the quantity, and produce it at the given time.

That is true of every form of manufacturing. The farmer, on the other hand, would not dare take a contract for the future delivery of any quantity or any quality of the thing that he might raise. He invests his money in agricultural implements and live stock, and he sets out to produce a crop of wheat. After he has put the seed in the ground, the quantity and quality are beyond his control. He must wait until nature has perfected the product before he can determine what the quantity and the quality will be. Then, what results? He has been 12 months in producing a supply that must be consumed in the subsequent 12 months. He has for 12 months assumed liabilities in producing that product. His liabilities become due when the 12 months' supply is on hand; and he therefore is forced, by virtue of his creditors demanding pay, to put upon the market a 12 months' supply within 30, 60, or 90 days.

That is universally true of agricultural production throughout this country. Therefore the peculiar phase of the problem that we are to meet here is not so much financing him in the production of the crop as financing him in the distribution of that crop over the next 12 months. I submit, Mr. President, that when the farmers of this country have produced the wool and produced the cotton and produced the wheat, and the quantity and the quality are known, and the other fact is also known that that wheat and those other agricultural products are necessary to the world's welfare and must be consumed, there is no better banking collateral in the world than the imperishable, staple agricultural products.

Why, therefore, is it not possible for us to develop a system by which, when the agricultural crops of this country are produced, they can be financed adequately during the period of their distribution? Somebody finances them. Somebody buys them and distributes them. Under our present system and policy the farmer does not, because he is looked upon as being a doubtful risk, and it is said that his paper is long-time paper. I submit here this afternoon that the only long time that is required is from the planting of the crop until the gathering of the crop. From that period on the farmer should have adequate credit for the distribution of his crop. I should like to ask the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, if he were here this afternoon, why it is that we hear from every side "short-time agricultural credits" and different expressions to convey to the minds of the world the temporary makeshift that we propose to hand out to the fundamental business of this country.

I state here this afternoon that it is just as essential for us to have a fixed, adequate system of agricultural finances as it is to have that which now obtains for the commercial world. There are fundamental differences between agricultural banking and commercial banking. It may be, and I for one believe, that the present Federal reserve system could have been so handled, if a different policy had been pursued than the one which has been pursued, as to have met all the necessities that confront agriculture; but a different policy was pursued, credit was denied, and the result is what we see to-day.

It may be possible that we might so amend the Federal reserve act, by mandatory clauses rather than discretionary clauses, as to make it do the work that it was intended to do; but it is essential that at this time and place we shall have a system that will meet the necessities of the agriculturist now and give him hope for a to-morrow. It is an old saying that "Nobody but a fool would be bitten by the same dog twice, providing he knows the dog"; and all those who have come before our committee have expressed their determination not to put themselves again at the mercy of a system that is capable, through any policy that may be adopted by those who have the power, of spelling the farmers' ruin as it was spelled in 1920 and 1921. Before I will vote for giving the preference to any kind of a measure I want to know that that measure is at least susceptible of proper amendment to make it adequate.

Some reference was made here this afternoon to our freight rates. We have talked a great deal about class legislation. I have denied that any legislation looking to the relief of the farmers along the lines of a proper banking system is class legislation. Agriculture is fundamental. It competes with nothing. It is the basis upon which all rests. The other day, when I took occasion on this floor to show that during the period of what was called an unavoidable deflation there had been made by some concerns, or one at least in this country, 16,000 per cent, by another 3,333 per cent, and by another 1,500 per cent—and the papers are full from day to day of what are known as stock dividends—my statement was challenged on the ground of what length of time was consumed in accumulating the 16,000 per cent. The particular corporation to which I have reference had a capital investment of $100,000 and declared a stock dividend of $16,000,000—$160,000 for every $1,000 put in. It does not make any difference if it took 50 years to accumulate it; the farms and the farm homes and the farm organizations of this country have been in existence for more than 50 years, and at the same day and at the same hour that there were published these notorious dividends, declared in the form of stock, a cry went up from East and West and North and South that what the farmers had accumulated in the 50 years, if it took 50 years to make $16,000,000 out of $100,000, was a stock mortgage and a farm mortgage.

I consider this question of not only holding out a hope but giving assurance to agriculture that credit will be adequate, permanent, and without any limitation, a matter of the very greatest importance. I want here and now to enter my protest against any proposal to set aside so many millions for agriculture. Let us fix our system so that the farmer has ready access to all the capital and to all the currency in this country, as business has to-day. Let us give him the same opportunity to borrow, the same opportunity to hypothecate his commodity, peculiarly adapted to the conditions under which he must produce and sell.

Mr. President, I am going to insist in season and out of season on this floor that we shall not say to agriculture, which produces more than 55 per cent of the wealth of this country annually, that we will make some little amendment for the benefit of agriculture, and will set aside some amount of capital, as is proposed in the Lenroot bill, to ameliorate the farmer's condition. My contention is that he is entitled to such legislation that under all safe business rules he will have the same rights and privileges, under the peculiar conditions under which he produces his wealth, that commerce has in attending to its business, not set aside so much gold, or set aside so many bonds, but to open up to him the entire field of credit, both in this country and abroad, as you have opened it up to commerce.

The legislation we pass should be as comprehensive as that, possibly through a radical amendment of the present Federal reserve act which shall take into account the peculiar conditions under which agricultural wealth is produced and marketed, in which amendment we should put clauses which would insure that the farmer would not be left at the sweet mercy of the whims of those who desire to favor one form of commerce as against another; we should include mandatory clauses providing that if the door is shut in the face of agriculture and farmers are to be hurled into the depths of bankruptcy and ruin, as is now evident, all other business shall share alike with it, as far as the credits are concerned.

Every man knows that the present condition in which agriculture finds itself has come about because credit was denied the farmer. There has been some talk to the effect that the prices of agricultural products had to come down, that they were too high, in spite of the fact that the general level of prices was universally high. Every man in this Chamber knows that when cotton and wheat and cattle had reached the peak the little bootblack who had been getting 5 cents for a shine was getting 15 cents. I mention those extremes to show that the general rise was by virtue of the additional volume, under the quantitative theory of money, the price of everything being raised pari passu; but when the restriction came, what happened? Everything moved along the line of least resistance, and the farmer having the least resistance, he suffered first, last, and was the only one.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this morning a witness before the Banking and Currency Committee, speaking in behalf of the Norris bill, insisted upon the passage of the Norris bill, and he made the statement that the farmer did not need more credit, that the trouble was that he had had too much credit, and it was for that reason he wanted to have the Norris bill passed. Does that accord with the Senator's opinion?

Mr. SMITH. I think it is not necessary to go into that. There are plenty of people, as Paul said about the Jews, who "have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." I doubt very much if he knew enough about farming to give an intelligent answer about it. I do not know who the witness was, but I know that is absolutely untrue. I know this much: That the wheat of the West and the cotton of the South and the cattle on the plains would not have been sacrificed any more than the securities held in the banks and elsewhere if there had been extended to the farmer adequate credit on that which he had to tide him over that period. But the cry went up, "liquidate," and it went to such an extent that I myself was asked whether the cotton I had for sale was made in 1920 or 1921, and upon inquiry I found that if the cotton had been made in 1920 I could not get a loan, but if it was made in 1921 I could get a loan.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was that true, notwithstanding the quality of the cotton?

Mr. SMITH. The question was as to the time when the cotton was made. It was in accordance with the idea that somebody had determined that the crops should move regardless of whether or not the producer and owner of the crop went bankrupt and committed suicide, as thousands of them did—the crop must move. In other words, you could get a loan if you made the crop in 1921, but you could not get a loan if you made it in 1920, because the latter would be "speculative holdings." To force him to sell and send him into bankruptcy and suicide was legitimate, orderly marketing.

Under the conditions what help did the farmer have? He had no resources. He did not have 16,000 per cent accumulated as a surplus against this evil day. He did not have the 3,333⅓ per cent, the dividend mentioned in the clipping handed me by the Senator from Arkansas. He did not even have the 100 per cent which seems to be so very common. It is said they do not need credit. When you have an accumulated indebtedness of 12 months to produce an article, and it takes you 12 months to produce it as a commercial asset, to liquidate the liabilities of the 12 months previous, and the price is so low that it would take the entire crop to settle, if you did settle, the liabilities incurred in its production.

There is not a manufacturing business in the world but what must have credit to buy its raw material, credit during the manufacturing period, and credit during the distributing period. Hence we find the 30, 60, and 90 day paper to carry them over the ordinary period between the time of purchasing the raw material and the time of making the finished product.

I am fully aware, Mr. President, that there are other problems which enter into this question which make it a very vexed and intricate one. I know that essential to the life of this country is an adequate form of transportation, which is synonymous with the means of distribution. Under the present level of farm products and the present tariff on those commodities the farmer is bankrupt and the consumer is pauperized. I happen to have brought over from my office a statement of some instances of actual bona fide sales from middle Carolina to New York of ordinary foodstuffs, which show just how unequal things are. The first one to which I shall refer was sent to me from the bank of Latta, a little town near the line between North and South Carolina and about 14 hours by through freight out of New York. This man writes me a letter, in which he says:

> I attach some statements for some beans that we shipped to New York for sale some time ago. You will note that after paying express and commissions that two baskets of beans netted us 6 cents and that after paying express and commissions 29 baskets netted us $5.80. It cost us about 15 cents per basket to have these beans picked, and the baskets cost us laid down here in Latta about 17 cents each, and you can thus see that we lost some money on these shipments, besides the labor and fertilizers. I just thought I would call this matter to your attention so that you might know that the producers get it in the neck these days of high freight and express rates. Of course, we sold some beans at a profit as we sold some f. o. b. our station.

I want to read to the Senate the net result. This man got a good price for the beans, as beans go, a dollar a crate, there being about a bushel in a crate. He sold them to be delivered—$1 a crate delivered—and the total amount involved was $2. He sent them by express, and the expressage was $1.74 on the 2 bushels; the commission was 20 cents on the 2 bushels, so he got 6 cents. The express company got $1.74, the commission man got 20 cents, and the man who furnished the land, bought the seeds, furnished the fertilizer, bought the crate, and did everything that was necessary to cause 2 bushels of beans to exist which never existed before got 6 cents.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to know how it was they let him get away with so much of it.

Mr. SMITH. I think they overlooked the 6 cents, because I have in my desk, I believe, what I put into the RECORD some time last summer, a statement of the shipment of three carloads of melons to New York in the same train. Each carload of melons brought a fairly good price, as melons were sold, I think something like $130 a car. The freight was $150 to $160 a car, and after paying freight and commission, the shipper had to spend something like $128 for the privilege of giving three carloads of melons to that market. So I suppose they overlooked the 6 cents.

This man seems not to have been satisfied with his 6-cent experience, so he sent 29 bushels by express at another time and he still got $1 a crate. Twenty-nine dollars was the gross. The freight was $20.30, commission $2.90, and he got $5.80. The railroad got $20 for hauling them, a 14-hour haul, the commission man got $2.90 for simply taking them and transmitting them to the ultimate purchaser, and the man who produced them got $5.80.

From another point, Cades, S. C., Mr. T. P. Fulmore writes me a letter. It seems that he started off to do as a great many of the friends of the farmer—those who farm the farmer—say: "Let him diversify, raise his home supplies, and then if he has anything to sell, let it be surplus." This fellow seems to have diversified, and raised artichokes, a form of tuber that is raised for the purpose of making a very delightful pickle. I believe it enters into Mr. Heinz's 57 Varieties. He produced two barrels and got $5 a barrel. The gross was $10. The motto of this house in New York is "Live wires." He shipped the artichokes to them and they got $10 for them. The freight was $7.44 out of the $10, the commission was $1; so the shipper got $1.50.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if he was the gentleman who testified that they did not need any help.

Mr. SMITH. I suspect he was the one the Senator from Ohio said told the committee the farmers did not need credit. He had a market, a fairly good market; $5 a barrel for artichokes delivered in New York seems like a fairly good price, although I do not raise them, but for the shipping space for two barrels he paid $7.44 expressage from his place of business to New York. Mark you, that tariff rate was the result of legislative enactment. You hear men talking about socialism, talking about class legislation. The Interstate Commerce Commission, the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, and a like committee of the Senate are responsible for that. They could not have charged any such price had it not been legalized. The charge was $7.44 for two barrels of artichokes. They brought $5 a barrel in New York, which, as I said, is a fairly good price. Yet to transport them in good shape from a place on the trunk line of the Coast Line, which picks up its make-up of through freight to New York, a distance of less than 24 hours, it cost $7.44 for transporting two barrels of artichokes. Deducting $7.44 from the $10 which the producer received, and $1 for the commission man, left the shipper, to pay for his land, to pay his taxes, to pay the cost incurred in production, the magnificent sum of $1.50. It is the duty of the Congress not so much to make new legislation, but to amend and regulate that which it has done disastrously.

I do not pretend to say, for I do not know, how much of the stock of the railroads is watered, but I want to ask the Senate a question. What is the difference between the railroads of the country issuing fictitious or watered stock and a company declaring stock dividends without an adequate increase of the manufacturing plant? A plant produces a certain amount and makes 100 per cent profit. In place of selling the goods cheaper, they take the 100 per cent on the investment and declare it in stock dividends. That increases the capital stock. There is not another dollar put into the concern. There is no enlargement of the plant. It then simply produces the per cent upon the volume of the stock, but the total amount of earnings upon the real amount invested is just the same as it was before. How much of stock under that guise is being watered now? Who will pay for it?

The other day I called attention to a dispatch in the press with reference to a worsted manufacturing concern making 1,500 per cent. Who pays for it? It is now capitalized. That was declared in stock dividends. Hereafter if they make 10 per cent upon that enlarged capital stock, what is the aggregate return upon the actual initial amount invested? There are other questions just as serious concerning the welfare of the country. It is a man's job that confronts us at this stage of human development and this period of organized society, and you are not going to juggle behind closed doors or with any of the subtleties that have heretofore characterized the business affairs of this country. The exigencies of life and of prosperity demand that we should at least not legalize the whole profit making on the one side and pay no attention to the production of paupers on the other side.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall vote to take up for consideration the bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am not in favor of some of the provisions of that bill. I hope to see certain changes made in it. There are other members of the committee who feel as I do about it. We think that it is right and proper to bring the measure before the Senate for immediate consideration for the purpose of amending it and improving it so as to obtain some measure of relief for agriculture. When I vote to take up this bill now for consideration I shall do it for the purpose of trying to bring about legislation that will be helpful to agriculture.

Mr. President, I think that a rural credit bill is the thing that we should take up at the earliest day possible. I believe that a bill giving the farmer the right to borrow money on his staple products will solve the problem. If the farmer is enabled to keep his products off the market when market conditions are bad, prices will be taken care of, because keeping his products off the market will make conditions so that the prices are bound to be above the cost of production and will yield a profit. The farmer must be enabled to hold his product until the price will yield a profit. The merchant is permitted to do that. When the merchant places a stock of goods in his store he does not sell under the cost of production—that is, he does not sell for less than he pays for the goods plus a profit. If anyone goes into a store to make a purchase and offers a price that does not cover the cost of the goods plus a profit, the merchant will not sell the goods. He keeps his goods off the bargain counter, out of the traffic of commerce, until the price will yield a profit; and he is enabled to do that because he has credit at the bank, because the commercial banking system enables him to do that, and it is right and proper that it should. It enables him to handle his business in a businesslike way. That is all we are asking, Mr. President, simply that the farmer be placed upon the same business basis that every other kind of business is placed upon. That is not an unreasonable request. Why should not the farmer be aided by the Government to derive a profit from his business?

Mr. President, I know and you know that if the farmer should go out of business the people would starve. Therefore he is engaged in the most important business in the world; and it seems to me that a Government that will establish a banking system and permit that system to be so manipulated as to serve the whim and caprice of the gamblers of Wall Street, the speculators in various places to get all the money they need or want for speculative purposes, as has been done, ought to be able to devise some plan by which the men who are engaged in an honest industry could have the money necessary to make their business a paying business.

The moment we come in with some measure looking to the relief of the agricultural class, as all must admit is in great distress at this time, somebody is ready to say that it is a Socialist movement and that the Bolshevists are demanding that the thing be done. Mr. President, I have pointed out before and I am going to point out a great many more times that the deflation policy permitted and carried on produced more Bolshevists in this country than anything that has happened here in 50 years. It did more for socialism; it did more to encourage anarchy than anything that has happened.

I recall, as others here do, that when I was talking about deflation and an effort was made by the Wall Street money power to suppress my argument and to keep it out of the newspapers, certain Wall Street representatives would leave the gallery to keep from sending anything whatever to their papers upon the subject, and I remarked at the time that I was not talking to the Wall Street papers, but I was talking to the American people through the 40,000 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that go out each day and that the people, reading that RECORD day after day, week after week, and month after month, would be heard from at the polls.

The question that I here discussed for weeks and months has become a national issue. It played an important part in the recent campaign in every State in the Union. It is going to play a more important part than that in the campaign of 1924. The American people, if they have the moral stamina that I think they have, if they have the courage that I believe they have, and the memory I have known them to possess, will see to it that every person who had to do with deflation is driven out of public life. Every one of them should be constantly held up to public scorn. They should be condemned every day in the year. The crime of murderous deflation must not be forgotten.

Mr. President, I sat in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry during the week just passed, where hearings were being held looking toward legislation to aid agriculture, among other things the establishment of a rural credits system. I heard men testify from the West and the Northwest.

I heard them tell of the terrible taking off of farmers in those western counties, 15 in one county, 18 in another, 25 I believe it was in another, and so on. These men, made desperate by deflation, killed themselves. The captains of finance in Wall Street who clip coupons, who make such tremendous profits as those referred to by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the able and faithful friend of the farmer, do not know anything about these conditions and I doubt whether they would care even if they knew.

We have a serious situation in America to-day. Three-fourths of our people are not in easy or comfortable circumstances. While that is true, a certain smaller group of people are making more money than ever before. In other words, one class of our people, and the larger class, is being hard pressed and impoverished and another class is becoming strangely and dangerously rich. We are fast accumulating a menacing population known as the arrogant and idle rich, and that question, unless the situation is changed, is going to become an important one in this Republic some day. Mr. President, the Almighty never intended that all the rich resources of this vast land of ours should be used by a few people to their enrichment and moral degradation and to the hurt and injury of the American masses. If this Government is to live, and it must and shall, for there is enough patriotism in America, enough statesmanship in America, when properly appealed to and utilized, to rescue this Government from the downward grade on which it has been cast. We are going to restore it to the course marked out by the founders of the Republic. We are going to stop Government pets and favorites who win favor with campaign contributions from holding up and robbing the men and women in the common walks of life.

We are going to see to it that those who toil and produce the necessities of life shall enjoy some of the fruits of their labor. On a former occasion I quoted a line of Scripture which fits the situation we are discussing here to-day and it is so appropriate I am going to quote it again: "They shall build houses and inhabit them; thy shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit. They shall not plant and another eat."

Mr. President, that scriptural quotation is good religion and good Americanism. The principle involved in the lines that I have quoted is the principle that we stand upon and insist upon in our demands for the farmers of America.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. I understand the Banking and Currency Committee have a hearing again in the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an open letter from Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, with reference to certain statements made in a circular letter from Capper's Weekly, of Topeka, Kans. I have spoken to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] in regard to the matter, and he has no objection to the letter of Mr. Lasker going in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, December 18, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: There comes to my attention a circular letter from Capper's Weekly, of Topeka, Kans., on whose letterhead your name appears as publisher, stating:

"Capper's Weekly wishes to seek out and make known the actual sentiment of the people on the five great questions following. Will you please indicate your opinion on the secret ballot inclosed? All we are asking is that you will please mark the ballot and mail it at the earliest moment. No name need be signed to the ballot.

"1. Do you favor a ship subsidy? In order to stop $50,000,000 annual expense of the United States Shipping Board, to get the Government out of the shipping business, to make possible the sale of our Government-owned ships, to make it possible for ships under the American flag to compete with those under foreign flags, it is proposed: That the people, through their Government, shall sell the ships of their war-built merchant fleet for approximately $200,000,000, lend one hundred and twenty-five million to recondition the ships or build others, and then pay the owners about $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years. A clause provides that when a ship has earned 10 per cent of its investment, half of its earnings shall revert to the subsidy fund until the full subsidies it has been paid are returned. President Harding advocates the subsidy plan as the cheapest way for the Government to get out of the shipping business. He believes an American merchant marine would greatly develop our foreign commerce."

Whatever may be your position upon the pending ship subsidy bill, I am sure you do not desire the readers of your paper to reach their conclusions upon either inadequate or erroneous statements; and because the statements in the circular of the organ controlled by you are not accurate and are wholly at variance with the facts, I feel it my duty to you, to myself, and to the people we both represent to give you the facts and thus enable you to correct the erroneous impressions your publication has created. You certainly would not wish, and I certainly could not permit, any part of our people to be misled concerning the provisions of the ship subsidy bill, or the facts surrounding it.

The statements as to the workings of the subsidy bill made in your circular are all taken from the minority House report prepared by Mr. DAVIS, Democrat, of Tennessee, a partisan report which everyone Washington-wise knows was prepared for political purposes and is unjustified by the facts; your words are taken, practically syllable for syllable, from this partisan minority report.

I challenge one to find where the Shipping Board has ever proposed that the war-built merchant fleet be sold for approximately $200,000,000. What can be realized from the Government fleet depends on changing world conditions as well as changing conditions surrounding the American merchant marine. One of the main purposes of the proposed bill is to create a market that will enable the ships to be sold at all, for, under present conditions of Government operation, the Shipping Board, despite great effort and at what it deemed world prices, has been able to dispose of so little tonnage as to amount to practically nothing at all. The pending bill, it is believed, will create a market that will make possible the sale of the ships so as to realize largely in excess of $200,000,000.

Next, your questionnaire states that it is proposed to "lend $125,000,000 to recondition the ships or build others." If it had been the purpose of those who drafted the questionnaire to submit this feature of the bill even with remote fairness, the questionnaire would have stated that the merchant marine act of 1920, now the law of the land, already provides for a $125,000,000 loan fund for the construction of ships; that the proposed bill makes only slight modifications in the existing law to meet present conditions more successfully.

The statement proceeds to say, "and then pay the owners about $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years." Whoever connected with your weekly accepted this quotation from the Democratic minority report has, to my mind, willfully or ignorantly put forth a statement that does not remotely come within the facts.

In the original bill as submitted by the Shipping Board to Congress the only direct aid proposed to ships was a subsidy which the Shipping Board has repeatedly averred, in its testimony before the congressional committee, could not under any conditions and at any maximum exceed $30,000,000 annually.

As the bill stands at present, if all privately owned tonnage under the American flag (including that in the coastwise trade that could be used on the deep seas) were, immediately on the passage of the bill, put into ocean service, the total annual subsidy paid would be less than $5,500,000; if, in addition, all the Government-operated fleet at once passed into private hands, the subsidy cost the first year would be less than $15,000,000.

To this the Shipping Board testified repeatedly before the congressional committee, as the printed record, open to all, plainly shows.

If the subsidy ever reached the annual figure of $30,000,000, the Government will have disposed of its fleet, wiped out its annual operating loss of $50,000,000, and, in addition, the country will have several million tons of new ships of much needed types, built in American yards by American labor and flying the American flag—an aid in commerce, for farmer and manufacturer alike, and a protection to the Nation in war.

The statement that the subsidy could possibly reach $75,000,000 a year was originally made by the Democratic minority in the face of repeated evidence that its annual maximum could not exceed $30,000,000, and that in the 10-year period it would average $22,000,000 annually if the bill met with success in the establishment of an ideal American merchant marine.

When, therefore, it was proposed in the Senate committee that the Shipping Board be prohibited from making contracts which in any one year could total over $30,000,000, the Shipping Board accepted this limitation as scotching effectively the malicious misstatements that had been circulated in regard to the possible maximum. It is apparent, therefore, that the statement of a $750,000,000 subsidy cost in 10 years is not within the facts.

The subsidy is the only direct aid proposed, for the postal compensation continued by the bill is only that provided for, long ago under section 4009 of the Revised Statutes and is based on the actual amount of mail carried, i. e., the Government pays for the freight it gives.

In writing you thus I have a thought quite apart from my purpose to appeal for fairness in dealing with a vital American problem; as a Member of the Senate and necessarily a close student of public affairs you share the responsibility with others that true light comes before the people.

You are aware of the restlessness of humankind and the tendency, here as elsewhere in the world, to array class against class. Our hope of the future lies in an understanding of mutuality of interest; and, in order to promote that understanding of mutuality, these problems of Government and the problems of bettering our industrial and commercial conditions depend upon correct presentation of the situation rather than allegations which may excite unfair prejudice.

Very truly yours,

A. D. LASKER, Chairman.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is a desire to have an executive session, and, as there is no chance, apparently, of securing a vote on the pending motion to-night, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously made, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 19, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By the memory of the past, blessed heavenly Father, we are encouraged to come to Thee, for Thy goodness and mercy are from everlasting to everlasting. Touched with a feeling of our infirmities, Thou knowest us. Come to us according to our requirements and make our weakness to be our strength. Whatever the exactions and responsibilities of our lives may be, teach us to be patient and long-suffering, anchored in the faith of an all-wise God. Stir the fortunate of our land to a high spirit of charity and to a deep sense of duty, and thus may the poor be blest with comfort and good cheer. In the blessed name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in 8-point type certain official records and documents furnished me by the Department of Justice relative to the Ricardo Flores Magon case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RICARDO FLORES MAGON.

DECEMBER 9, 1922.

Hon. WALTER F. LINEBERGER,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Replying to your inquiry concerning Ricardo Flores Magon, I have to advise you that this subject is a Mexican anarchist who was forced to leave Mexico and come to the United States in 1902. He was the author of the publication Carranza Se Despoja De La Piel De Oveja, a rabid publication advocating the overthrow of government and the substitution of anarchy. Upon his exile from Mexico he came to the United States, where, together with his brother Enrique, he was connected with the publication of Regeneracion at Los Angeles.

In 1918 he was convicted of a violation of section 211 of the Criminal Code, section 3 of title 1, section 3 of title 9 of the espionage act, and section 19 of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, commonly known as the trading with the enemy act, for the printing of articles in Regeneracion tending to incite murder or assassination. He was sentenced to a term of 20 years in the penitentiary. Because of several previous convictions of a less anarchistic nature he was given the severe sentence which the court imposed. He had been previously convicted on two occasions and sentenced for short terms. He commenced to serve his term at McNeil Island but, due to the climate, was later transferred to Leavenworth, where he died in November of this year. Together with his brother Enrique, he was the source of considerable trouble both in Mexico and in the United States and was looked upon as one of the most pronounced Mexican anarchists with which this country has had to deal.

Very truly yours, W. J. BURNS, Director.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY IN CHARGE OF PARDONS,
Washington, D. C., November 28, 1922.

(Memorandum for the Attorney General in re Ricardo Flores Magon.)

Magon was convicted in the United States District Court for the Southern District of California, at Los Angeles, for publishing in a foreign language an article containing anarchistic propaganda tending to cause insubordination and refusal of duty in the military and naval service and to discourage enlistment, and also of sending such article through the mails without filing an English translation thereof with the postmaster, and of conspiracy to commit such offenses in violation of section 3, title 2, and section 3, title 12, of the act of June 15, 1917, commonly known as the espionage act; section 19 of the act of October 6, 1917, known as the trading with the enemy act; and sections 211 and 36 of the United States Criminal Code.

Magon was found guilty on all six counts of the indictment, with the exception of count 2, to which a demurrer was sustained, and he was sentenced July 19, 1918, to two years' imprisonment on the first count and to pay a fine of $5,000; 20 years on the third count and to pay a fine of $5,000; five years on the fourth count and to pay a fine of $5,000; one day in the county jail on the fifth count; and five years on the sixth count and to pay a fine of $5,000, the whole aggregating a sentence of 20 years and 1 day and a fine of $20,000, to take effect at the expiration of a sentence already imposed, June 22, 1916, against Magon of one year and one day in the McNeil Island penitentiary and a fine of $1,000 for mailing indecent matter tending to incite murder and assassination.

Regarding the fine of $20,000, the court provided that upon the payment of the sum of $5,000—the amount of the fine imposed on the first count—the same should operate in full satisfaction of the fines imposed on counts 3, 4, and 6. The two sentences, therefore, aggregated an imprisonment of 21 years and 1 day and a fine of $6,000.

With regard to the first case, the facts in which show the character and attitude of Magon and his associates to the Government, he was charged, with others, with having signed a manifesto, dated September 23, 1911, of the Mexican Liberal Party, addressed to Mexicans and published in Regeneracion, stating, among other things, that "the Mexican Liberal Party recognizes that the so-called right of property is an iniquitous right, because it compels a great majority of human beings to work and suffer for the satisfaction and ease of a small number of capitalists." (R. Case 1071, p. 51.)

Also that "the Mexican Liberal Party recognizes that authority and the clergy are the mainstay of the iniquity of capital, and therefore the organizing junta of the Mexican Liberal Party has solemnly declared war against authority, war against capital, war against the clergy." (R. 51.)

In an article appearing in the same issue of Regeneracion addressed to "Carrancista soldiers" and signed by Ricardo Flores Magon, Magon urges that they should rebel, turn their arms against their chiefs and officers, and without trembling pulse open fire with their rifles, because they are their enemies and are concerned in having conditions last forever so they can have a life of privilege." (R. 74.)

Magon also advocated the death of capital, of authority, and of clergy of all religions. (R. 75.) He also advocated the expropriation of land, houses, machinery, means of transportation, and merchandise becoming common property without distinction of men or women, race or color, and then urged that if anyone told the soldiers to the contrary, "Spit in his face, and even kill him, because it is necessary; it is absolutely necessary to initiate a revolutionary campaign of house cleaning." (R. 75.) He further stated that "We, the disinherited, must rid ourselves of those who are in our way if we can, by hook or crook, the same as we get rid of a tiger, as we annihilate the rattlesnake, as we crush the tarantula." (R. 76.)

With regard to case No. 1421, in which Magon was sentenced July 19, 1918, to 20 years in the penitentiary and a fine of $5,000, provided that fine was paid, the indictment was based on a manifesto dated March 6, 1918, directed to the members of the Mexican Liberal Party, the anarchists of the whole world, and the Mexican workingmen generally. It was signed by him and Librado Rivera and published in Regeneracion in its issue of March 16, 1918, which manifesto is set out in full in the first count of the indictment.

Among other things, the manifesto recites, in substance, that the death of the old society is close at hand; that everything indicates with force of evidence that the death of the bourgeoise society will come unexpectedly; that the workingman will go on strike, not taking into account that he injures his country's interests, conscious that the country is not his property but the property of the rich.

The manifesto, after making mention of the discontented faces seen on the streets, in saloons, in the theaters, and in the street cars, refers to the discontent in the homes where is "mourned the departure of a son called to the war, or hearts oppressed and eyes moistened when thinking that tomorrow, perhaps even to-day, the boy who is the joy of the hut, the youngster who with his frankness and gentility wraps in splendor the gloomy existence of the parents in senescence will be but by force torn from the bosom of the family to face, gun in hand, another youngster who, like himself, was the enchantment of his home and whom he does not hate and can not hate, for he even does not know him." The manifesto continues with the statement that—

"The flames of discontent revived by the blows of tyranny each time more enraged and cruel in every country and here and there, everywhere, and in all parts, the fists contract, the minds exalt, the hearts beat violently, and where they do not murmur they shout, all sighing for the moment in which the calloused hands during hundreds of centuries of labor, they must drop the fecund tools and grab the rifle, which nervously awaits the caress of the hero. * * * It is the moment preceding the greatest political and social catastrophe the history registers, the insurrection of all people against existing conditions." (R. pp. 12–13.)

The manifesto further recites that—

"It is precise that all of us, all that do not believe in government, all that are convinced that government whichsoever its form may be and whoever may be the head, it is tyranny, because it is not an institution created for the protection of the weak but to support the strong, we place ourselves at the height of circumstances and without fear propagate our holy anarchist ideal, the only just, the only human, the only true." (R. 13–14.)

The third count, which is the count on which a sentence of 20 years was imposed, charged that the manifesto was issued for the purpose, when the United States was at war, of causing and attempting to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States.

For the purpose of showing the intent with which the language found in the manifesto was used, the Government introduced in evidence a speech delivered by Magon on May 27, 1917, and published in the issue of Regeneracion of July 28, 1917, the speech being made in an Italian hall at a meeting organized by the International Workers' Defense League in defense of their comrades Raul Palma and Odilon Luna. In this speech Magon, after reciting the arrest of Palma and Luna, states as follows:

"The words of the anarchist are words of truth and justice. If because this country is engaged in the European carnage our words are obnoxious, they are undoubtedly to the interests of the capitalist class, but not to the interests of the people who are the producers of all wealth. Our words hurt those who take advantage of the European slaughter to fill their coffers. * * *

"Our words hurt all of those who live from the labor of others; our words hurt the parasites, the useless, and noxious beings who suck the blood of the people. The clergyman, the bourgeois, and the ruler; these are the ones who are injured by our words. So much the worse for them, so much the better for us!

"That the country is at war and that is why we can not talk. Bully reason this! It is precisely because the country is engaged in a war for the declaration of which the opinion of each and all of its inhabitants was not taken into account that we must talk, and we must talk high and loud, hurt whom it may, and no matter what the consequence of our words may be. What interest have we the disinherited in this war? Are we the wretched going to have more bread for ourselves and for our dear ones? Are we going to be freer? No; we shall be forced, as poor that we are, to shoulder a rifle, and we shall be dragged to the trenches to be torn to pieces by grapeshot so that Rockefeller and Morgan and all the bankers, and all the merchants, and all the bandits who exploit the proletariat may increase their millions and thereby their power. We shall give our blood in the trenches that our masters may debauch in banquets the product of our sacrifice. We shall render our existence in the battle field, and when in the desolated home our dear ones mourn our banishment, and in it reign mourning, weeping, sorrow, and hunger, our hangsmen shall put in their pockets the price of our pain and sacrifice.

"We, the anarchists, can not shut up; we shall not shut up. So long as injustice reigns our voice shall be heard. We are not actuated by caprice but by the sovereign urge of reason which points the way of duty to us, and all injustice, all imposition, all exploitation shall have to stumble over our resistance and our protest." (R. pp. 43–45.)

Other testimony was introduced to show the intent with which the language set out in the manifesto was used. The Government further offered testimony to show that at the time of the publication of the articles above referred to Regeneracion was denied the privilege of the United States mail (R. 38–39); that many of the Army and Navy could be seen upon the streets of Los Angeles where there were also recruiting stations, and that in the territory of the recruiting officers there were a number of men of Mexican extraction who had enlisted in the service (R. 41).

On March 6, 1916, the Postmaster General forwarded to the department a report by a post-office inspector giving a history of the operations of Magon and Rivera as well as other violators of the law.

It is impracticable to go into this in a memorandum. Suffice it to say that Magon was a self-confessed anarchist and a dangerous man to be at liberty in any civilized country.

Now, with regard to Magon's physical condition and his recent death, the department had received repeated reports from the prison physician at Leavenworth concerning the physical condition of this man, and none of them indicated that he was in any serious condition. The chief complaint along that line from friends of the prisoner was that he was going blind. On August 30, 1922, Doctor Yohe reported as follows:

"In compliance with your request for report and remarks as to the physical condition of Ricardo Flores Magon, Register 14596, particularly, his eyesight, Doctor Stuart, our oculist, reports that the man has incipient cataract in both eyes, but that it is not far enough advanced to necessitate or warrant an operation; there is no probability of his becoming permanently blind in the near future, and his vision is twenty one-hundredths in both eyes with proper glasses. The doctor also states it will probable be some years before an operation for cataract will be necessary, but that he is ready to perform operation when indicated, and it is my opinion the doctor is fully competent to do this work.

"Magon has no trouble in getting around without glasses, and with them attends to all his duties in library. His general health is very good; he is in no way failing physically and is standing confinement well."

In a report dated March 20, 1922, Doctor Yohe stated that he had made a complete physical examination of the prisoner and found that he was in good health; that there was no sign of mental disorder; he was standing confinement well, and there was nothing critical or dangerous in his condition and no probability of deleterious effect resulting from confinement during the remainder of his term.

On April 8, 1922, Acting Physician McKee stated that a physical examination of the prisoner that day verified the previous report that there had been no material change; the report was a true statement of the prisoner's condition at that time and there was no evidence whatever of failing health.

Friends of the prisoner, including Mr. Harry Weinberger, an attorney of New York City, insisted that Magon was in a far more dangerous condition than the report indicated and asked permission to have the prisoner examined by an outside disinterested physician of his own selection. To this the department acceded, and Mr. Weinberger selected Dr. S. B. Langworthy, of Leavenworth, Kans., to make the examination. After the department had agreed to this and had written to the warden directing that he permit this prisoner to be examined by Doctor Langworthy, provided the prisoner or his friends defrayed the expense thereof, the department received a further letter from Mr. Weinberger asking that another doctor in Kansas City be substituted in the place of Doctor Langworthy. The Attorney General replied, stating that he had already directed the warden to permit the examination to be made; that he, Weinberger, had given no reason for the change which he desired to have made, and since the department had already acted upon and granted Weinberger's original request, he was not aware of any good or sufficient reason for rescinding the action.

Mr. Weinberger replied to the Attorney General October 11, 1922, stating that he did not feel it necessary to go into his reasons for wishing Doctor Burkhart, of Kansas City, to make the examination; that Burkhart was a doctor of high standing, and the request should be acceded to.

You will recall that you were absent from the city at this time. Weinberger continued to write almost daily, and I held his letters, making no reply, and in the interim Doctor Langworthy, of Leavenworth, having been advised by the warden that the department had consented to the examination, but without any direction to do so, went ahead and examined the prisoner.

Doctor Langworthy's report, which is a lengthy one, completely confirms the diagnosis and views of the prison physician regarding Magon. That report is hereto attached.

Magon died suddenly November 21, 1922, of heart disease. None of the reports of the prison physician, nor does the report of Doctor Langworthy, refer in any respect to the prisoner having heart trouble. Upon being advised of the prisoner's death, the department wired the warden for full information. The warden replied November 22, 1922, as follows:

"Your telegram Ricardo Flores Magon died suddenly of angina pectoris in his cell yesterday morning. Mailed letter informing you of death of Magon with statement from prison physician yesterday afternoon. Prison physician says repeated examination by him and special examination by Doctor Langworthy in his presence did not disclose any evidence of disease of heart. Prison physician says Magon was always given proper medical attention. Shipping Magon's body to-day to his wife in Los Angeles, Calif."

In the article or circular issued by the joint amnesty committee, 233 Maryland Building, this city, marked "Released to-day, a. m. November 27," on which I am asked to submit a memorandum, and which is attached hereto, I note that it is stated that Magon met his death while serving a sentence for expressions of opinion. This same claim that Magon was being punished merely for an expression of opinion was also urged in the court of appeals, and that court, in affirming the judgment of the district court, disposed of the contention by saying that "in a very recent case, Mead v. United States, 257 Fed. 639, 642, we had occasion to say that free speech in times of war is by no means the same thing as free speech in times of peace; and in a later case the Supreme Court held precisely the same thing in effect." (260 Fed. 811–813.)

When it is considered that the manifesto which was the basis of the indictment brought against Magon and his associates was issued when the United States was at war, with soldiers of the Army and Navy recruits stationed in and around Los Angeles and others being in process of recruiting for both services, it is not difficult to appreciate the far-reaching effect, inimical to the interests of the United States in the successful prosecution of the war into which it had entered, upon the mind of any wavering one into whose hands such manifesto might have fallen.

While the United States is nowhere specifically mentioned in the manifesto, yet frequent references are made to war, and the discontent in the homes of those mourning the departure of a son called to war is graphically depicted, and in this connection a political and social catastrophe prophesied. Such language, construed in the light of Magon's speech, which was printed in the same issue of Regeneracion, was, as above suggested, well calculated to inspire disloyalty and cripple the United States in its war operations.

The particular issue of the paper in question was intended not only to be mailed into Mexico but to individuals in this country. The manifesto was directed not only to members of the Mexican Party but to the anarchists of the whole world and its workingmen in general. The manifesto calls for "Activity, activity, and more activity." Activity to do what? They say, "Death of the old society is close at hand"; that it is the moment preceding the insurrection of all people against existing conditions, together with the declaration that they do not believe in government. To my mind this is much more than a mere prediction or expression of opinion. It is a call inciting the discontented to action—action to destroy the governments of all countries, including the Government of the United States.

It has been demonstrated, it seems to me, beyond all peradventure that these defendants are serving terms for something more than the forecasting of what is to occur in the future and the mere expression of opinions. They were inciting people to action to destroy all governments; and in this connection Magon raises the query, "What interest have we, the disinherited, in the war?" This query he makes at a public meeting, and then attempts to distribute it broadcast through his publication, Regeneracion. Can there be any question that in his call for action he and his associate Rivera had in mind the disintegration of our Army, that was still in process of making, and then the ultimate destruction of our form of government? I think not. They must therefore be considered as having violated the laws of our country, which were passed to be observed not only by our own citizens but by these aliens as well.

Respectfully,

JAMES A. FINCH,
Pardon Attorney.

P. S. Magon served a term of 18 months in the Arizona State Prison for conspiring to commit an offense against the United States and was released August 3, 1910. He served 30 days in St. Louis, Mo., for a criminal libel in 1905, also a term in McNeil Island for a violation of the neutrality laws.

Under date of March 6, 1916, the then Postmaster General forwarded to this department the report of a post-office inspector giving a history of the operations of petitioner and Magon, as well as other violators of the law. (Departmental file 180187-1.)

The inspector stated in substance, among other things, that the weekly publication Regeneracion was authorized admission to the second-class mail privilege at Los Angeles, Calif., post office on September 12, 1910, under the act of March 3, 1879; that at the time of its entry it was owned and managed by Anselmo L. Figueroa, but with him in editing and publishing the paper he had Enrique Flores Magon, Ricardo Flores Magon, Librado Rivera, and Antonio de Araujo. He stated, however, that as a result of indictments returned in Los Angeles in 1911 they were all convicted in June, 1912, and sentenced by the United States court to serve 1 year and 11 months in the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., for violating the neutrality act, except Antonio de Araujo, who was never apprehended, but from some point in Spain still contributed his writings to the paper.

The inspector also stated in substance that in 1903 petitioner Magon was arrested by the Mexican Government for inciting the people against it and was imprisoned, and that in 1901 he was again arrested for inciting a revolution in San Luis Potosi, Mexico, and he, together with his brother, Jesus Flores Magon, was imprisoned in Mexico City as leaders of the Liberty Party; that in 1902 petitioner and his brother Enrique were sentenced, to prison for again inciting the people to revolution, and that in the fall of 1902 the Magon brothers came to the United States in the hope of being able to propagate their ideas.

The post-office inspector states that during 1904 the Magon brothers went to San Antonio, Tex., and there published Regeneracion, but being unsuccessful, moved to St. Louis, Mo., in 1905, continuing the publication of the paper in that city, with petitioner Rivera, but after running a short time they were forced from St. Louis to Canada, where they remained until the latter part of 1906; that in the early part of 1907 the Magons, with Rivera, went to San Francisco, and then to Sacramento, Calif., where they established headquarters for the Liberal Party of Mexico; that later in the year they went to Arizona and there set on foot a military expedition against the Government of Mexico, where they were arrested, tried, and sentenced to an aggregate imprisonment of three years in the penitentiary at Yuma and Florence, Ariz., respectively.

The post office inspector states that upon regaining their liberty they, early in August, 1910, went to Los Angeles, and in the following month began to publish Regeneracion under the editorship of Anselmo L. Figueroa, with Enrique and Ricardo Flores Magon, A. L. Villareal and William C. Owen for a time being on the editorial staff, the tone of the paper, if possible, appearing more frankly revolutionary than ever. He says that during the early part of 1911 Enrique Flores Magon, Ricardo Flores Magon, Librado Rivera, with Antonio de Araujo, were in charge of its affairs, the last named having but a short time before been released from the Leavenworth Penitentiary after serving 18 months for violation of the neutrality law while secretary of the liberal party organization.

The inspector states that in February, 1911, these men set on foot through divers means a military expedition against the Government of Mexico by means of which they took control of and operated under their own direction Lower California, Mexico, the principal cities being Mexicali and Tia Juana; that they had an army of 500 men composed of outlaws, anarchists, Socialists, and Industrial Workers of the World, and that after several battles or skirmishes with the Mexican Federal Army they were successful in driving it from Lower California and confiscating all property belonging to Americans to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars.

The inspector states that this condition appears to have existed up to June 14, 1911, when upon a raid by a representative of the Department of Justice a wagonload of documents and other matter was obtained which proved sufficient to convict the five men composing the junta of violating the neutrality law, but after their arrest the Mexican Federal Army drove the rebels, who had been directed by the Magons, out of Lower California.

The inspector states that in the issue of Regeneracion of March 6, 1915, the publishers of the paper declared themselves representatives of the American Liberal Party, advising that the junta was at 2325 Ivanhoe Avenue, Los Angeles, and was formed by five members—Ricardo and Enrique Flores Magon, Antonio de Araujo, Librado Rivera, and Anselmo L. Figueroa, through which junta the army in Lower California received its instructions, and particularly so through Ricardo Flores Magon. He says that the principal generals of the junta were anarchists, socialists, and aliens, and of these quite a number were killed, and that duties were collected and arms and ammunition smuggled into Lower California with the full and complete knowledge of the five men named.

In conclusion the inspector expressed the view that the prime object of the newspaper, the editors of which were professional revolutionists, was for the dissemination of anarchistic utterances and beliefs; to incite people to revolt not only against the Government of Mexico but the authority of the United States; to villify the Chief Executive of the United States, and to incite persons along the southern border of the United States to commit arson, murder, and assassination. For these reasons he was decidedly of the opinion that the permit granting the entry of Regeneracion to the second-class mail privilege on September 12, 1910, should be revoked.

DECEMBER 12, 1922.

(Memorandum in re Ricardo Flores Magon.)

HISTORY.

In 1893 Ricardo Flores Magon was arrested by the Mexican Government for inciting the people against the Government of Mexico and was imprisoned. In 1901 he was again arrested for inciting a revolution in San Luis Potosi, Mexico, and because of which, with Jesus Flores Magon, he was imprisoned in Mexico City as a leader of the Liberal Party. In 1902 Magon, with his brother Enrique, was sentenced to prison in Mexico for inciting the people to revolution.

In the fall of 1902 the Magon brothers came to the United States in the hope of being able to propagate their ideas in greater tranquillity. During 1904 they went to San Antonio, Tex., and there published Regeneracion, but not being successful they moved to St. Louis, Mo., in 1905 and continued the publication of that paper in that city with Librado Rivera. However, in October of that year the Magon brothers were arrested on complaint of the Mexican Government, but the case was dismissed. Following this complaint they again set up their plant of agitation in St. Louis in 1906, but it was run for only a short time, because they were forced from St. Louis to Canada, where they remained until the latter part of that year, when they returned to Mexico for a short time, then went to El Paso, Tex. During all this time they were inciting the Mexican people, the anarchists, and socialists to revolt against the Government of Mexico.

In the early part of 1907 Ricardo and Enrique Magon, with Rivera, went to San Francisco and then to Sacramento, Calif., and established headquarters for the Liberal Party of Mexico in that city. Later on in that year they went to Arizona and there set on foot a military expedition against the Government of Mexico. Because of this act they were arrested, tried, and sentenced to 18 months in the penitentiary at Yuma, Ariz., then at Florence, Ariz., which aggregated a total sentence of about three years.

Early in August, 1910, these parties, having regained their liberty, came to Los Angeles, and the following month began to publish Regeneracion under the editorship of Anselmo L. Figueroa, with Ricardo and Enrique Magon and, for a time, A. L. Villareal on the editorial staff and William C. Owen as the English editor. Its tone, if possible, appeared even more frankly revolutionary than ever. However, later on John Kenneth Turner, author of Barbarous Mexico, and his wife edited a part of the English section of the paper and directed the policies advocated by the Liberal Party against the Government of Mexico.

During the early part of 1911 Ricardo and his brother Enrique, Librado Rivera, with Antonio de Araujo were in charge of its affairs, the last named, having but a short time before been released from Fort Leavenworth Penitentiary after serving 18 months for violation of the neutrality laws, while secretary of the Liberal Party organization. It seems that in February, 1911, these men set on foot, through divers means, a military expedition against the Government of Mexico, by means of which they took control of and operated under their own direction Lower California, Mexico, the principal cities being Mexicali and Tia Juana. They had an army of 500 men, composed of outlaws, anarchists, socialists, and Industrial Workers of the World. Several battles or skirmishes were had with the Mexican Federal Army, in which they were successful in driving the Federal Army from Lower California. They confiscated all property belonging to Americans to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars.

In the Regeneracion No. 205, issued March 6, 1915, at the bottom of page 4, the publishers of the paper declared themselves representatives of the American Liberal Party and advised that the junta was at No. 2325 Ivanhoe Avenue, Los Angeles, and formed by five members, Ricardo and Enrique Flores Magon, Antonio de Araujo, Librado Rivera, and Anselmo L. Figueroa. As a fact, it was from this junta that the army in Lower California received its instructions and particularly so through Ricardo Flores Magon. The principal generals were anarchists, socialists, and aliens, and of these quite a number were killed. They collected duties, the money from which was turned over to the junta at Los Angeles. Arms and ammunition were smuggled into Lower California, Mexico, through John K. Turner, with full and complete knowledge of the five men named.

This condition appears to have existed up to June 14, 1911, when a raid by representatives of the Department of Justice was made under the direction of the United States attorney at Los Angeles of the junta in Los Angeles, and a wagonload of documents and other matter was obtained which proved sufficient to convict the five men composing the junta of violation of the neutrality laws at Los Angeles, but Araujo escaped and has never been arrested, but is known to be in Spain. After these arrests the Mexican Federal Army drove the rebels, which had been directed by the Magons, out of Lower California, and they were delivered to Fort Rosecrans. Commissions from many of the officers were obtained at that time and held as evidence against the Magons and others, and materially assisted in the evidence produced upon which these men were convicted in the United States court in Los Angeles. Ricardo and Enrique Magon, Anselmo L. Figueroa, and Librado Rivera were convicted and sentenced to serve 1 year and 11 months in the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash.

During the period of incarceration of these men but few issues of the paper Regeneracion were mailed, and this was accomplished through William C. Owen, a naturalized Englishman and avowed anarchist, together with other friends of the prisoners.

After the release from the penitentiary of these individuals, or on October 2, 1915, Anselmo L. Figueroa died, and the paper was then edited by Ricardo and his brother Enrique, and in English by William C. Owen, and by these men the profits from its circulation were received. The publishing of this paper has been carried on at first one place and then another in Los Angeles. The papers were mailed to about 2,500 subscribers weekly.

REVIEW OF THE PAPERS.

An example of the articles appearing in Regeneracion is the following, which was taken from No. 206 of that publication, issued on Saturday, September 25, 1915, contained on page 1, column 2, in the Spanish language, and on page 2, column 3, reading as fo ows:

"Justice and not bullets is what ought to be given to the revolutionists of Texas, and from now on we should demand that those persecutions to innocent Mexicans should cease, and as to the revolutionists we should also demand that they be not executed (shot).

"The ones who should be shot are the 'rangers' and the band of bandits who accompany them in their depredations.

"Enough of reforms! What we hungry people need is entire liberty based on economic independence. Down with the so-called rights of private property, and as long as this evil right continues to exist we shall continue under arms. Enough with mockery! Poor people, whoever speaks to you about Carranzismo, spit in their face and break their jaws.

"Long live land and liberty!

"RICARDO FLORES MAGON."

In the issue of November 6, 1915, No. 211, an article appeared in Spanish, on page 2, column 7, reading as follows:

"So you see, brother Carrancistas, the problem which is going to be solved by the rebels who retain their arms, when Carranza becomes President, is the same problem that you will have to decide, because it affects you in the same manner. Your duty is to help, and for this purpose do not surrender your arms when the tr ops are ordered disbanded. What you should do at such a time, or before, if possible, is to rebel, turn your arms against your chiefs and officers, without trembling pulse open fire with your rifles, because they are your enemies and are concerned in having these conditions last forever so they can have a life of privilege.

"A strong heart, a firm pulse, and steady aim is all you need to exterminate your immediate oppressors.

"If you surrender your arms, you will return to your home in poverty, ready to sell your blood and strength to the rich at their own price.

"You will have accomplished nothing, but in the meantime your chiefs and officers will enjoy in that city all kinds of pleasures and honors and display on their breasts crosses and medals. If you remain in the Carranza army as a permanent soldier, you will be a bad man, an executioner of your brothers of your class, because you will help to serve the rich.

"Honor points to the road you should take; rebel against all governments until you attain the triumph of the principles comprised in the declaration of the 23d of September, 1911, exploited by the 'Mexican Liberal Party,' principles that advocate the death of capital, of authority, and the clergy of all religions.

"Decide to follow this road. Don't be deceived by the specious arguments of alleged wise politicians; these same arguments were used by the enemies of the great French Revolution to prevent the people from obtaining their political liberty. It was the argument of Porfirio Diaz to prevent you from obtaining your liberties; it is also the argument of the Carranza party used to prevent you from obtaining your economic liberty, which is the foundation of all liberties. This means the privilege of earning your living by working for yourself and being independent, and this can only be obtained, understand, by expropriation of land, houses, machinery, means of transportation, and merchandise becoming common property without distinction of men or women, race or color. He who tells you to the contrary spit in his face and even kill him, because it is necessary, it is absolutely necessary to initiate a revolutionary campaign of house cleaning.

"We, the disinherited, must rid ourselves of those who are in our way, if we can, by hook or crook, the same as we get rid of the tiger, as we annihilate the rattlesnake, as we crush the tarantula. Those who tell you that they are not prepared for this or other conquests which benefits you are the ones who have interest in delaying your emancipation so that in the meantime they can live at your expense."

Following this, on December 18, 1915, there was printed, published, and mailed hundreds of copies of "Regeneracion" under issue No. 217, which contained an article on page 2, column 5, reading as follows:

"Wilson is in connivance with Carranza because the old sharper has promised Wilson that he would favor American capitalists in Mexico. That is, to-day Carranza has promised to deliver the Mexican people, tied hand and feet, to the same repacious American plutocracy that had Diaz enslaved."

The evidence secured relative to the publication and circulation of the various issues of "Regeneracion" was presented to the United States grand jury for the southern district of California, and on February 18, 1916, an indictment was returned charging Ricardo Flores Magon, Enrique Flores Magon, and William C. Owen with violation of section 211, penal code of 1910. Photostat copy of the indictment is attached hereto and marked "Exhibit No. 1."

Ricardo Flores Magon was convicted on the second and third counts as charged in the indictment, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment in the United States penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., for a term of one year and one day.

In connection with the conviction of Ricardo and his brother Enrique, the following is quoted from an order by Federal Judge Oscar A. Trippet, denying motion in arrest of judgment on September 20, 1916:

"Now, it seems to me that these defendants have got no right to come under the American flag, a flag that is supposed to be the grandest emblem of freedom in all the world, and they have got no right to come here and do things that may involve this country into war with Mexico. They have got no right to seek the protection of the American flag in order to fight the battles they may have in Mexico. They have been here now for 16 years, the evidence in this case shows, at all the times in trouble with this Government, violating its laws. They have got no right to do that; they are aliens to this country; they are aliens to our people; I think it would be very much more becoming of them if they would be down there in Mexico with a musket fighting for their rights, as they claim, or fighting for whatever they want to fight for instead of doing things that at the present time indicates may get us into trouble, and God forbid that we may have it."

ACTIVITIES AFTER CONVICTION FOR VIOLATION OF SECTION 211, PENAL CODE, IN MAY, 1916.

Ricardo Flores Magon continued his activities, and in a speech which he delivered on Sunday, May 27, 1917, at a meeting organized by the International Workers' Defense League in defense of Raul Palma and Odilon Luna, he made reference to himself as an anarchist. This speech is quoted in its entirety:

"Comrades: All of you know that on the 6th of this month, and while they spoke to the workers congregated at the Plaza, Raul Palma and Odilon Luna were arrested by some members of the police of this city. Palma and Luna were making use of the right that all human beings have to expose their ideas for their acceptance or rejection. The utmost composure reigned at the meeting and all indicated that the act would end happily and with great benefit from the ideals of human emancipation that the proletarian speakers propounded; but the police, headed by one Rico, took it upon themselves to inject disorder where order reigned and dragged the speakers to jail. Now, the Federal authorities are trying to deport Palma and Luna to Mexico because they are anarchists, so that Carranza may shoot them. For they will not be delivered to Zapata, they will not be delivered to Villa, neither shall they be put in the hands of Cedillo, of Pelaez, of Sibalaume, or of any other rebel; Palma and Luna will be put at the disposal of the cowardly and cunning enemy of the working class; they shall be put in the hands of Venustiano Carranza, the lackey of Wilson and of the bandits of Wall Street. The pretext used for these deportations of members of the proletarian class is that their utterances are injurious to the country owing to the special circumstances in which it finds itself. In reality anarchist doctrines are not injurious to any country, but to the pocketbooks of the vampires who live from the sweat of the workers. The words of the anarchist are words of truth and justice. If because this country is engaged in the European carnage, our words are obnoxious, they are undoubtedly, to the interests of the capitalist class; but not to the interests of the people who are the producers of all wealth. Our words hurt those who take advantage of the European slaughter to fill their coffers. Our words hurt the enemies of humanity; our words hurt only those who are interested in the subsistence of the inequality of fortunes; but in what way do our doctrines hurt human beings who waste their existence in the factory and the shop? What injury does the peasant suffer by our words who is obliged to work a land that is not his, and who bent and jaded deposits in the endless furrow, with the seeds that shall produce rich grain for the master, his sweat, his health, and his hopes? How can the words of the anarchist hurt the man or woman who has to work in order to live?

"Our words hurt all of those who live from the labor of others; our words hurt the parasites, the useless and noxious beings who suck the blood of the people. The clergyman, the bourgeois, and the ruler; these are the ones who are injured by our words. So much the worse for them, so much the better for us!

"That the country is at war and that is why we can not talk. Bully reason this! It is precisely because the country is engaged in a war for the declaration of which the opinion of each and all of its inhabitants was not taken into account, that we must talk, and we must talk high and loud, hurt whom it may and no matter what the consequence of our words may be. What interest have we, the disinherited, in this war? Are we the wretched, going to have more bread for ourselves and for our dear ones? Are we going to be freer? No; we shall be forced, as poor as that we are, to shoulder a rifle, and we shall be dragged to the trenches to be torn to pieces by grapeshot, so that Rockefeller and Morgan and all the bankers, and all the merchants, and all the bandits who exploit the proletariat may increase their millions and thereby their power. We shall give our blood in the trenches that our masters may debauch in banquets the product of our sacrifice. We shall render our existence in the battlefield, and when in the desolated home our dear ones mourn our banishment, and in it reign mourning, weeping, sorrow, and hunger, our hangmen shall put in their pockets the price of our pain and sacrifice.

"We, the anarchists, can not shut up; we shall not shut up. So long as injustice reigns, our voice shall be heard. We are not actuated by caprice, but by the sovereign urge of reason which points the way of duty to us, and all injustice, all imposition, all exploitation shall have to stumble over our resistance and our protest.

"Comrades: The order of the day put in force by our tyrants is silence. Do you suffer? Very well, devour your bitterness in silence. Does injustice make you indignant? So much the worse for you, for you shall have to swallow your rage.

"For tyranny, silence is a virtue, and the best citizen, in spite of the blood that humanity has shed in the struggle for liberty, continues to be he who steadfastly observes the black maxim that that, to the shame of this country, continues to embrace the entirety of duties of the oppressed toward the oppressor; to see, hear, and hush.

"In this century of the aeroplane and the Zeppelin, in this epoch of the wireless and the submarine, when God tumbles from the skies at the blast of reason, and human thought reaches with its powerful wings the lofty summit of the anarchist ideal, the old order of see, hear, and hush is an anomaly; it constitutes an outrage which men possessing free minds reject with indignation.

"See, hear, and hush was tolerated in the obscure times of Torquemada and Arbues when humanity knew no other light than the livid flames of the inquisitorial fires; see, hear, and hush was the supreme law, before which the serf of the Middle Ages patiently bowed his head; but that damnable law was buried with the bones of its upholders under the ruins of the Bastile. Why excavate those ruins and extract from its sepulchre and poin the atmosphere with the corpse of a law which culture rejects, which a new conception of human dignity can not tolerate, and which threatens to drag us to a past of shame and humiliation, from which we are redeemed at the price of the blood and sacrifice of our ancestors?

"After the Bastile, after the Commune and privilege and tyranny, in Mexico and in Russia, feel in their throats the choleric hands of the people and from Chapultepec and from Petrograd emerge on their knees the last spawns of the Pharaohs and the caliphs, it is a shame, it is an outrage that the shady emblem of oppression be unfolded to the light of the sun, the black flag of despotism with its shameful inscription of see, hear, and hush.

"To hush, when all invites us to speak; to hush, when we must shout. Go on, you haughty overlords, swallow your order, for we the anarchists are not disposed to obey it; we can not shut up, we will not shut up, and we shall speak, cost what it may.

"To hush, remain with our lips sealed through fear when before our eyes you revel in your feast of hyenas; to hush, when you are draining millions of proletarian arteries in the fields of Europe to turn into gold the blood of the humble; to hush, when mourning invades millions of homes, until yesterday smiling and happy; to hush, when our hearts break to pieces before the sobs and tears of the orphans and the widows of the victims sacrificed to your ambition; to hush, when civilization is seriously menaced under the hoofs of allied and Teutonic Prussianism, is the same whip whether it be in the service of democracy or autocracy; to hush, when the progress slowly and painfully attained through centuries and centuries and centuries is at the point of perishing; to hush, so that those above may oppress those below at will, is something that we anarchists can not do, you contemptuous lords. Above your caprice is our right, right which we do not owe to you but to nature which has endowed us with a mind to think; and in the defense of a right—understand it well—we are ready for anything and to face it all, be it the dungeon or the gallows. Do not forget that right, no matter how much you may mutilate it, no matter how much you may crush it, no matter how much you may try to annihilate it; when it is persecuted the most, and when you are proudest of your triumph, it roars its vengeance in dynamite and belches lead from the barricade.

"The spring of every revolt is a violated right; the driving spirit of every insurrection is a wounded right; a persecuted right endangers the revolution. It was not powder that acted in the revolver of Pardinas, it was an outraged right; in the danger of Caserio it was a trampled right that flashed. To crush a right is to throw wide open the doors of rebellion. Press harder, you tyrants, that peoples need the rigors of oppression to remind them that they have the right to be free!"

This speech appeared in Regeneracion under date of July 28, 1917.

In the March 16, 1918, issue of Regeneracion, published by Magon, the following letter was quoted as received from Emma Goldman:

FEBRUARY 6, 1918.

DEAR FAITHFUL FRIENDS: How many have gone the way to Golgotha, and how many will have to go? Only time, the great redeemer of all who are made to suffer for their ideals, can tell. Time hangs heavily on those who cherish great hope, but it moves with surprising swiftness and far beyond our fondest dreams.

Russia stands a glowing proof of that. In 1905 the Tsar's troops drenched the streets of Petrograd and other cities with the blood of the revolutionists. In 1917 the revolutionary troops, more human than those who did the butchery, drove the Tsar out of Russia.

This thought came to my mind when I was being dashed up Fifth in a police patrol automobile to the Pennsylvania Station on Monday, February 5.

The avenue and streets were lined with a curious mob awaiting the parade of the soldiers from Camp Upton. Like the soldiers of the Tsar before 1915 who saw in every revolutionist an enemy to their country, the American soldiers would have greeted me with scorn and jeers and at the command of their Tsar would have taken my life in the ignorant belief that they were saving their country from a dangerous enemy.

Will time do for America what it has done for Russia? Will her soldiers some day make common cause with her people? Who can say what the future will bring?

The idealist may not be a prophet, but he nevertheless knows that the future will bring change, and knowing he lives for the future he is giving infinite strength to support the present.

So I, too, dear friend, will be strengthened while in prison by the passionate belief in the future, by the hope that the two years taken out of my life may help to quicken the great events time has in store for the human race. With that as my guided star, confinement, convict's clothes, and the other indignities the guilty conscience of society heaps upon those it dares not face, means no hardship.

You will want to help me while I am in prison, I know. You can do so in various ways. First, take care of my love child, Mother Earth Bulletin. I leave to your sympathetic care. I know that you will look after her tenderly, so that I may find her bigger, stronger, and more worth while when I return from Jefferson. Secondly, spread my Bolsheviki pamphlet in tribute to their great courage and marvelous vision and for the enlightenment of the American people. Thirdly, join the League for the Amnesty of the Political Prisoners. And, finally, write to Berkman and myself. Always address us as Political Prisoners. Always sign your full name.

Good bye, dear friends, but not for long—if the spirit of the Bolsheviki prevails. Long live the Bolsheviki! May their flames spread over the world and redeem humanity from its bondage!

Affectionately, EMMA GOLDMAN,
United States Political Prisoner,
Jefferson Prison, Jefferson City, Mo.

(Mother Earth Bulletin, 4 Jones Street, New York City.)

In connection with the Goldman letter, it is interesting to note the following article which appeared in Regeneracion for February 9, 1918, page 1, column 5, entitled, "Goldman and Berkman," and signed with the initials "R. F. M.":

"The appeal of those two militant comrades has been declined by the Supreme Court, which decided that the law of the obligatory military service is constitutional. Consequently, Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, who so valiantly fought for the universal peace, will have to fulfill their sentences in the penitentiaries either of Jefferson or Atlanta.

"But the American Government evidently is not taking into the account the universal solidarity of the workmen. It apparently believes that the proletariat will accept with indifference the imprisonment of Emma and Alexander. However, it realized its delusion, because the Russian proletariat has been aroused and is demanding of this Government the liberation not only of those two comrades but also that of Thomas J. Mooney and of other martyrs of San Francisco.

"The anarchists of Petrograd are attempting to seize the American ambassador, Francis, and retain him as a hostage until our comrades will be freed.

"This is how the people are beginning to take the defense of its interests into its own hands.

"This is indicating that within a short time there will be no governments issuing orders above the heads of the people.

"The sun of anarchism is ascending upon the horizon. Blind are those that do not see it.

"R. F. M."

The above activities, together with a publication of a manifesto signed by Ricardo Flores Magon and Librado Rivera on March 6, 1918, resulted in the indictment of these two individuals for violation of section 3 of title 1 and section 3 of title 9 of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1917, and commonly known as the espionage act; section 19 of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, commonly known as the trading with the enemy act; and section 211 of the Federal Penal Code of 1910, as amended. The indictment was filed on April 19, 1918, and a photostat copy is attached hereto and marked "Exhibit No. 2."

A photostat copy of the March 16, 1918, issue of Regeneracion, containing the manifesto, which is translated in its entirety in the indictment, is attached hereto and marked "Exhibit No. 3."

On July 24, 1918, Ricardo Flores Magon was sentenced to 2 years and a fine of $5,000 on count No. 1; a fine of $5,000 and 20 years on count No. 3; 5 years and $5,000 on count No. 4; 5 years and $5,000 on count No. 6. It was ordered that a payment of $5,000 would satisfy all fines and, further, that the penitentiary sentence would run concurrently.

Ricardo Flores Magon was delivered to the Federal penitentiary at McNeil Island, Wash., August 25, 1918. Magon requested to be transferred to the Leavenworth Penitentiary in view of his health and the Government complied with his request and he was transferred to that penitentiary on November 3, 1919.

It is very interesting to note the following statements made by Enrique Flores Magon, the brother of Ricardo, during a hearing conducted by Warren E. Long, immigrant inspector, on March 18, 1920, at the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., in connection with deportation proceedings against Enrique Flores Magon:

"Q. (By Immigrant Inspector Long.) Who is the publisher of the Regeneracion?—A. (By Enrique Flores Magon.) I was the editor and publisher.

"Q. And such of the articles that appeared in this paper were written by you?—A. By me and my brother Ricardo.

"Q. What are the aims and purposes of this paper, the Regeneracion?—A. The aims and purposes of this paper are the overthrow of the Government of Mexico and in doing justice to the Mexican people.

"Q. How is this overthrow to be effected?—A. In Mexico it is impossible to come to the polls, for all officialdom is corrupt; therefore, as there is no freedom at all, we had to resort to revolutionary means by armed force. Now, once a revolution is afloat, we have been teaching to the Mexican people not to lay down their arms until everything that has been taken away from them should fall back into their hands.

* * * * * * *

"Q. (By Immigrant Inspector Long.) I will also introduce the record of the hearing accorded Juan Villanueva, and you can examine this entire record, but your attention is particularly called to the testimony on page 3, beginning on page 2, and on page 3, in which Villanueva is asked, "You know, do you not, that Ricardo Flores Magon, who is now in the Federal prison at McNeils Island, Seattle, Wash.; and his wife, Maria B. Magon; his brother, Enrique Flores Magon; and Tomas Martines, are all anarchists?—A. The whole world knows that they are anarchists."

There has been some contention that Ricardo Flores Magon was not an anarchist. In this connection, I desire to quote the following paragraph from a communication directed to the Department of Justice, dated November 3, 1922, by Harry Weinberger, attorney for Magon:

"By the time this goes through the usual channels of action by the Attorney General and the President, I presume the hearing by the Department of Labor will have been completed. Both Magon and Rivera admit they are anarchists and therefore you can proceed on your report on that basis."

Ricardo Flores Magon died in Leavenworth Penitentiary on November 21, 1922, from angina pectoris.

EXHIBIT I.

In the district court of the United States in and for the southern district of California, southern division.

Wilson esta en connivencia con Carranza, porque este viejo embaucador ha prometido a aquel favorecer a los capitalistas americanos en Mexico; es decir. Carranza ha prometido a Wilson entregar al pueblo mexicano atado de pies y manos a la misma plutocracia rapaz americana a la que Diaz lo tuvo esclavizado.

Which said language being interpreted and translated into English means and is as follows:

Wilson is in connivance with Carranza, because the old sharper has promised Wilson that he would favor American capitalists in Mexico. That is to say, Carranza has promised to deliver the Mexican people, tied hand and feet, to the same rapacious American plutocracy that had Diaz enslaved.

And said newspaper of said indecent character was so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at said city of Los Angeles, to be transmitted by the post-office establishment to many and divers persons within the United States of America, and within the Republic of Mexico, the names of which divers persons are unknown to the grand jurors, and many copies of said newspaper were so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at one time and as one act to be so distributed by said post-office establishment and delivered, respectively, a copy each, to said many and divers persons.

Contrary to the form of the statutes of the United States in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the said United States.

SECOND COUNT.

And the grand jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present:

That Enrique Flores Magon, Ricardo Flores Magon, and William C. Owen, hereinafter in this indictment called defendants, whose full and true names, and the full and true name of each of whom, other than in this indictment stated, is unknown to the grand jurors, late of the southern district of California, did, on the 25th day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen, knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, deposit and cause to be deposited in the post office and the stations thereof at the city of Los Angeles, in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, and within the said southern division of said southern district of California, and within the jurisdiction of this honorable court, certain mail matter, to wit, a newspaper published and printed in the said city of Los Angeles and named and called the Regeneracion, which said newspaper did then and there contain certain indecent, vile, and filthy substance and language, and which said newspaper was a publication of an indecent character, and which said indecent, vile, and filthy substance and language was of a character tending to incite in the minds of persons reading the same murder and assassination, and which said substance and language was so printed and published in said Regeneracion in the Spanish language and was and is in the words following:

"Justicia y no balazos, es lo que lebe darse a los revolucionarios de Texas. Y desde luego, todo debemos exigir que cesen esas persecuciones a Mexicanos inocentes, y, por lo que respecta a los revolucionarios, debemos exigir cambien que no se les fusile.

"Quienes deben ser fusilados sou los 'rangers,' y la turba de bandidos que los acompanan en sus depredaciones."

* * * * * * * *

"¡Hada de reformas! Lo que necesitamos los hambrientos, es la libertad completa, basada en la independencia economica. ¡Adajo el llamado derecho de propriedad privada! Y mientras este derecho inicuo continue en pie, en pie continuemos y con las armas en la mano todos los prolentarios. ¡Basta de burlas! Proletarios: a quien os hable de carrancismo, escupidle el rostro y quebradle los hocicos.

"¡Viva tierra y Libertad!"

Which said language being interpreted and translated into English means and is as follows:

"Justice and not bullets is what ought to be given to the revolutionists of Texas, and from now on we should demand that those persecutions to innocent Mexicans should cease, and as to the revolutionists we should also demand that they be not executed (shot).

"The ones who should be shot are the 'rangers' and the band of bandits who accompany them in their depredations."

* * * * * * * *

"Enough of reforms! What we hungry people need is entire liberty based on economic independence. Down with the so-called rights of private property, and as long as this evil right continues to exist we shall continue under arms. Enough with lockery! Poor people, whoever speaks to you about Carranzismo spit in their face and break their jaws.

"Long live land and liberty!"

And said newspaper of said indecent character was so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at said city of Los Angeles, to be transmitted by the post office establishment to many and divers persons within the United States of America and within the Republic of Mexico, the names of which divers persons are unknown to the grand jurors, and many copies of said newspaper were so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at one time and as one act to be so distributed by said post office establishment and delivered, respectively, a copy each to said many and divers persons.

THIRD COUNT.

And the grand jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present:

That Enrique Flores Magon, Ricardo Flores Magon, and William C. Owen, hereinafter in this indictment called defendants, whose full and true names, and the full and true name of each of whom, other than in this indictment stated, is unknown to the grand jurors, late of the southern division of the southern district of California, did, on the 6th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1915, knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously, deposit and cause to be deposited in the post office and the stations thereof at the city of Los Angeles, in the county of Los Angeles, State of California, and within the said southern division of said southern district of California, and within the jurisdiction of this honorable court, certain mail matter, to wit, a newspaper published and printed in the said city of Los Angeles, and named and called the Regeneracion, which said newspaper did then and there contain certain indecent, vile, and filthy substance and language, and which said newspaper was a publication of an indecent character, and which said indecent, vile, and filthy substance and language was of a character tending to incite in the minds of persons reading the same murder and assassination, and which said substance and language was so printed and published in said Regeneracion in the Spanish language, and was and is in the words following:

"Ves ques, hermano carrancista, que el problema que tratan de resolver los rebeldes que van a quedar en pie, con las armas en la mano, cuando Carranza sea presidente, es el mismo problema que tienes que resolver tu, porque to afecta de la misma manera que a ellos. Tu debres ayudarlos, y para ello, no entreque las armas cuando se ordene el licenciamiento de tropas carrancistas. Lo que debes hacer en ese momento, o antes si te es posible, es rebelarte, volviendo tu fusil sobre tus jefes y oficiales, sin que te tiemble el pulso al disparles tu arma, porque son tus en emigos, questienen interes en que perduren las instituciones que los capacitan para llevar una vida privilegiada. Un corazon bien puesto, pulso firme y certera punteria, eso es lo unico que necesitas para acabar con tus inmediatos verdugos.

"Sin rindes tu arma, regresaras a tu hogar en la miseria, dispuesto a vender tu fuerza muscular a cualquier burgues por lo que tenga a bien darte. Nada habras ganado, mientras tus jefes y oficiales gozaran en la ciudad de toda clase de placeras, saborearan distinciones y ostentaran cruces y medallas en al pecho. Si te quedas enel ejercito carrancista como soldado permanente, seres un esbirro, un verdugo de tus hermanos de clase, porque serviras para apoyar a los ricos.

"Lashonrades te senala el camino que debes tomar: El de la rebeldia contra todo gobierno hasta alcanzar el triunfo de los principios contenidos en el manifiesto de 23 de septiembre de 1911, expedido por la Junta Organizadora del Partido Liberal Mexicano, principios que abogan por la muerte del Capital, de la autoridad y del Clero de todas las religiones.

"Decidate a seguir este camino. Que no te enganen los sabihondos con la majaderia de que necesitas tal o cual preparacion para emprender una lucha semejante. Esas son argucias de politicos; esos son sofismas propalados y fomentados por tus enemigos, aun cuando ellos se presenten con el caracter de amigos tuyos. Fue el argumento de los enemigos de la gran revolucion Francesa, para impedir que se diera al pueblo la libertad politica; fue el argumento de Porfirio Dias para impedir que se te dieran libertades; es el argumento de los policios carrancistas para que no obtengas la libertad economica, base de todas las libertados, y que no es otra que la facultad de ganarse la vida, por medio del trabajo, sin necesidad de depender de nadie, facultad que se consigue solamente, entiendole bien, solamente, haciendo que la tierra, las casas, la maquinaria, los medios de transportacion y los efectos almacenados, pasen a ser, por medio de la expropiacion, la propiedad coman de todos, hombres y mujeres, sin distincion, de rasa ni color. A quien te diga lo contrario, escupela la cara y aun matalo, pues es necesario, es absolutamente necesario iniciar un severo procedimiento de limpia revolucionaria. Lo que nos estorba a los desheredados, debemos suprimirlo como se queda: Por la buena o por la mala! Como se suprime al tigre, come se aniquila a la vibora de cascabel, como se splasta a la tarantula. Los que te dicen que todavia no estas preparado para tal o cual conquista que te beneficia, son los que tienen interes en que se retarde tu emancipacion, para poder ellos entre tanto vivir a tus expensus."

Which said language being interpreted and translated into English means and is as follows:

"So you see, brother Carrancistas, the problem which is going to be solved by the rebels who retain their arms when Carranza becomes president is the same problem that you will have to decide, because it affects you in the same manner. Your duty is to help, and for this purpose do not surrender your arms when the troops are ordered disbanded. What you should do at such a time, or before, if possible, is to rebel, turn your arms against your chiefs and officers, and without trembling pulse open fire with your rifles, because they are your enemies and are concerned in having these conditions last forever so they can have a life of privilege.

"A strong heart, a firm pulse, and steady aim is all you need to exterminate your immediate oppressors.

"If you surrender your arms, you will return to your home in poverty, ready to sell your blood and strength to the rich at their own price.

"You will have accomplished nothing, but in the meantime your chiefs and officers will enjoy in the city all kinds of pleasures and honors and display on their breasts crosses and medals. If you remain in the Carranza army as a permanent soldier, you will be a bad man, an executioner of your brothers of your class, because you will help to serve the rich.

"Honor points to the road you should take; rebel against all governments until you attain the triumph of the principles comprised in the declaration of the 23d of September, 1911, expedited by the 'Mexican Liberal Party,' principles that advocate the death of capital, of authority, and the clergy of all religions.

"Decide to follow this road. Don't be deceived by the specious arguments of alleged wise politicians; these same arguments were used by the enemies of the great French revolution to prevent the people from obtaining their political liberty. It was the argument of Porfirio Diaz to prevent you from obtaining your liberties; it is also the argument of the Carranza party used to prevent you from obtaining your economic liberty, which is the foundation of all liberties. This means the privilege of earning your living by working for yourself and being independent, and this can only be obtained, understand, by expropriation of land, houses, machinery, means of transportation, and merchandise becoming common property without distinction of men or women, race or color. He who tells you to the contrary spit in his face and even kill him, because it is necessary, it is absolutely necessary to initiate a revoluntionary campaign of house cleaning.

"We, the disinherited, must rid ourselves of those who are in our way, if we can, by hook or crook, the same as we get rid of the tiger, as we annihilate the rattlesnake, as we crush the tarantula. Those who tell you that they are not prepared for this or other conquests which benefit you are the ones who have interest in delaying your emancipation so that in the meantime they can live at your expense."

And said newspaper of said indecent character was so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at said city of Los Angeles, to be transmitted by the post office establishment to many and divers persons within the United States of America and within the Republic of Mexico, the names of which divers persons are unknown to the grand jurors, and many copies of said newspaper were so deposited and caused to be deposited in said United States post office at one time and as one act to be so distributed by said post office establishment and delivered, respectively, a copy each to said many and divers persons.

Contrary to the form of the statutes of the United States in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the said United States.

The grand jurors of the United States of America, chosen, selected, and sworn within and for the division and district aforesaid, on their oath present:

and feloniously conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together to violate the laws of the United States of America, to wit, to violate section 3 of Title I and section 3 of Title XII of the act of Congress approved June 15, 1917, and commonly known as the espionage act; section 19 of the act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, commonly known as the trading with the enemy act; and section 211 of the Federal Penal Code of 1910, as amended, which said conspiracy was substantially as follows, to wit: That they, the said Ricardo Flores Magon and Librado Rivera, would write and cause to be written and published and cause to be published an article containing false reports and false statements which would tend to interfere with the operation and success of the military and naval forces of the United States; promote the success of its enemies; cause and attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, and refusal of duty in the military and naval forces of the United States; and would obstruct the recruiting and enlistment service of the United States; and which said article would be printed and caused to be printed, published and caused to be published, and circulated and caused to be circulated in a foreign language, to wit, the Spanish language, without first filing an English translation thereof with the postmaster of the city of Los Angeles, as required by law; and which said article they would publish and cause to be published in a newspaper called Regeneracion; and which said article so published they would deposit and cause to be deposited in the postoffice establishment of the United States for mailing and delivery by means of the said post-office establishment; and defendants intended that the said article would then and there be indecent and contain indecent matter and language.

That in furtherance of said conspiracy, combination, confederation, and agreement, and to accomplish the object thereof, the said Ricardo Flores Magon and Librado Rivera did, on or about the 16th day of March, 1918, publish and cause to be published in said newspaper so known as Regeneracion, a certain manifesto, in words and figures as follows, to wit:

MANIFESTO.

La Junta Organizadora del Partido Liberal Mexicano.

A los miembros del partido, a los anarquistas de todo el mundo y a los trabajadores en general.

Companeros:

El reloj de la Historia está próximo a señalar con su aguja inexorable el instante en que ha de producirse la muerte de esta sociedad que agoniza.

La muerte de la vieja sociedad está próxima, no tarda en ocurrir, y sólo podrán negar este hecho, aquellos a quienes interesa que viva, aquellos que se aprovechan de la injusticia en que está basada, aquellos que ven con horror la Revolución Social, porque saben que al día siguiente de ella, tendrán que trabajar codo con codo con sus esclavos de la víspera.

Todo indica, con fuerza de evidencia, que la muerte de la sociedad burguesa no tarda en sobrenir. El ciudadano ve con torva mirada al polizonte, a quien todavía ayer consideraba su protector y su apoyo; el lector asiduo de la prensa burguesa encoje los hombros y deja caer con desprecio la hoja prostituída en que aparecen las declaraciones de los jefes de Esatdo; el trabajador se pone en huelga sin importarle que con su actitud se perjudiquen los patrios intereses; consciente ya de que la patria no es su propiedad, sino la propiedad del rico; en la calle se ven rostros que a las claras delatan la tormenta, interior del descontento, y hay brazos que parece que se agitan para construir la barricada; se murmura en la cantina; se murmura en el teatro; se murmura en el tranvía, y en cada hogar, especialmente en nuestros hogares, en los hogares de los de abajo, se lamenta la partida de un hijo a la guerra o los corazones se oprimen y los ojos se humedecen al pensar que mañana, que tal vez hoy mismo, el mocetón que es la alegría del tugurio, el joven que con su frescura y su gracia envuelve en resplandores de aurora la triste existencia de los padres que los están en su ocaso, será arrancado del seno amoroso de la familia, para ir a enfrentarlo, arma al brazo, con otro joven que es como él e encanto de su hogar, y a quien no odia, y a quien no puede odiar porque ni siquiera le conoce.

Las flamos del descontento se avivan al soplo de la tiranía cada vez más ensoberbecida y cruel en todo país y aquí y allí, allá y acullá y en todas partes, los puños se crispan, las mentes se exaltan, los corazones laten con violencia, y donde no se murmura, se grita, suspirando todos por el momento en que las manos encallecidas en cien siglos de labor, deban dejar caer la herramienta fecunda, para levantar el rifle que espera nerviosa la caricia del héroe.

Compañeros: El momento es solemne; es el momento precursor de la más grandiosa catastrofe política y social que la Historia registra; la insurrección de todos los pueblos contra las condiciones existentes.

Va a ser, seguramente, un impulso ciego de las masas que sufren; va a ser, a no dudarlo, la explosión desordenada de la cólera comprimida apenas por el revólver del esbirro y la horca del verdugo; va a ser el desbordamiento de todas las indignaciones y de todas las amarguras, y va a producirse el caos, el caos propicio al medro de todos los pescadores a río revuelto; caos del que pueden surgir nuevas opresiones y tiranías nuevas, porque en esos casos, regularmente, el charlatán es el leader.

Toca, pues, a nosotros, los conscientes, preparar la mentalidad popular para cuando llegue el momento, ya que no preparar la insurrección, porque la insurrección nace de la tiranía.

Preparar al pueblo no sólo para que espere con serenidad los grandiosos acontecimientos que vislumbramos, sino para que sea capaz de no dejarse arrastrar por los que quieran conducirlo, ahora por camino de flores, a idéntica esclavitud o a tiranía semejante a la que hoy sufrimos.

Para lograr que la rebeldía inconsciente no forje con sus propios brazos la cadena nueva que de nuevo ha de esclavizar al pueblo es preciso que nosotros, todos los que no creemos en gobierno, todos los que estamos convencidos de que gobierno, cualquiera que sea su forma y quienquieraque se encuentre al frente de él, es tiranía, porque no es una institución creada para protejer al débil, sino para amparar al fuerte, nos coloquemos a la altura de las circunstancias y sin temor propaguemos nuestro santo ideal anarquista, el único humano, el único justo, el único verdadero.

No hacerlo, es traicionar a sabiendas las vagas aspiraciones de los pueblos a una libertad sin límites, como no sean los límites naturales, esto es, una libertad que no dañe a la conservación de la especie.

No hacerlo, es dejar manos libres a todos aquellos que quieran aprovechar para fines meramente personales el sacrificio de los humildes.

No hacerlo, es afirmar lo que dicen nuestros contrarios, que está muy lejano el tiempo en que pueda implantarse nuestro ideal.

Actividad, actividad y más acitividad, eso es lo que reclama el momento.

Que cada hombre y cada mujer que amen el ideal anarquista, lo propaguen con tesón, con terquedad, sin hacer aprecio de burlas, sin medir peligros, sin reparar en consecuencias.

Manos a la obra camaradas y el porvenir será para nuestro ideal.

TIERRA Y LIBERTAD.

Dado en Los Angeles, Estado de California, Estados Unidos de América, el día 6 de marzo de 1918.

LIBRADO RIVERA.

A true and correct translation of said manifesto is as follows, to wit:

MANIFESTO—THE ASSEMBLY OF ORGANIZATION OF THE MEXICAN LIBERAL PARTY.

To the members of the party, the anarchists of the whole world, and the workingmen in general.

COMPANIONS: The clock of history will soon point with its hands inexorable the instant producing death to this society already agonizing.

The death of the old society is close at hand; it will not delay much longer, and only those will deny the fact whom its continuation interests; those that profit by the injustice in which it is based; those that see with horror the approach of the revolution, for they know that on the following day they will have to work side by side with their former slaves.

Everything indicates with force of evidence that the death of the bourgeoisie society will come unexpectedly. The citizen with grim gaze looks at the policeman whom only yesterday he considered his protector and support; the assiduous reader of the bourgeoisie press shrugs the shoulders and drops with contempt the prostituted sheet in which appear the declarations of the chiefs of State; the workingman goes on strike, not taking into account that by his action he injures the country's interest, conscious now that the country is not his property but is the property of the rich; in the street are seen faces which clearly show the interior torment of discontent, and there are arms that appear agitated to construct barricades; murmurs in the saloons, in the theaters, in the street cars, in each home, especially in our homes, in the homes of those below where is mourned the departure of a son called to the war, or hearts oppressed and eyes moistened when thinking that to-morrow, perhaps to-day even, the boy who is the joy of the hut, the youngster who with his frankness and gentility wraps in splendor the gloomy existence of the parents in senescence will be but by force torn from the bosom of the family to face, gun in hand, another youngster who like himself was the enchantment of his home, and whom he does not hate and can not hate, for he even does not know him.

"The flames of discontent revived by the blow of tyranny each time more enraged and cruel in every country and here and there everywhere and in all parts, the fists contract, the minds exalt, the hearts beat violently, and where they do not murmur they shout, all sighing for the moment in which the calloused hands during hundred centuries of labor, they must drop the fecund tools and grab the rifle which nervously awaits the caress of the hero." * * * "It is the moment preceding the greatest political and social catastrophe the history registers, the insurrection of all people against existing conditions."

It will be surely a blind impulse of the masses which suffer, it will be without a doubt, the disorderly explosion of the fury restrained, hardly by the revolver of the bailiff and the gallows of the hangman; it will be the overflow of all the indignation and all the sorrows and will produce the chaos, the chaos favorable to all who fish in turbid waters; chaos from which may sprout new oppressions and new tyrannies for in such cases, regularly, the charlatan is the leader.

It falls to our lot, the intellectual, to prepare the popular mentality until the moment arrives, and while not preparing the insurrection, since insurrection is born of tyranny.

Prepare the people not only to await with serenity the grand events which we see glimmer, but to enable them to see and not let themselves be dragged along by those who want to induce them, now over a flowery road, toward identic slavery and a similar tyranny as to-day we suffer.

To gain that the unconscious rebelliousness may not forge with its own hands a new chain that anew will enslave the people, "it is precise, that all of us, all that do not believe in government, all that are convinced that government whichsoever its form may be and whoever may be the head, it is tyranny, because it is not an institution created for the protection of the weak, but to support the strong, we place ourselves at the height of circumstances and without fear propagate our holy anarchist ideal, the only just, the only human, the only true."

To not do it, is to betray, knowingly, the vague aspirations of the populace to a liberty without limits, unless it be the natural limits; that is, a liberty which does not endanger the conservation of the specie.

To not do it, is giving free hand to all those who desire to benefit merely their own personal ends through the sacrifice of the humble.

To not do it, is to affirm what our antagonists assure, that the time is still far away when our ideals will be adopted.

Activity, activity, and more activity, is the demand of the moment.

Let every man and every woman who loves the anarchist ideal propagate with tenacity, with inflexibility, without heeding sneer, not measuring dangers, and without taking on account the consequences.

Ready for action and the future will be for our ideal. Land and liberty.

AL BORDE DEL ABISMO.

La burguesia se encuentra al borde de un abismo, de un abismo ahondado con sus uñas rapaces, de un abismo ahondado todavia más a dentelladas de jabali furioso.

La burguesia se encuentra al borde de un abismo, de un abismo profundo y negro abierto en siglos y siglos de opresión y de crimen.

Y la burguesia resbala hacia ese abismo en un suelo saturado de sangre y de lágrimas, sangre y lágrimas que su crueldad ha hecho derramar.

En vano intenta afirmar su planta en un suelo hostil a la tirania y fija la mirada en el horizonte obscuro con la esperanza de descubrir la mano nervuda que ha de impedir su irremediable caida.

No hay ancla de salvación en perspectiva no hay una brizna de yerba a la cual asirse, no hay un hierro candente al alcance de la mano.

El derrumbamiento es fatal; un soplo airado, que es como el aliento colérico de toda una humanidad que sufre, la empuja a las tinieblas del abismo, del abismo profundo ye negro abierto en siglos y siglos de opresión y de crimen.

Es el soplo inexorable de las masas proletarias cansadas del yugo, ahitas de amargura, rebosantes de odio.

Es el soplo formidable de las obscuras falanjes de la miseria, el aliento calido de los desheredados que se resuelven ya a enarbolar sus andrajos como bandera de reivindicación y de represalia, como estandarte de justicia y de venganza.

La burguesía tiembla bajo un cielo en que se van apagando todos los soles que la brindaban calor y la daban vida: Díaz, desaparecio; Nicolás, se desyaneció en las t nieblas; Huerta, se eclipsó; Kerensky, es un astro errante y sin brillo; Carranza, se opaca; Wilson, pierde su lustre; Menocal, enlodado, chorrea fango; Alfonso, pierde el equilibrio, y para sostenerse siquiera por un instante, comete la estupidez de apoyar el pie en el cuello proletario; Irigoyen, se hunde; Guillermo, condenado por la conciencia humana, bate furiosamente las alas en el lodo como un buitre herido.

Los soles se opacan! Los soles se mueren!

En la noche cerrada, Poincaré parpadea como la luz de una linterna de ventorro, y Eduardo apenas brilla como la luz amarillenta de una cerilla.

Esta gran tragedia bien podría tener por título. La muerte de los Dioses o El Crepúsculo de los Idolos.

Y qué muerte y qué crepósculo tan sin gloria y tan sin brillo!

Ya en el borde del abismo, la burguesía quiere jugar su última carta; no se resigna a morir; no puede renunciar a sus placeres y a sus privilegios sacados del sudor y de las lágrimas del pobre, sin dar las últimas dentelladas y los postreros zarpazos.

Y los zarpazos y las dentalladas se dirigen hoy contra Rusia, fuente de donde manan intrépidas corrientes de rebeldía fecunda, y mañana se dirigirán contra México, fértil admácigo de reivindicaciön proletaria.

Los gobiernos, astros moribundos, se confabulan para desplomarse sobre Rusia, y un sol enorme, el Japón, se precipita a gran priso sobre Siberia, con la esperanza de sofocar con su mole el incendio revolucionario, cuyo calor desentumece los miembros ateridos del proletariado universal.

Al calor de esa lumbre cobran animo los tímidos y los fuertes aspiran a pulmones amplios el ambiente saturado de rebeldía, señalando a las masas medrosas el resplandor que de Rusia se extiende por el orbe entero.

El terreno está abonado para la nueva cosecha: la emancipación proletaria.

El reinado de la burguesía está por terminar.

Nadie la ha matado: se ha suicidado!

Un piadoso puntapié y desaparecerá en las tinieblas de su propia obra.

MANIFIESTO—LA JUNTA ORGANIZADORA DEL PARTIDO LIBERAL MEXICANO—A LOS MIEMBROS DEL PARTIDO, A LOS ANARQUISTAS DE TODO EL MUNDO Y A LOS TRABAJADORES EN GENERAL.

Compañeros: El reloj de la Historia está próximo a señalar con su aguja inexorable el instante en que ha de producirse la muerte de esta sociedad que agoniza.

La muerte de la vieja sociedad está próxima, no tarda en ocurrir, y sólo podrán negar este hecho, aquellos a quienes interesa que viva, aquellos que se aprovechan de la injusticia en que está basada, aquellos que ven con horror la revolución social, porque saben que al día siguiente de ella, tendrán que trabajar codo con codo con sus esclavos de la víspera.

Todo indica, con fuerza de evidencia, que la muerte de la sociedad burguesa no tarda en sobrevenir. El ciudadano ve con torva mirada al polizonte, a quien todavía ayer consideraba su protector y su apoyo; el lector asiduo de la prensa burguesa encoje los hombros y deja caer con desprecio la hoja prostituída en que aparecen las declaraciones de los jefes de Estado; el trabajador se pone en huelga sin importarle que con su actitud se perjudiquen los patrios intereses, consciente ya de que la patria no es su propiedad, sino la propiedad del rico; en la calle se ven rostros que a las claras delatan la tormenta interior del descontento, y hay brazos que parece que se agitan para construir la barricada; se murmura en la cantina; se murmura en el teatro; se murmura en el tranvía, y en cada hogar, especialmente en nuestros hogares, en los hogares de los de abajo, se lamenta la partida de un hijo a la guerra o los corazones se oprimen y los ojos se humedecen al pensar que mañana, que tal vez hoy mismo, el mocetón que es la alegría del tugurio, el joven que con su frescura y su gracia envuelve en resplandores de aurora la triste existencia de los padres que están en su ocaso, será arrancado del seno amoroso de la familia, para ir a entrentarlo, arma al brazo, con otro joven que es como él e encanto de su hogar, y a quien no odia, y a quien no puede odiar porque ni siquiera le conoce.

Las flamas del descontento se avivan al soplo de la tiranía cada vez más ensoberbecida y cruel en todo país, y aquí y allí, allá y acullá y en todas partes, los puños se crispan, las mentes se exaltas, los corazones laten con violencia, y donde no se murmura, se grita, suspirando todos por el momento en que las manos encallecidas en cien siglos de labor, deban dejar caer la herramienta fecunda, para levantar el rifle que espera nervioso la caricia del héroe.

Compañeros: el momento es solemne; es el momento precursor de la más grandiosa catástrofe política y social que la Historia registra: la insurrección de todos los pueblos contra las condiciones existentes.

Va a ser, seguramente, un impulso ciego de las masas que sufren; va a ser, a no dudarlo, la explosión desordenada de la cólera comprimida apenas por el revólver del esbirro y la horca del verdugo; va a ser el desbordamiento de todas las indignaciones y de todas las amarguras, y va a producirse el caos, el caos propicio al medro de todos los pescadores a río revuelto; caos del que pueden surgir nuevas opresiones y tiranías nuevas, porque en esos casos, regularmente, el charlatán es el leader.

Toca, pues, a nosotros, los conscientes, preparar la mentalidad popular para cuando llegue el momento, ya que no preparar las insurrección, porque la insurrección nace de la tiranía.

Preparar al pueblo no sólo para que espere con serenidad los grandiosos acontecimientos que vislumbramos, sino para que sea capaz de no dejarse arrastar por los que quieran conducirlo, ahora por camino de flores, a idéntica esclavitud o a tiranía semejante a la que hoy sufrimos.

Para lograr que la rebeldía inconsciente no forje con sus propios brazos la cadena nueva que de nuevo ha de esclavizar al pueblo, es preciso que nosotros, todos los que no creemos en gobierno, todos los que estamos convencidos de que gobierno, cualquiera que sea su forma y quienquieraque se encuentre al frente de él, es tiranía, porque no es una institución creada para protejer al débil, sino para amparar al fuerte, nos coloquemos a la altura de las circunstancias y sin temor propaguemos nuestro santo ideal anarquista, el único humano, el único justo, el único verdadero.

No hacerlo, es traicionar a sabiendas las vagas aspiraciones de los pueblos a una libertad sin límites, como no sean los límites naturales, esto es, una libertad que no dañe a la conservación de la especie.

No hacerlo, es dejar manos libres a todos aquellos que quieran aprovechar para fines meramente personales el sacrificio de los humildes.

No hacerlo, es afirmar lo que dicen nuestros contrarios, que esta muy lejano el tiempo en que pueda implantarse nuestro ideal.

Actividad, actividad y más actividad, eso es lo que reclama el momento.

Que cada hombre y cada mujer que amen el ideal anarquista, lopropaguen con tesón, con terquedad, sin hacer aprecio de burlas, sin medir peligros, sin reparar en consecuencias.

Manos a la obra camaradas y el porvenir será para nuestro ideal.

REGENERACION.

Otra vez ve la luz pública este amado periódico, constando sólo de dos páginas.

Sin dinero y con la precisión gubernamental encima, este periódico, ni puede salir con regularidad, ni puede tener dimensiones mayores para contener abundante material de propaganda.

Pedimos a todos los que reciben este periódico, que procuren hacer entender a las personas con quienes tratan, que es necesario tener en pie hojas como Regeneracion, tan necesarias en este momento de la historia humana.

No pedimos imposibles: si cada trabajador que leé Regeneracion procurase que dos, tres o más de sus amigos o concocidos cooperasen con cualquier cantidad para el sostenimiento de la publicación, este periódico saldría con regularidad.

¿Lo haréis así, hermanos de miseria y aflicciones?

Esperamos vuestra decisión.

LA REVOLUCION RUSA.

Nikolai Lenine, el leader ruso, es en estos momentos la figura revolucionaria que brillantinás en el caos de las condiciones existentes en todo el mundo, porque se halla al frente de un movimiento que tiene que provocar, quiéranlo o no lo quieran los engreídos con el sistema actual de explotación y de crimen, la gran revolución mundial que ya está llamando a las puertas de todos los pueblos; la gran revolución mundial que operará cambios importantisimos en el modo de convivir de los seres humanos.

Las dimensiones de Regeneracion, reducidas a dos pobres páginas, nos forzan a no traducir todas las declaraciones de Lenine, y lo lamentamos, porque estas declaraciones, así como las del otro leader ruso, Léon Trotzky, arrojan fuerte luz sobre el movimiento, revolucionario ruso. Así, pues, allá va algo de lo que dice Lenine:

"La revolución de Rusia no es una revolución nacional sino que es una revolución mundial.

"Los bolsheviki son los verdaderos internacionalistas. Ellos son los únicos que decean ver extenderse por todo el mundo las ideas de la revolución.

"Los bolsheviki comprendieron deede hace largo tiempo, que la revolución, aunque de carácter politico al principio tiene que llegar a ser económica y social, y que este último carácter de ella nada tiene que ver con diferencias de raza ni fronteras nacionales, y por lo tanto, el futuro de nuestra revolución tiene que ser internacional. La revolución tiene que pasar sobre las fronteras y distinciones de raza, para apiastar las ideas opuestas a ella, porque si queda confinada a un pueblo que adopte principios de paz y de igualdad económica y social, será sofocada por los Estados capitalistas y autoritarios."

En sequida explica Lenine, que esto no quiere decir que los revolutionarios rusos van a llevar la guerra a los Estados capitalistas, puesto que tal cosa equivaldria a negar los principios fundamentales de la revolución, que aboga por la fraternización de todos los pueblos de la Tierra, y continúa de esta manera:

"Es un absurdo pensar que la democracia internationalista rusa pretenda alguna vez hacer la guerra a otros pueblos con el único fin de destruir monarquías extranjeras. Tal guerra estallaria sólo en el caso de que los existentes gobiernos europeos conspiraron, como es posible que lo hagan, para apiastar nuestra revolución con el propósito de impedir que se extienda a sus dominios.

"Nosotros continuaremos propagando nuestros ideales en todos los países, para obtener este resultado: en primer lugar, que la difusión de los ideales antimonárquicos y anticapitalistas, precipite la terminación de la guerra.

"Tal paz sostenida por los pueblos insurreccionados, es el programa más deseable.

"Incitamos también a la revolución a todos los países, porque por su propria naturaleza la revolución rusa no puede permanecer aislada.

"Las naciones deben ser organizadas ya sobre una base capitalista, o bien, sobre una base proletaria y anticapitalista. Los dos sistemas no pueden coexistir. Es imposible para Rusia existir sin bancos capitalistas e industriales, si ella tiene que tratar con países que todavía los tienen.

"Lejos de aislarse Rusia del resto del mundo, debe entrar en más íntimas relaciones con él, y como estas relaciones íntimas tienen que ser en su mayor parte relaciones fundadas en el intercambio de productos, es necesario que todos los países del mundo tengan un idéntico y homogéneo sistema económico.

"Como la revolución rusa nunca restaurará el sistema capitalista, se hace necesario que nosotros luchemos por la difusión de las ideas anticapitalistas en el extranjero."

* * * * * * *

Cuánto alientan las palabras de Lenine. Yano es la fraternidad universal un deseo sentido apenas por unos cuantos emancipados de prejuicios y errores de toda especie. Este deseo va penetrando a la médula de los pueblos; este deseo se hace carne y sangre.

Los sueños de los utopistas se confirman. Los "sensatos" y "cabezas frías" ya no nos llamarán locos a los anarquistas.

Bendita mil veces la carnicería europea que está produciendo tan espléndidos resultados! En tres años y medio de barbarie capitalista, se ha logrado más que lo que se hubiera ganado en cien años con nuestra propaganda de fraternidad y de justicia.

El viejo sistema se derrumba, hermanos de cadenas. Animo!

Que nadie flaquee en este momento en que se necesita que todos los que sufrimos los efectos de un sistema que nos aplasta, tengamos nuestras mentes preparadas para ver con serenidad lo que se acerca: la desaparición de todo lo que nos hace desgraciados: Autoridad, Capital y Clero.

RICARDO FLORES MAGON.

POR LA JUSTICIA—DISCURSO PRONUNCIADO EN EL LOCAL DEL CENTRO DE ESTUDIOS RACIONALES EL 17 DE FEBRERO DE 1918, EN EL MITIN DE PROTESTA CELEBRADO CONTRA EL ARRESTO DE RAUL PALMA.

COMPAÑEROS: La vieja sociedad, la sociedad injusta y cruel que condena al que trabaja y suda a toda clase de privaciones, y que premia la holganza de unos cuantos con todos los placeres de la vida; esta sociedad corrompida que no puede y que no quiete garantizar a todos los seres humanos el bienestar y la libertad; esta sociedad se desmorona, esta socidad se derrumba, esta sociedad está por desaparecer; pero va moribunda, todavia tiene fuerza para arrancar de nuestras filas, de las filas de los pobres, aquellos valientes que mayores esfuerzos han hecho para derribarla.

Raúl Palma es un trabajador, es un desheredado, es un proletario que comprende que todo ser humano, por el solo hecho de venir a la vida, tiene el derecho de vivir, tiene el derecho de satisfacer todas sus necesidades, y este sencillo principio de justicia social, de justicia humana, lo propagaba sin descanso, en la prensa, en la tribuna, en todas partes, ansioso de ver a sus hermanos de clase libres de cadenas.

Este fué su crimen: abrir los ojos a los trabajadores; este fué su delito: quitar la venda que cubria los ojos a sus hermanos, para hacerles ver el camino de su emancipación.

Por su actividad como propagandista, dos veces había sido arrestado antes de ahora. El hablaba en la Plaza, y sus palabras de verdad y de justicia no fueron del agrado de todos aquellos que quieren que se perpetúe este sistema, que hace posible que los que nada útil hacen gocen a expensas de los que con sus manos y su inteligencia mueven la industria y hacen el progreso. Nuestros amos, los burgueses, no podían vivir tranquilos cuando Palma se encontraba en libertad, porque sabían que este hombre, fuera de las rejas de la prisión, socaba los cimientos de la vieja estrustura social cuyo peso hemos soportado los de abajo por siglos y siglos.

Nuestros amos desean meter las manos en nuestros bolsillos, sin que opongamos los explotados la menor resistencia, y quieren gozar el producto de sus rapiñas, sin que de nuestros labios salga una frase de descontento, una palabro de protesta ni um gemido de angustia. Y todo aquel, que como Palma, inquieta a la burguesia; todo aquel, que como Palma, con sus actos y con sus palabras perturba la digestión de los que tienen satisfecho el estómago, es arrancado de su hogar y puesto en prisión, para escarmiento de los que no estamos contentos con este sistema de la injusticia y de la infamia, sin reflexionar que los que nos sentimos hombres resentimos el ultraje y no estamos dispuestos a volver la otra megilla para que se repita el atentado, sino que estamos listos, sucediere lo que sucediere, y desaparezca quien desaparezca a devolver golpe por golpe, ultrajé por ultraje.

A Raúl Palma se le acusa de haber quitado la vida a un dueño de una tienda y por añadidura polizonte, la noche del 13 de Julio de 1916, con el intento, según la policia, de apropiarse los efectos almacenados en la tienda. La acusación no puede ser más injusta, porque en la época en que se alega que Palma cometió el delito, este joven trabajador se encontraba prestando sus servicios valiosisimos a la causa de los desheredados en los talleres de Regeneracion, en la misma mesa en que yo trabajo, frente a mí, compartiendo mis desvelos y mis afanes por convertir a una humanidad que se arrastra y solloza, débil y doliente, que no tiene fuerza ni para quejarse, que no tiene valor ni para levantar la vista para medir el tamaño de sus opresores, en un conjunto verdaderamente humano apto para la libertad y la justicia.

Que Palma no es el autor del hecho por el cual se le tiene preso, es una verdad que salta a la vista. El no pudo estar al mismo tiempo trabajando codo con codo commigo escribiendo artículos para Regeneracion, y en el lugar en que se dice que occurió la muerte del burgués. Indudablemente que fué otro el autor del homicidio; pero nuestros opresores no quieren buscar al verdadero autor del hecho; no lo necesitan; a quien quieren perder es a Palma, a quien temen y a quien odian.

El verdadero autor del homicidio debe reir satisfecho en estos momentos por haber podido evadir la acción penal, gracias a la malquerencia que los de arriba profesan a Raúl Palma, mientras este joven obrero espera en su calabozo el momento de ser llamado para que el verdugo ponga en su cuello el lazo que ha de arrancarle la vida.

La acusación se basa en un anónimo que tal vez el mismo autor del delito escribió para desembarazarse de toda responsabilidad, y quién sabe si alguno de los interesados en hacer desaparecer a Palma, haya sido el autor de las líneas que han puesto a nuestro hermano en el presidio. Un anónimo es la base de esta feroz persecución. Un anónimo en que se denuncia a Raúl Palma como el autor del homicidio. En ningún país del mundo se persigue a una persona por acusaciones anónimas. La ley, tan opresora y enemiga del débil como es la ley, no concede al anónimo fuerza legal alguna, no porque la ley se interese por eldesvañdo, sino porque el anonimo puede implicar no solamente a una persona de nuestra clase, sino a los de arriba también. Pero en el caso de Palma, todo ha sido diferente. Una mano criminal trazó las líneas del anónimo, y en el acto se puso en juego la policía. No se denunciaba en el anónimo a un individuo apartado de la tremenda lucha que sostenemos los de abajo contra los de arriba, sino a Palma, al agitador obrero, al hombre que nos enseña y nos educa, al joven batallador que no contando todavía veintiún años de edad, tiene sin embargo la experiencia necesaria para decirnos a los que sufrimos la miseria y la opresión, por qué somos desgraciados, por qué nos encontramos abajo, cuando nuestras manos y nuestra inteligencia nos hacen acreedores a gozar de todas las ventajas que nos ofrece la civilización, la civilización que es obra nuestra, la civilización sostendida con nuestros puños y nuestro cerebro, la civilización que no existiera si nos negásemos a regar los campos con nuestro sudor y a desafiar la tisis y la anemia en el taller y en la fábrica. La civilización, hermanos de cadenas, es nuestra obra. No la hace el burgués, no es obra del ministro religioso, el gobernante no la impulsa. La civilización no brota de los palacios de nuestros amos, sino de nuestras manos y de nuestro cerebro. La civilización es hija de nuestro sacrificio en cada detalle de ella encontramos una gota de sudor de nuestros cuerpos fatigados, una lágrima de nuestros ojos y el aliento cansado de toda una humanidad atormentada y doliente.

Palma teñía que ser el blanco de las iras de nuestros verdugos, y por esa razón se encuentra preso. Nuestros opresores no quieren que el trabajador mexicano despierte, porque entonces ya no encontrarían trabajo barato y sus ganancias disminuirían. Ellos quieren vernos siempre sumisos, dispuestos a sopòrtarlo todo, y es por eso por lo que, cuando de la masa proletaria brota un hombre como Raúl Palma, todas las fuerzas de la reacción se ponen en juego para hacerlo desaparecer.

Toca, pues a nosotros, hacer sentir nuestra fuerza, demosstrar que estamos alerta para impedir que los nuestros, los de nuestra clase, los que nos educan sean arrebatados de nuestro seno.

El jurado de Raúl Palma tendrá lugar el 18 de Marzo, y se necesita dinero para su defensa. Si no lo ayudamos, será ahorcado y su muerte pesará sobre nuestras cabezás.

Sí, compañeros, la muerte de Palma será obra nuestra si no hacemos todo lo que se debe hacer por recatarlo de las garras del enemigo. Los que nos oprimen quieren arrancarle la vida; toca a los oprimidos manifestar su descontento y su protesta.

Si los oprimidos no hacemos nada por salvar a los nuestros, bien merecemos ser esclavos.

ON THE WAY TO GOLGOTHA.

FEBRUARY 6, 1918.

DEAR FAITHFUL FRIENDS: How many have gone the way to Golgotha, and how many will yet have to go? Only time, the great redeemer of all who are made to suffer for their ideals, can tell. Time hangs heavily on those who cherish great hope, but it moves with surprising swiftness and far beyond our fondest dreams.

Russia stands a glowing proof of that. In 1905 the Tsar's troops drenched the streets of Petrograd and other cities with the blood of the revolutionists. In 1917 the revolutionary troops, more human than those who did the butchery, drove the Tsar out of Russia.

This thought came to my mind when I was being dashed up Fifth in a police-patrol automobile to the Pennsylvania Station on Monday, February 5.

The avenue and streets were lined with a curious mob, awaiting the parade of the soldiers from Camp Upton. Like the soldiers of the Tsar before 1915, who saw in every revolutionist an enemy to their country, the American soldiers would have greeted me with scorn and jeers and at the command of their Tsar would have taken my life in the ignorant belief that they were saving their country from a dangerous enemy.

Will time do for America what it has done for Russia? Will her soldiers some day make common cause with her people? Who can say what the future will bring?

The idealist may not be a prophet, but he nevertheless knows that the future will bring change; and knowing he lives for the future, he is giving infinite strength to support the present.

So I, too, dear friend, will be strengthened while in prison by the passionate belief in the future, by the hope that the two years taken out of my life may help to quicken the great events time has in store for the human race. With that as my guiding star, confinement, convict's clothes, and the other indignities the guilty conscience of society heaps upon those it dares not face mean no hardship.

You will want to help me while I am in prison, I know. You can do so in various ways. First, take care of my love child, Mother Earth Bulletin, I leave to your sympathetic care. I know that you will look after her tenderly, so that I may find her bigger, stronger, and more worth while when I return from Jefferson. Secondly, spread my boylsheviki pamphlet in tribute to their great courage and marvelous vision and for the enlightenment of the American people. Thirdly, join the League for the Amnesty of the Political Prisoners. And finally, write to Berkman and myself. Always address us as political prisoners. Always sign your full name.

Good-bye, dear friends, but not for long—if the spirit of the boylsheviki prevails. Long live the boylsheviki! May their flames spread over the world and redeem humanity from its bondage!

Affectionately, EMMA GOLDMAN,
United States Political Prisoner,
Jefferson City, Mo.

LEAGUE FOR THE AMNESTY OF POLITICAL PRISONERS.

The purpose of this league is—

1. To educate the public to the fundamental distinction between political offenses and ordinary crime.

2. To work for the recognition in the United States of political prisoners.

3. To crystallize public sentiment in this matter so that it can be made a subject for representation at the general peace conference.

4. To obtain the release of all political offenders through a general amnesty as soon as peace is declared.

The league recognizes as political prisoners those who have been convicted for holding and advocating social and political opinions contrary or believed to be injurious to the country's war activities. The United States, unlike all countries in Europe where amnesty for political prisoners is in common usage, does not differentiate between the political offender and criminal prisoner, and has never granted amnesties for such political prisoners.

NUESTRA APELACION.

Por fin, nuestro caso ha sido presentado a la Suprema Corte para su revisión; pero esto no quiere decir que ya se haya reunido la suma necesaria para llevar el litigio hasta su trámite final.

Con algún dinero reunido, se dió el primer paso, el primer paso solamente, y se necesita con urgencia reunir fondos bastantes para todo el pleito, pues de lo contrario, en cualquier momento se nos arrestará y conducirá al presidio, porque ya se sabe que, sin dinero, no puede moverse la justicia burguesa.

Una carta de nuestro abogado Ryckman, fechada el 7 de este mes, nos informa que, si para el 7 de Abril proximo no hemos reunido la cantidad que se necesita, tendremos que ingresar al presidio, pues no se nos quiere esperar más. Nuestros amos tienen prisa de ponernos en el calabozo!

Así, pues, toca a nuestros amigos resolver el asunto. Nuestra libertad o nuestro cautiverio están en sus manos.

El abnegado luchador anarquista Domingo R. Rosas, que estuvo preso cuatro años en las bastillas texanas con Rangel, Cisneros, Alzalde y demás heroicos camaradas, se encuentra gravemente enfermo y es preciso que los compañeros prueben su solidaridad enviándole algún auxilio pecuniario. Domingo nada pide, pues este joven luchador no quiere que sus hermanos se sacrifiquen por él; pero es preciso ayudarlo para ver si se salva de la muerte este activo propagandista de nuestros ideales.

Los compañeros de Puente, Cal., han iniciado la solidaridad que debe haber para nuestro querido compañero Domingo. Una colecta levantada entre ellos dio el siguiente resultado: Santos Betancur, $1; Felipe Lucio, $1; Antonio Betancur, 65c; Un proletario, 25c; Ramon Tenorio, 25c; Matías Rodríguez, 20c; Francisco Betancur, 50c; y Refugio Solano, $2.

Que los solidarios compañeros de Puente tengan imitadores. Compañeros: a aliviar la situacion de un hermano en desgracia.

Puede enviarse correspondencia y dinero para Domingo, a la siguiente direccion: D. Ramos, Box 781, Uvalde, Texas.

LAS RAMERAS.

Dentro del bullicio y los placeres, foco de miserias y dolor, allí están las pobres rameras, despreciadas por la sociedad.

Defendiéndolas, se alza la voz del libertario, y grita: ¿Por qué desprecias a la pobre que tú mismo has envilecido? Tú has matado en ella sus mejores sentimientos; tú la engañaste con mentirosas promesas, con falsos halagos. . . y después que cayó, ¿qué hiciste por ella, qué refugio de consolación la brindaste, qué apacible morada de redención la ofreciste?

La arrojaste al insondable abismo del burdel, el hospital y el presidio.

Después huyes de ella como de la peste.

¿Por qué la acusas? . . .

¿Quién es el culpable? ¿Tú o ella? . . .

El servilismo es pasión tan incurable en el hombre, que aun en el momento de la suprema Libertad, que es el de la Muerte, tiene necesidad de crearse más allá de la tumba, la ficción de un Imperio, y la necesidad de un Amo para tembiar ante él.

LA CANCION DEL FUSIL—EL GRITO DEL BARDO.

Canto al pueblo: no al vencido; al que maldice y espera, forja armas con su amargura y hace de la luz bandera.

Al que estremece las calles en estos días de oprobio, lanzando en ellas, altivo, las grandes bombas de su odio.

Al que es dolor que no llora, porque es pena sublevada, herida al aire que luce con ímpetus de alborada.

No al mentido soberano—¡Rey de ridícula hechura, que adulan los que han de uncirlo al carro de su locura!—

¡Sí al de la huelga, al soberbio del acto heroico, al que lanza al pie de una guillotina el rayo de una esperanza!

LA GUERRA Y LOS GRANDES PENSADORES.

El hambre enseñó a los bárbaros el asesinato, les impulsó a la guerra y a las invasiones. Los pueblos civilizados son como los perros de caza. Un instinto corrompido les excita a destruir sin razón ni provecho. La sinrazón de las guerras modernas se llama interés dinástico, nacionalidades, equilibrio europeo, honor. Este ultimo motivo es tal vez el más extravagante, puesto que no hay un solo pueblo que no se haya manchado con todos los crímenes y todas las vergüenzas imaginables. Ni uno solo que no haya sufrido todas las humillaciones que la suerte puede infligir a una miserable agrupación de hombres. Y si a pesar de todo subsiste todavía un honor en los pueblos, es un extraño medio de defenderlo el consistente en hacer la guerra, es decir, cometer todos los crímenes con los cuales un particular se deshonra: incendio, robo, violación y asesinato.

ANATOLE, FRANCE.

A esta hora, en la cual se forman ligas para enseñar a los individuos a respetar las leyes, despreciando a los que se hallan encargados de asegurar su ejecucion, y a otros a despreciar las leyes para reservar toda su fe para aquellos que las interpretan; en la cual otros tienen la sencillez de creer que podrán hacer que el individuo respete las leyes y a los que las hacen, nosotros nos proponemos sencillamente enseñar a los individuos que deben respetarse, sin leyes, contra las leyes y a pesar de sus parásitos.

Y obrando de este modo, tenemos la conciencia de que hacemos una excelente obra revolucionaria.

Porque cuando haya crecido el número de individuos conscientes de su ser, de su papel en la vida, de su fuerza y su voluntad, habrán acabado los directores y explotadores. (Juan Grave.)

GUERRA Y MILITARISMO.

El conquistador hace cónsistir su gloria en quemar casas, matar hombres, o por lo menos, en hurgar los bolsillos para sacar lo que llama tributo, impuesto, empréstito "donación voluntaria," etc., y el historiógrafo hace consistir la suya en registrar todo eso en los anales de la patria, con tantas páginas de elogios, como provincias arruinadas haya. Mientras tanto, el verdugo enrojece el hierro para señalar en el hombro al individuo que hubiese hecho lo mismo enla carretera.

No hay más que el hombre que mate pormatar, destruya por destruir. Jamás semejante inepcia ha entrado en una cabeza animal; si mata, es por hambre o por miedo, pero no por vanidad, jactancia, u ociosidad.

BOUCHER DE PERTHES.

Las hormigas tienen ejércitos permanetes, tan numerosos y tan bien organizados como los de nuestras grandes potencias militares.

Y sin embargo, sus finanzas no se encuentran en un estado tan lamentable como el de los Estados humanos, ni sus arrastradores de espada se permiten exceso alguno contra los ciudadanos que los nutren y a quienes están encargados de protejer. No te extrañes de ello, querido lector. A parte de todo, no son sino bestias privadas de razón, guidas únicamente por "el instinto," incapaces, por tanto, de alcanzar la altura de la perfección humana.

Cuando se les decia, en nom bre de todo lo que es sagrado, pensad en la angustia, en la atrocidad de lo que se os ordena, respondian; no pensamos, obedecemos.

MARTIN B. MADDEN,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, as the bill passed the House it carried $115,112,310.37. As it passed the Senate is carried $115,538,190.37, $425,880 more than it carried when it passed the House. The Senate receded from $151,680. The House receded from $274,200. The Senate added for the customs activities $300,000. The House agreed to $150,000. The Senate receded from $150,000. The bill as it passed the House cut out the Deadwood assay office. As it passed both Houses and the conferees it carried $4,300 for the Deadwood assay office. Ten thousand dollars was added to the Secret Service fund in addition to what was provided by the House. Power presses in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing were substituted for hand presses, and the amendment offered by the Senate and passed by the Senate was receded from by the Senate conferees, so that the bill comes back to the House with the provision as it passed the House. The bill as agreed on carries $115,386,510.37. The estimates were $117,833,768.87, and the bill is $2,447,258.50 less than the estimates. The 1923 appropriation for the Treasury Department amounted to $118,844,828.81. The pending bill carries $115,386,510.37, or $3,458,318.44 less than the current appropriation. Unless there are some questions——

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. What does the gentleman mean by estimates; the Budget estimates?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; $2,447,000 less than the Budget estimates.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the final agreement?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, there are some three amendments not agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. It is really only one——

Mr. DOWELL. How much does that carry?

Mr. MADDEN. That carries $7,500. That would be for the Undersecretary and will come up later. It is not in the report. I move the previous question on the report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on amendment No. 1.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 1: Page 1, line 8: After the figures "$12,000," insert: "Undersecretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $7,500 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, $7,500."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede and concur on Senate amendment No. 1 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: "In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word 'Treasury,' insert the word 'hereafter.' In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word 'who,' insert the word 'hereafter.'"

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to ascertain whether it is or not. Instead of reserving the point of order, I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand it, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois makes this permanent law. Under the appropriation bill it is a mere appropriation for one year. This amendment undertakes to change the permanent law and provides that hereafter this office shall be created. It is the creating of a new office permanently, and under the amendment it becomes permanent law. Therefore it is unwarranted.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no question about it, and it is very essential that it should be permanent.

Mr. DOWELL. However that may be, the amendment changes the entire status of the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not care to argue the question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not familiar with the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. The amendment simply puts in the word "hereafter."

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that either the language is surplusage or it does make it permanent law.

Mr. MADDEN. It does.

The SPEAKER. In that case it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Then I withdraw that part of it, Mr. Speaker. I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take up the time of the House, but I do wish to make my own position clear on this amendment.

For two years, I think, we have carried an item in the appropriation bill providing for an Undersecretary of the Treasury. I never favored the change of the title of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to that of Undersecretary of the Treasury, for the reason that I have never understood that there was any real, cogent reason for such a change. I can appreciate the fact that there may be some possible reason for the change of the title of the Assistant Secretary of State to that of Undersecretary of State, because he has to deal and confer with foreign diplomats, and perhaps there is some reason for yielding to a question of sentiment in that department. But I can not understand why it is necessary to change the title of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I can not see any reason why the title of First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is not as dignified a title as that of Undersecretary. It is certainly more democratic. It seems to me that we are departing a good deal from the old democratic ideas which have always prevailed in this country when we undertake to follow the ideas of foreign governments in the changing of these titles. For that reason I am opposed to this amendment, and I have always consistently opposed it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 32.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the next amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 2: Page 2, line 15, strike out the figures "$65,760" and insert "$73,260."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 2, line 21, after the word "Secretary" insert the word "Undersecretary."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL FOR DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE AND LABOR—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The conference report and accompanying statement were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufactures: For all necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference and periodicals, rent outside of the District of Columbia, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to collect and compile information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufactures, $50,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Public works: For constructing or purchasing and equipping lighthouse tenders and light vessels for the Lighthouse Service as may be specifically approved by the Secretary of Commerce not to exceed $240,000, and for establishing and improving aids to navigation and other works as may be specifically approved by the Secretary of Commerce, $473,000; in all, $713,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon amendments numbered 1, 3, and 4.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
SELDEN P. SPENCER,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

On No. 2, relating to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Appropriates $50,000, as provided by the Senate, for the collection and compilation of information regarding the disposition and handling of raw materials and manufacture, with an amendment, as proposed by the House, striking out the wording "including expenses of attendance upon conventions."

On No. 5: Appropriates $25,000, as provided by the House, instead of $50,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the compilation of information regarding the restrictions and regulations of trade imposed by foreign countries.

On No. 6, relating to public works under the Bureau of Lighthouses: Strikes out the itemization of the appropriations for public works aggregating $563,000, as passed by the House, and appropriates $713,000 in a lump sum instead of $738,500, as proposed by the Senate.

The committee of conference have not agreed on the following amendments:

On No. 1: Providing that the chief clerk shall be chief executive officer of the department and may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers during the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretary.

On Nos. 3 and 4: Appropriating $1,500 for the transportation of remains of officers and employees who may die abroad or in transit while in the discharge of their official duties, and appropriating $15,000 for the transportation of families and effects of officers and employees.

MILTON W. SHREVE,
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
W. B. OLIVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it passed the House carried $26,079,101. As it passed the Senate it carried $26,646,101. The Senate added $267,000. The Senate receded from $50,500, on items relating to lighthouses and public works, $25,000; collection of statistics on restrictions of trade imposed by foreign countries, $25,000. The House receded from $216,500, with respect to items for lighthouses and public works, $150,000; statistics of raw materials and manufactures, $50,000; transporting remains of officers and employees, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $1,500; transporting families and effects of officers and employees, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $15,000.

The bill as agreed upon carries $26,295,601. It exceeds the 1923 appropriation by $591,908.

The bill as agreed upon, as I have stated, finally carries $26,295,601. The estimates were $25,891,091, so that the bill as finally agreed upon is $404,511 in excess of the estimates. In this connection I wish to say that $300,000 of this was put on by the House as an addition to the $3,000,000 requested in the Budget for the Immigration Service. The Committee on Appropriations recommended $440,000 in addition to the Budget on the maternity item. The law creating the maternity activities in the Government provided for the expenditure of $1,240,000 a year, while the Budget recommended only $800,000. The committee believed that the law should be enforced, and we recommended the full amount provided by the law.

Mr. Speaker, if there is no question to be asked and no time desired by anyone, I will move the previous question.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Can the gentleman state whether or not the amount appropriated under the maternity bill has been matched by an equal amount already provided for by the different States?

Mr. MADDEN. No; this is for 1924. Of course, they could not match this, because it is not yet available.

Mr. DENISON. Has the committee information that it will be matched?

Mr. MADDEN. All the information we have is to the effect that it will be.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman tell the House how many States have adopted legislation to meet the requirements of the maternity law?

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry to say that I can not tell the gentleman offhand.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: Page 2, line 9, after the word "superintendent" insert "who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary of Commerce to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary of the department."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in amendment numbered 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 3: Page 10, after line 15, insert: "Transporting remains of officers and employees: For defraying the expenses of transporting the remains of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce who may die abroad or in transit, while in discharge of their official duties, to their former homes in this country for interment, and for the ordinary expenses of such interment at their post or at home, $1,500."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in amendment numbered 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 4: Page 10, after line 22, insert: "Transportation of families and effects of officers and employees: To pay the itemized and verified statements of the actual and necessary expenses of transportation and subsistence, under such regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescibe, of families and effects of officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the order of the Secretary of Commerce, but not including any expenses incurred in connection with leave of absence of the officers and employees of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, $15,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be paid for transportation on foreign vessels without a certificate from the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of Labor that there are no American vessels on which such officers and clerks may be transported."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment. The amendment simply strikes out the words "or the Secretary of Labor," which words should not be in there. The certificate should come from the Secretary of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 4 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "In lines 13 and 14 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following words: 'Or the Secretary of Labor.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it the policy of the Government in transporting these employees to places abroad to transport not merely the employees and their families by also their effects free of charge?

Mr. MADDEN. It always has been the policy.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is no limitation whatever placed upon the amount of effects that they may carry? They may carry their whole household furniture?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. There is a certain limit fixed by regulation.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a limit fixed?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this will not open the door?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on receding and concurring with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Departments of State and Justice appropriation bill (H. R. 13232).

On No. 18: Appropriates $2,300,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,275,000, as proposed by the House, for United States marshals and their deputies.

On No. 20: Appropriates $925,000 instead of $900,000, as proposed by the House, and $950,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the salaries of United States district attorneys, etc.

On No. 21: Appropriates $1,400,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,450,000, as proposed by the Senate, for salaries of clerks of United States courts, etc.

On No. 22: Appropriates $275,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the Senate, for bailiffs and criers for United States courts.

On No. 23: Appropriates $650,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $700,000, as proposed by the Senate, for miscellaneous expenses of United States courts.

The committee of conference have not agreed upon the following amendments of the Senate:

On No. 1: Changing the title of the "Counselor for the department" to "Undersecretary of State."

On No. 2: Relating to the appointment of clerks at embassies and legations.

On No. 5: Appropriating one year's salary ($4,500) to the widow of William W. Masterson, late consul, Plymouth, England.

On No. 14: Relating to the use of an automobile for the Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice.

On No. 19: Relating to the transfer of two automobiles to the United States marshal of the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 24 and 25: Relating to the appropriation of $4,000 for the construction of a physician's residence at the Leavenworth (Kans.) Penitentiary.

JAMES W. HUSTED,
ROBERT E. EVANS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it passed the Senate carried $33,488,708. As the bill was reported to the House it carried $33,188,151.50. The House reduction was Mexican Boundary Commission, $4,800. The House addition was International Bureau patents, $1,700, making the net House reduction $3,100. The bill as it passed the House carried $33,185,051.50. There was added by the Senate $303,656.50.

The Senate recessions are as follows: Claim of Leonore M. Sorspy, $4,200. Post allowances, $50,000. Miscellaneous expenditures, Department of Justice, $5,000. Defending suits in claims against the United States, $5,000. Enforcement of antitrust laws, $30,000. Salaries of United States district attorneys, $25,000. Salaries of clerks of courts, $50,000. Salaries of bailiffs and criers, $25,000. Miscellaneous expenses United States courts, $50,000.

One of the Senate recessions amounts really to an addition, and that was for the Mexican Boundary Commission, $5,913.50. So that the net Senate recessions amounted to $238,286.50.

The House recessions were as follows: Arbitration of outstanding claims between the United States and Great Britain, $6,370. Contingent expenses, Department of Justice, $500. Salaries of United States district attorneys, $25,000. Salaries of United States marshals, $25,000, making a total of $56,870.

The House recessions on amendments in disagreement, if the motions of the House managers are adopted, are as follows: Payment to the widow of a consular officer, $4,500; physician's residence Leavenworth Penitentiary, $4,000, making the total House recession $65,370.

The bill as agreed upon carries $33,250,421.50. The bill that passed the House carried $33,185,051.50. So the increase over the House bill amounts to $45,370.

The estimates by the Budget Bureau were $33,703,293.79. The bill as agreed upon carries $33,250,421.50. So that the decrease from the Budget estimate is $452,872,029. The bill as agreed upon carries $33,250,421.50, and the current law is $28,676,921.66, or an increase of $4,573,499.84, and that is due to the payment to Colombia of $5,000,000. The increase over the current law is, as I stated, $4,573,499.84, and the decrease under the current law excluding the payment of Colombia is $426,500.16.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What are the items in disagreement?

Mr. HUSTED. There are no items really in disagreement, there are certain items we had to bring back under the rule. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 1, page 2, line 3, after the figures "$12,000" strike out the words "counselor for the department," and insert "Undersecretary of State."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 2, page 6, line 16, after the word "citizens," insert the words "whenever hereafter appointed."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the amendment.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask what does this amendment refer to?

Mr. HUSTED. It refers to the appointment of clerks at the embassies and legations. The House struck out the words "whenever hereafter appointed," but the Senate put them back on the statement of the Secretary of State that there are five men who have been in the service for a period of 15 years who are useful men and desired by the service. They have been faithful during the entire period, and would be injuriously affected if this was stricken out.

Mr. DOWELL. How many are affected?

Mr. HUSTED. Only five. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the first amendment. There was so much confusion that I could not hear the action at the desk. I want to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to vacate the action on the first amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUSTED moves that the House recede from its action on amendment No. 1, and agree with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Undersecretary of State and the 'counselor for the department' shall hereafter be designated 'Undersecretary of State.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: Page 13, after line 20, insert "For Louise Carroll Masterson, widow of William W. Masterson, late consul to Plymouth, England, $4,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while at his post of duty from illness incurred in the Consular Service."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I notice there were two amendments in the Senate bill, on page 13, which seem to be similar. One of them was to pay to Leonore M. Sorsby the sum of $4,500. He was the minister to Bolivia. The other amendment is to pay to Louise Carroll Masterson $4,500. Why the distinction?

Mr. HUSTED. As a matter of fact, they are not similar at all. In the case of Leonore M. Sorsby, the claim is for a daughter, and not for a widow. In the Masterson case, the claim is for the widow of William W. Masterson. It never has been the practice to make any allowance to anyone except the widow. There are numerous precedents for that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the gentleman is simply acting in accordance with the precedents?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a letter from the Secretary of State, showing the services of Mr. Masterson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 16, 1922.

The Hon. ARTHUR B. ROUSE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Having reference to your inquiry in regard to the record of service of Mr. William W. Masterson, an American consul who died at his post of duty, Plymouth, England, on May 10, 1922, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Masterson was appointed American consul at Aden, Arabia, on February 25, 1895; retired in April, 1898; was reappointed consul at Aden on March 13, 1903; appointed American consul at Batum, Russia, on June 22, 1906; consul at Harput, Turkey, on June 10, 1908; consul at Durban on April 24, 1914; American consul of class 6 by act approved February 5, 1915; appointed consul of class 5 September 14, 1917; consul of class 4 June 4, 1920; assigned as American consul at Plymouth, England on November 19, 1920. Mr. Masterson died at his post, Plymouth, England, on May 10, 1922. His salary at that time was at the rate of $4,500 a year. It should be added that Mrs. Masterson's name is Louise Carroll Masterson.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 14: Page 31, line 24, after the word "duties" strike out—

"Provided further, That the automobile purchased from the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes for the fiscal year 1923 shall hereafter be under the exclusive control of the Director of the Bureau of Investigation."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in amendment No. 14, with the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUSTED moves that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment of the Senate No. 14 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the language stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That the automobile purchased from the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes for the fiscal year 1923 shall hereafter be for the exclusive use of the Bureau of Investigation under the control of the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recede and concur with the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from New York explained the amendment?

Mr. HUSTED. No; I have not.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman explain that provision?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly. Objection was made in the Senate that the provision carried in the House placed the control of the automobile under the Director of the Bureau of Investigation and not under the Attorney General. This amendment places the control under the Attorney General instead of under the Director of the Bureau of Investigation, as carried in the House provision.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] proposed a question to the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from New York answered it.

Mr. DOWELL. But only with reference to explaining what the amendment is.

The SPEAKER. That is debate upon the amendment. The Chair thinks it is very clear. Of course, the rule is well established that a point of order must be made before there is debate. The gentleman from South Carolina had debated it by asking an explanation, and the gentleman from New York was proceeding to give the explanation before the gentleman from Iowa raised his point of order. The Chair does not know whether it is subject to the point of order, but it is too late to make it.

The question is on receding and concurring with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 19: Page 38, line 16, after the word "subsistence," insert: "Provided further, That the Postmaster General or the coordinator of the General Supply Committee is authorized and directed upon the approval of this act, if available, to deliver to the office of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia, without payment therefor, two passenger-carrying motor cycles."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 24: Page 45, line 10, insert: "For construction of physician's residence, $4,000."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 24 and 25 be considered together. They relate to the same thing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that amendments 24 and 25 be considered together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, where is this residence located?

Mr. HUSTED. This is a provision for the construction of a physician's residence at Leavenworth Penitentiary, amounting to only $4,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the physician had a residence there heretofore?

Mr. HUSTED. He has not. The physician has at other penitentiaries, however, and it is very much needed here. Of course, the only cost is for materials, as the work is done by the convicts in the penitentiaries.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report amendment No. 25.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 25: Page 45, line 11, after the word "penitentiary" strike out the figures "$659,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$663,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede from these amendments and concur.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report upon the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, for printing under the rules.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of the House amendment after the enacting clause and substitute the following in lieu thereof:

That any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or whose name is now on the pension roll including those thereon under any act of Congress public or private. Payment to be made in accordance with the pension roll, without further application by the person entitled thereto, and every person who served 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 a month.

SEC. 2. That the widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who has heretofore been or may hereafter be granted a pension under any law, public or private, for service in the Civil War, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, 1915, or who if legally married after said date shall have subsequent to such marriage lived and cohabited with the soldier, sailor, or marine for at least two years and continuing until his death, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month, and an additional pension of $6 a month for each child of the officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability: Provided further, That the additional pension herein granted to the widow on account of the child or children of the husband by a former wife shall be paid to her only for such period of her widowhood as she has been, or shall be, charged with the maintenance of such child or children; for any period during which she has not been, or she shall not be, so charged, it shall be granted and paid to the guardian of such child or children: Provided further, That a widow or guardian to whom increase of pension has been, or shall hereafter be, granted on account of minor children, shall not be deprived thereof by reason of their being maintained in whole or in part at the expense of a State or the public in any educational institution, or in any institution organized for the care of soldiers' orphans: Provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $50 a month: Provided further, That all provisions of this section shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted under any law, public or private.

"SEC. 3. That the rate of pension for the former widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1915, or if legally married after such date shall have subsequent to such marriage lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, or marine for a period of at least two years and continuing until his death, and having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage or marriages has or have been dissolved either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce for any cause other than adultery on the part of the wife, shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month: Provided, That where a pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, a widow or former widow shall not be entitled to pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her; and upon the granting of pension to such widow or former widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease; and this proviso shall apply to all claims arising under this or any other law.

"SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4698, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War, and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1897, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897, on account of service during the Civil War and the war with Mexico, and the widows and minor children of such persons: Provided, That service under this section shall be proven in the manner and form specified in section 2, act of March 4, 1917, and the act of September 1, 1922: Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension to the soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, May 30, 1908, or under the act of March 4, 1917, shall be $30 per month, and that the rate of pension to the widows of soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll or who may hereafter be placed thereon under said acts shall be $20 per month.

"SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War who have been, or who may hereafter be, allowed a pension under existing laws shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

"SEC. 6. That all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $80 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones of the forearm or any part of the bones of the leg below the tuberosity of the tibia, the rate of pension shall be $75 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the humerus or femur or of the shoulder or hip joint, or where there is an ankylosis of either the elbow or knee or shoulder or hip joint, the rate of pension shall be $80 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall have lost one hand or one foot and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot, or shall have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $90 a month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or of the joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $100 a month; and it is hereby directed that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be reviewed, upon request of the pensioner, all cases wherein there is an excision or resection of any part of the bones of an arm or leg, shoulder or hip, or any of the joints, or an ankylosis of any of said joints, and shall place the name of the pensioner on the roll at the rates herein provided.

"SEC. 7. That in the adjudication of claims for widows' pensions marriage of the parties and the legality thereof may be established by any competent testimony, and in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage, satisfactory evidence that the parties lived together as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and acquaintances until the death of the husband may be held to constitute sufficient proof of marriage; and cohabitation continuously for seven years or more may be accepted in lieu of proof that no impediment existed to the marriage of the parties. A widow, otherwise entitled to pension under this act, may not be barred from being granted such pension for the reason that she failed to live and cohabit with the 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death,' unless it be shown that she willfully deserted such 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person,' without good cause; and all provisions of law requiring such continuous cohabitation in any case are hereby repealed, except as provided in section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 8. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the fourth day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check; and it shall not be canceled, but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

"SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as 'The Army and Navy medal of honor roll,' as provided in the act of April 27, 1916, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

"SEC. 10. That no claim agent, attorney, or other person shall contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting claims for the increase of pension provided for in this act; and no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for such services in other claims thereunder, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall directly or indirectly otherwise contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension allowed, or due, to such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, shall for each and every such offense be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines."

And that the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to the widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, submit the following statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

On account of numerous verbal changes in the phraseology of the House substitute, the conferees have rewritten the entire bill and recommend the adoption of the same as so rewritten. Most of the changes agreed upon are mere changes of phraseology and do not materially change the bill as passed by the House. The rates of pension provided by the original House substitute bill are not changed in any respect, except some slight changes in the rates granted to certain maimed soldiers. The principal change agreed upon is the proviso in section 4, reinserting in the bill the original section 7 of the Senate bill, granting an increase of pension to the veterans of the various Indian wars from $20 per month to $30 per month and to the widows of such veterans from $12 per month to $20 per month. The verbal changes made in the other sections of the bill relate merely to administrative matters and have been inserted in the bill on the recommendation of the officials of the Pension Bureau.

JOHN W. LANGLEY,
WM. W. RUCKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and sixty-five Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with proceedings under the Calendar Wednesday call to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that proceedings under Calendar Wednesday call be dispensed with to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution from the Committee on Rules which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 467 (Rept. No. 1297).

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 314) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; that after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed four hours and be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to its final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman from Ohio agree to a division of half an hour on each side, one-half hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Ohio and one-half by myself?

Mr. FESS. Could not the gentleman get along with the amount under the rule—20 minutes to a side?

Mr. POU. I would like to accede to that, but the requests for time exceed the 20 minutes. I can get along with 25 minutes on a side.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the rule be limited to 50 minutes, half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina and half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that there be 50 minutes' debate on the rule, half of that time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from North Carolina. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it going to be the intention to press for a final vote to-day?

Mr. FESS. I hope that can be done. It means four hours general debate under the rule and I hope to have the previous question ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman's request that the previous question be ordered?

Mr. FESS. That is my request.

Mr. GARNER. He did not say that, but that is what he meant.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood. Without objection the previous question will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, the resolution (H. Res. 467), if adopted, simply provides for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 314 under the general rules of the House and a provision for four hours of general debate. The Rules Committee appreciated the fact that this was a very important matter and should have full and free discussion on the part of Members of the House at this time. We also fully appreciate the fact that there are two sides to this question, but on the general proposition we considered it of enough importance and of enough interest to the people of the whole country that the various States should be given an opportunity to pass judgment upon it. House Joint Resolution 314 simply provides for and makes possible the presentation to the various States of the Union of a constitutional amendment which in general terms provides for the doing away with the issue of both Federal and local tax-exempt securities. The first section of the bill provides that the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the State, so that the United States can assess taxes against incomes derived from State bonds and different subdivisions and communities in the State. The second provision of the bill provides in turn that the State shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on incomes derived by residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States Government. It is necessary to have the two sections of the bill in order to make the general proposition in levying taxes absolutely reciprocal as to the powers conferred upon the State and United States Government, and it seems from that point that the resolution in itself is entirely clear and affects the interests of both the State and Federal Governments in a purely reciprocal manner, and the rights and powers of each are fully protected.

As it is well understood at the present time, under the present Constitution we are permitted to issue tax-exempt securities by the Federal Government, and also by the States and different subdivisions of the States—that is, counties, towns, cities, and so forth—but it absolutely prevents the Federal Government on the one hand levying income taxes on securities issued by the several States or subdivisions, and the States on the other hand from levying an income tax on the securities of the Federal Government. Under these general provisions, we have up to the present time in the vicinity of from fifteen to eighteen billion dollars of tax-exempt securities of various kinds in existence. During the year 1921 there were at least $1,000,000,000 of those tax-exempt securities issued, and there is a growing tendency, on account of the ease by which they are marketed under the present laws, to increase the amount from year to year, for localities to issue more bonds than are absolutely necessary, and eventually to increase the taxes on its citizens.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. KING. Can the gentleman give any information as to how many bonds are issued under the farm loan bank system, the Federal land-bank system?

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman means the total amount?

Mr. KING. The total amount.

Mr. SNELL. I can not; but I understand only about 5 per cent of all the loans taken out by the farmers of the United States come under the farm loan bank system.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. About $82,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. The only opposition, or the principal opposition, is the question of raising the rates on municipal issues. From all previous experience and from all the evidence which was presented before the committee, it seems there is enough of investment funds that come from savings banks, estates, and various other sources that under the law are obliged to invest in these kinds of securities on account of the exceptional security offered, to take up all or any reasonable amount of securities that have been or will be issued by the various communities in the way of municipal bonds, and they will be able to continue to market them at for one-half to 1 per cent less than the rates paid on the highest grade of industrial securities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Ohio give me five additional minutes?

Mr. FESS. I yield to the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. SNELL. That evidence was brought out very clearly before the Committee on Ways and Means, and it is absolutely substantiated by the hearings and the people who appeared before the committee; but the chief reason why I as an individual am especially interested in this rule and this resolution is the fact that I believe it will tend to a more reasonable and equitable distribution of the burdens of taxation in this country. If there is any possible law that we can pass or any effort that can be made whereby we can distribute this burden of taxation and place it upon the people who are most able to bear it, I am in favor of that law.

Now, there is absolutely no question, and, so far as I am able to learn, it is an undisputed fact that the people who have the large incomes in the country are the people who are buying and holding these tax-exempt securities. On account of that they are able to get by in paying a very small personal tax. For instance, an individual who has an income of $50,000, all derived from tax-exempt securities, might get by without paying taxes of any kind, even local, or any surtax to the Federal Government, while a neighbor that ran a small business and through individual attention and hard work had an income of $15,000 or $20,000 would have to pay a large Federal income tax in addition to all local taxes. Now, if we can pass or start something on the way of passing that will equalize the levying of taxes and rectify such conditions, I am absolutely for it, and every man in this House should be for it, and I feel that it is of such vital importance to the people of the whole country at this time that we should at least submit this proposition to the people of the various States and give them an opportunity to pass upon this proposition. We can certainly depend upon the States to protect their rights.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I merely wanted to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] made the statement on this floor that there are already $18,000,000,000 tax-exempt bonds held to-day.

Mr. SNELL. Yes; from $15,000,000,000 to $18,000,000,000, and I referred to that earlier in my remarks.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What effect would such an amendment have on these securities as to enhancing their value if this constitutional amendment should become operative?

Mr. SNELL. That is a pretty hard question to answer, but I doubt if it would have a very great effect, because between now and the time this amendment would be ratified by the States there would probably be so many more tax-exempt tax securities issued that they would flood the market. I doubt if it will have any great effect.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the gentleman considered the amount of tax-exempt securities that one individual or any one company could hold?

Mr. SNELL. No, sir; I have not. But it may be possible to work out something on that line.

Mr. OLIVER. It seems there should be a reasonable limitation placed on the holding by one company or individual of tax-exempt securities. It might explain the real reason for this legislation, and that is that some very wealthy companies or individuals are at present the owners of an unreasonable amount of tax-exempt securities.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with the gentleman. I said that, speaking personally from my own standpoint, was my primary reason for favoring the submission of that question to the people—to get away from the exemptions enjoyed by some people at the present time.

Mr. OLIVER. I call the gentleman's attention, in that connection, to the fact that these very securities are now selling in almost every instance at a premium over what they were purchased at.

Mr. SNELL. I am not sure about that.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BACHARACH. I want to call the gentleman's attention to page 21 of the hearings, in which the total amount of tax-exempt securities is stated at $10,660,000,000. This statement was made by Mr. McCoy, the Government actuary. The amount of farm loan bonds is stated to be $284,000,000 instead of $800,000,000.

Mr. SNELL. It is impossible to tell the exact amount.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, so far as the issue of bonds by the United States Government is concerned, there is no need for any constitutional amendment, because Congress has the power to refuse at any time to issue any more tax-exempt bonds.

This constitutional amendment proposes to go further than any similar amendment has ever gone before, and to subject to the payment of income tax all bonds issued by the States, by the smaller political divisions, by the counties, and even by the municipalities. It will not, in my opinion, accomplish the purpose hoped for. It will simply transfer the burden to the people who issue the bonds that are put upon the market and who in course of time must redeem them.

The tax-exempt bond that brings 4 per cent will, of course, sell higher upon the market than if it is not tax exempt. Why anybody should want to confer upon the National Government the power of imposing taxes upon the bond issues of the cities and towns and counties I do not know. Yet that is the proposal in this constitutional amendment. Even Alexander Hamilton would turn over in his grave if he could read it. I shall not vote for it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. POU. I would rather not.

Mr. RAKER. Does this include school districts?

Mr. POU. Of course. It also includes irrigation projects. And you gentlemen who are listening to the whisper of this small voice may as well understand that it will also include the Federal farm loan bonds. In my judgment, this is the worst blow ever aimed at the Federal farm loan system. It will subject those bonds to taxation by enemies of the system. The ultimate result will be certain injury and possible paralysis to that great system.

Mr. STEAGALL. And good roads bonds.

Mr. POU. Yes; and good roads bonds. Why, Mr. Speaker, it would paralyze the prosperity of all the agricultural States of this Nation. I come from a State that has been called the "Ohio of the South." I suppose it is intended as a compliment, because we have entered upon a program of great internal development. How are we going to refund our bonds when they come due? Of course, by imposing a higher rate of interest upon all new bond issues. Our people must be taxed to pay the increased rates. So you are adding to the already heavy burden of the agricultural masses. And this amendment, instead of being called an amendment to prevent the issue of tax-exempt bonds, should be termed an amendment to increase the rate of interest upon all bonds hereafter issued and also an amendment to enhance the value of bonds already in existence. Much of the power behind this amendment is the influence of those who already own tax-exempt bonds. The very moment this amendment is ratified there will be an enormous increase in the market value of tax-exempt bonds already issued.

I believe it was said that the Trojans were warned to look out for the Greeks when they came bearing gifts. You gentlemen who contemplate voting for this measure, who represent agricultural constituencies, had better be careful and examine this thing, because it is "loaded."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Why did the National Grange, in convention assembled at Wichita, Kans., approve this, and why did the American Farm Bureau Association last year approve it in national convention assembled, as also did the Farm Bureau Association in 1922 again approve it?

Mr. POU. That is a question that I can not answer. Perhaps there was no discussion of the merits of the proposal. But I will say to my friend this: I believe much of the sentiment behind this measure is propaganda; that is to say, sentiment which has been worked up. I do not believe any demand comes directly from the people who must foot the bill.

Many people would be amazed if they were told that the issues of bonds that they vote to put upon the market to build schoolhouses and to build roads and to develop communities are to be subjected to a rate of taxation to be fixed by somebody else, that all such bonds of States, counties, towns, and school districts should be subjected to additional income tax by the United States Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said that the Trojans were warned to look out for the Greeks bearing gifts. "Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes." There is a great deal that is behind this proposition which I suppose will appear in the long four hours' debate granted by the Committee on Rules. Think of submitting such an amendment to our organic law after four hours' debate! Let it not be forgotten that all bonds as a rule find their way to the great commercial centers. Most of the States of the Union will get practically no benefit from the tax that is proposed. North Carolina will get no tax but will pay tribute to other States. Iowa will get very little benefit. Colorado will get very little benefit. The States of the great agricultural West and South will get very little benefit; but New York will reap a harvest. Do not forget that; because, just as water finds its level, so all bonds tend to find the place where there is the best market for them, and the best market will be in the great commercial centers of Boston, Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago; Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois will reap a great, rich harvest that is to be taken out of the earnings of all the people of America.

There has never been a greater farce perpetrated on the American people than the attempt to put this thing over. I will not vote for it. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FESS. Does the gentleman care to use some more of his time?

Mr. POU. There will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to myself. That leaves 5 minutes on this side?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the resolution making this joint resolution in order will allow four hours of debate, as has already been stated to the House, and I would like to call the attention of the Members to the merits of the measure, rather than to the rule, because I think there is no opposition to the rule as a rule.

Some time ago I made a computation of what the high surtax does, with the avenue of tax exempts open, and it was rather surprising to most of the Members of the House who read it. When we had the high surtax, 65 per cent, an income of $500,000 could be invested in short-time certificates paying 5½ per cent, which would make $28,750 net income that one of the big income financiers would receive if he invested $500,000 in tax exempts. In that case there is no worry, there is no risk, no possibility of any leaks. He is sure of $28,750.

The money locked up in these tax-exempt securities is unproductive. It is not a source of any revenue to the Government. It does not employ workmen in permanent business. It is simply an avenue for one who has a large income to invest his money, without regard to what it will do for the business of the country. He can do it without any risk whatever.

Now, on the other hand, under the high surtax as it then ranged, if he should put his income of $500,000 into a productive industry employing labor that would produce a product that would be sold from year to year and keep an industry going, he would have to make 22.11 per cent, or $110,550, profit after paying all of the taxes—Federal, State, and municipal—in order to have left the $28,750 net, such as he would have if he put his $500,000 income into tax exempts in the beginning. That means that the man who receives a big income, with that avenue open, will not invest it where the system of taxation, Federal, State, and municipal, operates, because he knows to start with he can not make $110,550 profit on $500,000, and he will put it immediately into tax exempts so as to make sure that he will have that much of a net income and be free from any risk or worry from fear of loss. This open course for escape from the high surtax has been freely entered by the big-income people of the country.

Before the war the tax exempts did not amount to over $3,000,000,000. Two years ago the tax exempts were estimated at $14,000,000,000. You have noticed the various estimates given to-day, ranging as high as $18,000,000,000. Doctor Seligman, of Columbia University, who probably is as good an authority as we have, says that there are about $16,000,000,000 totally exempt and about $14,000,000,000 partially exempt; so that there are something like $30,000,000,000 of our capital that is in the form of capital assets for business that is tax exempt, some of it totally and some of it partially. What does that do? The high surtax which our Government seems to have adopted as a policy, while it has been reduced from 65 per cent to 50 per cent, is still so high that it will cause capital, as a matter of protection, to seek the tax-exempt channel. Now, it strikes me that as a matter of revenue for the Government—for that is the specific thing we have in mind—we must either reduce the high surtax or we must forbid the tax-exempt privilege. It seems that the high surtax has come to be a policy of the Government. Therefore, it appears to me that it would be perfect folly, from the standpoint of revenue, for the Government to keep open the channel into which, as a matter of self-defense, capital enters in order to avoid the payment of these taxes. It is the direct road for the defeat of the very purpose of taxation. There is the loss of revenue to start with. It seems to me that this is justified upon several different grounds. I am persuaded that as a matter of revenue we ought to pass this amendment. It strikes me also that as an incentive to going into productive industry, to invest capital in business, to employ labor, to keep a going concern going, this amendment should be adopted. The tax exempt is an obstacle against productive industry, because it diverts the capital that otherwise would go into the productive industries into unproductive channels; productive, I admit, in the sense that when you build a road you employ labor and capital for the time being while the road is building, but when it is built labor and capital, so far as that construction goes, cease to be employed, while, on the other hand, if you could induce the capital to go into the productive industries, such as transportation or other industrial agencies, you would keep the capital invested and you would continue to employ the labor of the country, which are the best tests of a country's real prosperity.

From that standpoint, in addition to the revenue standpoint, it seems to me that this is of importance. Much of our consideration as a legislative body is given up to the problem of industry. Our material prosperity is determined very largely by the uninterrupted employment of labor in profitable enterprise. We are concerned in keeping open the channels of investment in labor-employing business. If these channels are clogged from whatever reason we endeavor to open them. If European competition tends to close our industries we readily correct it by necessary protective legislation. Here is a situation where capital, always timid, heavily weighted by a high surtax, finds a perfectly easy and complete escape through the channels of exemption from tax burdens. The amount of increase of tax-exempt securities on the one hand and the reduction of numbers of high surtax payers on the other leave nothing further to be said on the general effect of this policy. Again, it is rather a bad condition in our own country when the conviction is on that we are collecting taxes from smaller incomes and keeping open the way for larger incomes to escape taxation. That has a bad social as well as governmental effect.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Can the gentleman see how it is possible for people who are in favor of high surtaxes to be opposed to this legislation?

Mr. FESS. Upon my soul I can not. Those who favor the high surtax, it seems to me, can not be in favor of opening the way for that high surtax to escape payment. It is wholly illogical and the two positions contradictory.

Mr. SNELL. Does not a good deal of the opposition come from those same people?

Mr. FESS. Well, the gentleman knows about that as well as I do.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. How can those who favor a reduction of the higher surtaxes be sincere in their advocacy of this measure? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. I can do that because I am afraid that my friends like the Socialist from New York are in the majority. It is a choice between two evils and I take the least, especially when the safety of the Government is at stake. I employed what influence I had to reduce the surtax to a point where it could not drive incomes into these channels. Failing that our only recourse is to close up the channels of escape. How a Member can insist upon continuing the course which compels capital to seek refuge and at the same time to refuse to close up the door of escape I can not understand. Surely one who refuses to close the door can not complain if it is entered.

But, as I was about to say, this practice causes the large income holder to seek his escape from tax burdens, while the small man is left to bear them. It is not a sound or wholesome situation socially or governmentally to permit such favor toward the big moneyed man at the expense of the small taxpayer. It produces a bitterness that is reflected in opposition to Government as unfair and inequitable. It breeds disrespect if not open attack upon constituted authority as a protection of the rich as against the rights of the poor.

This unfortunate situation is further aggravated by causing the moneyed class to withdraw its capital from active industry, where it as director is constructively building up the country's prosperity, to place it in unproductive channels, where it ceases to be active, withdraws from business, and joins the idle rich to live off its income. It thus compels a leisure class, and tends to stratify our society into classes, and thus deepen inherent hatred between groups of our population by arraying the mass against the class.

The great virtue of our system of government is the equal opportunity in the rivalry of life, where each stands equal to the other under the law. No such theory can flourish where the idle rich are free from the burdens of tax while the large mass of humanity are in a struggle to live. It is such situation that creates antigovernment sentiment. It is such that promotes anarchistic dogmas and bolshevistic tendencies. It is not enough to denounce the rich for entering the door of escape when the Government opens it wide and then gives the spur to enter it.

It is not treason for a citizen to escape the penalty of a high tax when the Government itself supplies the way of escape. I may prefer to reduce the spur of escape, but since the Congress prefers to keep the tax at the high point, then the only step left, as I see it, is to close up the way of escape, which this resolution proposes to do.

At least I see no grounds for refusal to submit it to the States and give the people the right to say whether they wish to forbid the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

The contention that the amendment will place in the hands of the Federal Government the power to destroy the credit of the States is not well founded.

The resolution specifically forbids discriminatory taxation in favor of or against the States. In other words, if the Government decides to tax State securities, or any issued under the authority of the State, it can not fix the rate beyond what it would fix on Federal securities. In other words, it is forbidden through the channels of the tax power to make a Federal security less burdensome or to be preferred to a State security.

If it is held that the Government may use the tax power to destroy the credit of a State, which, of course, is incredible, this amendment would require the Government to put the Federal securities in the same category.

It must be noted that whatever is done under this amendment will be done by Congress. It is not overlooked that Congress as it is constituted speaks the will of the States. How far would a proposal get that looks to destroying a State's credit in a body that speaks for the States, as is the case in Congress? This contention falls of its own weight.

I have no hesitancy in giving my vote to permitting the people of the States to decide on this issue.

If we decide to continue the high-income tax, then surely we should prevent a practice that looks to the certain breakdown of the system.

I see no better way than that proposed by this amendment.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I stated there would only be one more speech on this side. I would like to have the gentleman agree that there may be an additional speech of one minute.

Mr. FESS. That will be all right.

Mr. POU. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD].

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, when the legislatures come to pass on this question, if they do, the action of the House of Representatives of the United States in submitting it to them in all probability may have some weight with them. I want to call the attention concretely to the proposition that we are allowed one and three twenty-ninths minutes apiece to debate this question.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by the rule which is before the House it is proposed to make in order a resolution to submit to the several States for their action an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I have no objection to the form of the rule. There perhaps ought to be, there should be, more debate; but as far as the form of the rule is concerned, it is unobjectionable; but I do not believe it is wise or proper that the House should pass upon this matter to-day under the conditions that exist to-day.

A few moments ago we had a roll call in the House, and 266 Members answered to their names. Assuming that there are at least 20 in the city who did not answer and who will be here on the final roll call, it would make a total membership here of 286. Two-thirds of 286 would be approximately 191. So that it may result that an amendment to the fundamental, the organic law of the Republic will be submitted to the several States for ratification by 191 votes, or less, decidedly less, than half the membership of the House. So much for that; the legality of it, of course, is beyond question, but the policy of it deserves our very serious consideration.

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any State.

SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States; but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under authority of such State.

The gentlemen who have so far spoken in behalf of this proposed amendment have devoted themselves entirely to the economic phase. I appreciate the importance of that. As a general proposition I am opposed to tax-exempt securities, and as a member of the legislature of my State I should be unwilling, except under extraordinary circumstances, to vote for tax-exempt securities. But I do not propose to enter into the economic discussion; that will be presented by others later.

There is a phase much more fundamental, gentlemen of the House, than the economic question. This is a proposition to commingle the powers of the State and the Federal Government in a manner which no amendment ever yet adopted, or ever proposed so far as I know, has attempted to do. It is designed by this amendment, sir, to give to the Federal Government a certain power, and it may amount to a power of life and death, over the credit of the States. [Applause.] On the other hand it is proposed—and herein comes the commingling—to give to the States a certain power which it is possible in the development of human society may reach the point where the States will possess the power of life and death over the credit of the Federal Government. Neither of these conditions is desirable from my standpoint. [Applause.]

I, of course, am a believer in State rights, and I am also a believer in the national rights and powers. [Applause.] I would have each sovereignty's credit independent of the control by taxation of the other sovereignty. Oh, it is insisted that this is reciprocal. I shall undertake to show you that it is not reciprocal in fact. Even with the States as the unit it could not be reciprocal for a long period of years, even approximately; but bear this in mind, gentlemen of the House, the tax-exempt securities, or the great bulk of them, upon which it is designed to give the power of Federal taxation by this amendment are not the bonds and securities of the sovereign States, but are the bonds and securities of the subordinate governments within the State. They are city bonds, county bonds, drainage bonds, school bonds, and all the income upon these bonds of the various subdivisions will be rendered subject to taxation by the Federal Government, but the municipalities can not levy an income tax on the Federal bonds in return.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MILLS. Is it not within the power of the State government to give them authority to levy such an income tax?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is within the realm of possibility that by a change of the constitution of many of the States it might be accomplished, but if that should be done we come then to the proposition that towns and counties would be given a certain control over the credit of this, the greatest Nation on earth. [Applause.]

Oh, this is but another step toward that centralization of power so dangerous to the liberties of the people of the country. Mr. Speaker, I do not proclaim the doctrine of State rights as a sentimental proposition. I am quite willing to forget, for the time being, that that doctrine was sanctified by the blood of heroes spilled in the red welter of war, but let us approach it upon the cold, calm basis of the science of government. The liberties of this people will never be in danger so long as you can keep the powers of government distributed under our dual system, under the checks and balances of the Constitution as it stands, but when you have proceeded again and again and taken these steps until you have finally centralized all your functions and powers of government in a central force, when you have continued to listen and respond affirmatively to the cry coming up from minorities and groups and blocs for legislation and constitutional amendments concerning every possible phase of our local life—the cry of "on to Washington, on to Washington"—you will have created here a central spot at which the future enemies of this country can strike. I do not fear sovietism in this Republic so long as the powers are distributed, but create here once a central power, confer upon this Republic control over the credits of your States, your municipalities, your subdivisions, create here your great central government with all governmental powers, particularly the power of credit, and you create a central point at which sovietism can strike with a single blow, and, God knows, I fear that issue very much.

Oh, we have moved rapidly by legislation, much more rapidly, I fear, than some of us realize. Through these systems of cooperative appropriation, road appropriation, whereby you appropriate so much and give it to a State if a State will give so much, taxing the State anyway, whether it gives or not, and thus coercing it; by the passage of maternity legislation, by the passage of various measures similar in principle, you have gradualy enhanced the powers of the Federal Government, in so far as you can legislatively, and now you come to lay your hands upon the Constitution of the country to bring about a commingling of powers. I may be mistaken, but I repeat the thought that I expressed earlier in my remarks, that never has there been an amendment proposed which in its fundamental aspect went so far as this. Even the prohibition amendment, while it took over police powers, yet maintained the police power of the States in all of its integrity. Here you give the power over credits. What can sovereignty be without full power over its credit? You seek to give the Federal Government power over the credits of your States, and to the States you seek to give power over the credit of the Federal Government.

It will be pointed out before this debate concludes, I apprehend—and I have not the time to go into it now—that it will be years before it can be even reciprocal, as far as that proposition is concerned. Even if it could be so to-morrow, I still oppose it, because I believe in rendering unto the State the things that are the State's and unto the Nation the things that are the Nation's. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the very earnest statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I should have been even more impressed by what he said if I thought that it had any real logical relation to the matter now before the House. I doubt if it has. I assume that everyone will vote for this rule. I think that no one is justified in refusing to give the Members of the House an opportunity to express an opinion on so important a matter as that now before the House. It is not necessary, either in this case or in the case of any resolution proposing submission of a constitutional amendment, that we shall be fully and finally convinced as to the wisdom and desirability of the adoption of the amendment before we give our vote on the submission of the matter to the people of the country. It is quite sufficient if we are convinced: First, that there are a large number of people who desire to have the matter submitted; and, second—and this applies particularly to the situation now confronting us—that a condition has arisen under a policy adopted by the Congress, with the approval of the people of the country generally, under which it is very clear that Federal income taxation has ceased to be entirely logical or equitable. In this situation, in my opinion, Congress will be derelict in its duty if it does not give the people of the country an opportunity to say whether or no in their opinion the organic law should be so modified as to make possible the logical development of a policy which we have deliberately entered upon. There is just one class of men who, in my opinion, may be justified in voting against the resolution when it shall be presented to us. That class consists of those who believe that we have altogether too far advanced the size of the contribution demanded in income taxes laid on the large incomes of the country, who believe that we should return to low income surtaxes. If we were to do that, if the income taxes of the Federal Government were to be reduced to low figures, then there would be little necessity or demand for a modification of the Constitution as is proposed. But of all of the illogical positions that it is possible for any gentleman to take, it is the position held by those in favor of high surtaxes against the passage of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if there be no objection, I give notice now that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment, if no one else does, to limit the time within which this proposed amendment may be ratified, probably to five or seven years.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Will it be in order now to move to compel attendance by absentees? And if it is in order I shall make such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it is in order. That is a matter left to the conscience of each Member. The previous question is considered as ordered. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 118, noes 52.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SNELL. It is too late.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I had already risen to ask recognition.

Mr. LONDON. Then I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 314, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 314, with Mr. MCARTHUR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 314, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 314) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States; but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued, after the ratification of this article, by or under authority of such State."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that I be notified when I have consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], speaking upon the rule very rightfully referred to this measure as extremely important. When, however, he spoke of its being the most far-reaching of any constitutional amendment that anyone had proposed, his memory has failed him for the moment. This resolution has been under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee for nearly a year. It worked upon the form of it for about six months in conjunction with the attorneys of the Treasury. It finally agreed upon the form which, for the first time, places a limit upon the manner in which a given taxable subject may be handled by the Congress. The original income tax amendment, which was the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution, provided that Congress should have power to levy and collect taxes upon incomes from whatever source derived without apportionment among the several States. At that time nearly everyone who read the amendment supposed it would give the National Government complete and sweeping authority over the State, municipality, county, and township issues to tax them as the Federal Government through Congress saw fit, and at any rate, whether it was different from the rate established by the Federal Government, either higher or lower, or establishing among them different classes. Subsequently, rather to the surprise of a great majority of lawyers, the Supreme Court, on passing on the sixteenth amendment, held that the words "from whatever source derived" were not controlling, and that the amendment simply removed the necessity of apportionment of these taxes. As a result the Federal Government lost the power through this amendment to tax State and municipal securities. There is now presented the most important problem that was ever presented to the Congress and the American people.

We have come, gentlemen of the House, to a parting of the ways. This Congress must decide whether our income tax law shall be in fact a real scientific system with some approach to fairness or whether it is to be simply an instrument of oppression upon the people. Under the present operation of the income tax there can be no tax which works more unfairly, more unjustly, and more inequitably than the income tax does, although when the sixteenth amendment was first introduced it was thought that the tax would work more fairly than any other and come more nearly doing justice to those who paid it. The proposition that is presented by this amendment is not only one that affects our Federal revenues, but it affects our business; it affects our social system. Year by year, I might almost say month by month, the great taxable incomes are falling off in number and in amount. Year by year and month by month the number of small incomes that are taxed by this Government in number and amount are steadily increasing. In other words, as we proceed under our present system and the days go by we tax the wealthy man less and the man of modest means more. I have here some tables showing how rapidly taxable incomes of those above $300,000 have decreased and how rapidly the taxable incomes of those below that amount have increased. You can see from the chart in 1916 1,296 incomes of over $300,000 were reported. In 1920 only 395 are reported.

There is not a man in the sound of my voice but knows these incomes are not decreasing in fact. It is the amount that is subject to the Federal tax that is decreasing. These great fortunes, and I am not complaining because they exist, these great fortunes are on the increase instead of on the decrease, but when it comes to paying taxes the amount taxable is steadily decreasing. But how is it with the small taxpayer?

You can see from the chart that the number of all classes that are paying taxes is almost 2,000,000 more in 1920 than even in 1919, showing that the Government is continually reaching out after the small taxpayer and making the man with a small income pay more, and that those with large incomes are investing more and more in tax-exempt securities. I might add also that the amount of tax-exempt securities is constantly increasing. About $1,500,000,000 have been issued this year, while in 1913 the total was only about $450,000.

I know that gentlemen say that the cost is equal, whether we tax these securities or whether we do not, but every tax expert who came before the Ways and Means Committee without exception testified that neither the Government nor the State got any great amount of benefit by reason of this tax exemption. Professor Seligman, Mr. Leffingwell, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and others who had studied the effect of issuing tax-exempt securities, all testified to the same effect. The party who gets the benefit of this tax exemption is not the State nor the Government but the man who buys these securities. And so great is this benefit that day by day, as I have said, everyone knows that the owners of great estates are gradually transferring all of their property into tax-exempt securities. It is easy to find men with incomes of over $100,000 who pay not a single cent to the National Treasury nor to the State, county, or township, while farmers, business men, and others are suffering under the burdensome and oppressive taxes that necessarily prevail to-day.

The gentleman from Tennessee has said that he was not in favor of a strong central government, for that would verge on sovietism. What does he expect will happen if this outrageous injustice is not remedied? I say without any hesitation that this condition of affairs can not long continue in this country; it can not for any great length of time exist half taxed and half free, when those who are the most wealthy pay little or nothing and those who have to bear the burden and the heat of the day must pay out of all proportion to their income or their property.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In just a moment. Under this system you may expect Bolshevism and sovietism to come upon us, for the present system is unendurable. It is such conditions that create Bolshevism and sovietism.

Now I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. I wish the gentleman would make it clear that we are not destroying the credit of the States. It is simply taxing the income. If you tax one, you can not tax the other. There is no attack upon the credit of any State.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Under this amendment the securities of a State can not be taxed at a higher rate than the tax upon the Federal securities, and this tax is simply upon income alone. It authorizes no property tax. The whole amendment is reciprocal in its effect. The State has the authority to tax in the same manner and to the same extent the securities of the Federal Government that the Federal Government has to tax the State securities.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. I wanted to know whether the gentleman agreed to the premises laid down by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that this proposed amendment did not give to Congress the power to destroy the State's credit?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There can be no possible question about it. It does not give that power. I know what my friend from Texas is coming to. He would say that the day may come when the Federal Government has no securities outstanding, and therefore at that time it may levy such a tax as it sees fit upon the State securities. If that remote and, as it seems to me, utterly impossible contingency should at any time take place, who are they who will sit here in these seats? The Representatives of the various States. The agents of the States who are devoted to their interests. Would the gentleman from Texas vote to destroy the power of his own State to issue securities? Would any gentleman on this floor vote for that? Can you imagine that any sane man would?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman allow me to answer that question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I will not vote to destroy the State securities; neither would I give the opportunity to anybody else to destroy the State credit.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then the gentleman wants to continue the present iniquity and take chances on the wrong and iniquity of the present system rather than take chances of the agents of the States themselves destroying the credit of the States.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I regret I can not.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I thought the gentleman had some information that the House would like to have. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to ask him this question: In the gentleman's judgment, if this amendment becomes a part of the Federal Constitution will it in any way interfere with the States in taxing their own securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not in the slightest degree. Each State can now do it, and it can tax the securities of another State.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I know each State can do that now, but the gentleman does not think this amendment would give the Congress the power in any way to interfere with the States taxing their own securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not at all. It certainly would not.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Under this amendment could Congress impose a graduated tax upon the income derived from those State securities? Two per cent on an income of over $1,000 and 3 per cent and higher on an income of $10,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It could if it chose impose the same kind of tax upon its own securities. The only provision here is that there shall be absolutely no discrimination in any manner whatsoever against the State securities. So long as privileges and rights and exemptions are kept the same the rate of tax can be progressive.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. What does the gentleman understand to be the right of one State to tax the security of another State at this time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no question but that they have the right to tax the securities of another State at this time.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. GARNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, please call my attention to the fact when I have occupied as much as 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I regret that the advocates of this proposed constitutional amendment have not given you a more elaborate explanation of the effect which it will have, if adopted. However, I realize, and I think the membership of the House realizes, that there are few in the House that fully understand the far-reaching effect of the proposed amendment. I think I am not out of harmony with the truth when I say that the gentleman [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] who presented the matter a few moments ago, learned and able as he is, is not fully cognizant himself of the effect of the proposed amendment.

There is always a primary purpose in the submission of either a constitutional amendment or a bill before the House of Representatives. However long the bill may be, or however short it may be, so far as its verbiage is concerned, there is a principal purpose in the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] tells you, and I believe he is sincere in his own belief, that the purpose of this proposed amendment is to subject the income from State, county, and municipal bonds to the taxing power of the Federal Government in order that rich people might not escape their fair burden of taxation by virtue of investing their funds in such securities.

I ask you whether or not the record in this case justifies Mr. GREEN in that attitude? I say no. I undertake to say that hearings in this case, propaganda coming from all portions of the United States, the declaration of the President himself to Congress show that the primary purpose of this proposed amendment is to restrict and, if necessary, prohibit the issuance of county, State, and municipal bonds.

Now, why do I say that? I challenge you to read the message of the President on this subject again, because in it you will find this declaration that these bonds ought to be subject to taxation, for the reason that they are absorbing the capital of the Nation, diverting it from active industry; and therefore Congress should restrict it by this method.

Now, will anyone challenge my statement? Does anyone dispute that the President is the highest authority in the advocacy of this amendment that I can give as a witness? I cite his language, where he says in his message of December 6, 1921:

> I think our tax problems, the tendency of wealth to seek nontaxable investment, and the menacing increase of public debt—Federal, State, and municipal—all justify a proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. He gives the additional reason that it is necessary in order to check the extravagance of the States and their subdivisions.

Mr. GARNER. Yes. I say there is a paramount, primary purpose in the mind of every man who draws an amendment to the Constitution and submits it, or who draws a bill and submits it to the Congress, and I say that the primary purpose of the men who are back of this amendment—I do not include the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] or the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], for I concede their entire good faith—but I say the prime purpose of the men who have been agitating this amendment most and who would have it adopted as a part of the Constitution is to restrict and, if need be, to prohibit almost entirely the issuance of State, county, and municipal bonds.

Now, gentlemen, we had just as well come to the crux of the whole matter, because time is limited. Let me criticize, if I may without being partisan in any way, the Republican organization for limiting the debate on this resolution to four hours. Here we are to call upon the House of Representatives to submit to the sovereign States of the Union an amendment proposing to take away from them their credit or to seriously impair it, with only four hours of general debate to discuss so important and far-reaching a subject.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman; yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware that this proposition has been before the Committee on Ways and Means for more than a year, that it has been discussed in that committee and discussed on the floor here, and that it has been under discussion in the public press.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the gentleman says, but nevertheless I know that I speak within proper bounds when I say that I have heard 25 Members say they did not understand the full meaning and effect of this amendment; that they were going to get the hearings and make a more thorough study of the subject. I venture to say that many of these Members who have spoken to me in that vein are sitting on the floor of the House now. This debate should not be rushed to a conclusion within four hours. The House needs more time than that to consider it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This proposed amendment was reported more than six months ago.

Mr. GARNER. Well, there are many bills and resolutions which have been reported from committees. Merely because a bill or resolution has been reported for some time does not alter the case any. It does occur to me that you might have given more general debate on this subject without interfering with or jeopardizing your program of passing certain appropriation bills before the holidays.

I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] if he agreed with the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that he would place in the hands of the Congress the power to destroy the issuance of bonds by States and municipalities if we adopt this amendment. He said he did not; that this proposed amendment would not place in the hands of Congress the power to prohibit the issuance of bonds by States and municipalities. Is that correct?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That statement certainly is not correct, if I understand what you say.

Mr. GARNER. Now we have an issue.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does not prohibit the issuance of any State bonds.

Mr. GARNER. All right. I will make this proposition to the House: If I can not demonstrate to any five lawyers you may select in the House of Representatives—and you may select them—if I can not demonstrate to them that this places in the hands of the Congress the power to take away from the States and municipalities the right to issue bonds by taking away from the owners of such bonds the interest income by taxation, I will retire from this contest and have nothing more to say about the amendment. Just a moment now and let me see if I can not convince you that if this amendment is ratified the Congress of the United States will have the power to destroy the credit of the States, because it will have the power to take as a tax all the interest that the bondholders receive and put it in the Treasury of the United States. Let us suppose, gentlemen, that to-morrow this amendment was a part of the Constitution of the United States and that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and that he desired to prohibit every State in the Union and every county and every municipality from issuing any more bonds. Suppose that was his purpose and he should report a bill under this constitutional amendment which would say that every dollar of interest on State, municipal, county, and Federal bonds received by any individual upon bonds hereafter issued—because you could not affect those theretofore issued—every dollar received in the way of interest on those bonds should be paid into the Treasury of the United States as a tax. You would not have any more bonds issued, would you? Would that be constitutional?

I can not believe that, if Members of Congress understood that the power contained in this amendment, if adopted, might be used to take away from the States the chance to get any money whatever on their bonds, they would for a moment even consider the possibility of voting for it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me for just a moment?

Mr. GARNER. Just a moment. Now, if Congress should pass a law in which it should provide that hereafter as to any bonds issued by the Federal Government or any State government or its subdivisions, all of the interest received on such bonds should go into the Federal Treasury, would it not have the power to do that under this amendment?

Mr. MILLS. I will answer the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman can not answer it, because this amendment gives the United States Congress such power.

Mr. MILLS. If the gentleman wants an answer, I will answer him now.

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman until he answers.

Mr. MILLS. You are given the power to tax, but if the Federal Government exercised that power for the purpose of confiscation it would clearly be extraconstitutional.

Mr. GARNER. Now, gentlemen, we understand we could go up to where it was confiscation. The sale of State and municipal bonds would in all probability be effectually killed long before the point of a confiscation tax was reached within the meaning of the decisions of the courts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was once said, I believe, that the power to tax is the power to destroy.

Mr. GARNER. I believe somebody said that in the Supreme Court a long time ago. Chief Justice Marshall, who did more to interpret and vitalize the Constitution than any man who ever sat upon the Supreme bench, said it.

Mr. STEVENSON. And the very thing that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] says would be confiscation was done when Congress taxed out of existence the issues of State banks, when it established the national banks.

Mr. MILLS. That was a special tax and not a general tax.

Mr. GARNER. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question for the information of the House and myself. If the power which the gentleman describes, and I think in absolutely correct terms, can be employed by the Federal Government with reference to State issues or of municipalities, can it be applied without applying the same rates of taxation to its own issues?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly not. Now the gentleman from New York will please give heed to this phase of the matter, which he probably has not considered. There have been periods of 5 and 10 and 15 years in which the Federal Government did not issue any bonds.

Suppose the Congress of the United States does not issue any bonds for the next five years, but it does desire to stop or restrict the issuance of State or subdivision bonds, and passes a law in which it says that on all bonds in the future issued by Federal, State, or subdivisions there shall be levied a flat 10 per cent tax. That would be enough, would it not?

Mr. COCKRAN. Pretty nearly. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. But suppose we say 50 per cent—make it strong enough for illustration—that any bonds hereafter issued should pay a tax of 50 per cent on the income. The result would be, I think, that all issues of bonds, Federal and subdivisions, would cease. The tax burden would be too heavy for the bond-investing public.

Now, at the end of this five-year period Congress finds that it wants to issue a billion dollars' worth of bonds. Congress meets and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, brings in a bill repealing the tax law. The United States Government then issues its billion dollars' worth of bonds and sells them tax exempt. Congress then, after the bonds are sold and are in the hands of investors, reenacts the law. Where is the State given any right to get along in the world? [Applause.] It is as plain as any human being can make it.

Mr. MILLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman knows that while it might repeal the law temporarily, the minute it reenacted the law it would apply with full force to the billion dollars' worth of bonds issued by the Federal Government.

Mr. GARNER. Congress passed a shipping bill the other day, and what was one of the principal things which it contained? It was an opportunity to make a contract for 10 years with shipowners which could not be abrogated by any subsequent Congress. If the Government sold its bonds based upon a law exempting them from taxation, how are you going to change it by enacting another statute. It is a contract. Do you think the Congress of the United States would have the power now to subject them to taxation in the hands of the people who own them? Do you believe that? What is the theory of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. This very article in the Constitution would prevent the issuance of tax-free United States Government bonds if the bonds of the States and municipalities were ever taxed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the Federal bonds issued after the enactment of this amendment are made tax exempt, then the State bonds must be also exempt, and they could not under the amendment do any such thing as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. In all probability all the bonds issued by the Federal Government in the next few years will be renewal of bonds already in existence. Would this amendment give the Federal Government the power to tax the renewal bonds?

Mr. GARNER. The Federal Government has that power now. It has unlimited power to tax the income of its own bonds.

Mr. BARKLEY. But some bonds are now tax free.

Mr. GARNER. If you undertake to refund them, Congress would have the right to make any conditions it wanted to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the States have the right to tax the income on the refunded bonds?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly not under the present law and constitutional limitations.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that nobody outside of a few of the membership of the House can get any time to discuss this matter, I would like to bring out some points in the gentleman's time. What effect will this have on the Federal farm-loan system?

Mr. GARNER. I will try to come to that.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will; and then I want to get on.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman suggests some grave objections to this amendment, and I want to ask him if he has given any consideration to an additional illustration that occurs to me at this time. It is this: We have a surtax now that runs up to 50 per cent. This is in addition to the normal tax of 8 per cent.

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If we pass a law permitting States to tax income from Federal bonds, the States might also enact surtaxes as high as 50 per cent, and between the two taxes the taxpayer would find all of his income from these securities taken by means of the surtaxes of the State and Federal Governments. That, it seems to me, would destroy the salability of the bonds.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, let me answer everyone who thinks for one moment that the States are gaining anything by this, by saying no. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who introduced the original resolution, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, said that this was a mere sop to the States and had no intention of being any benefit to them. He is the author of it. I gave the President as authority for the principal object of this legislation, and I give you the authority of the author as to what effect it will have upon the States.

The advocates of this amendment talk about it from an economic standpoint. I can demonstrate, and the estimator for the Treasury Department will bear it out, that for every dollar's worth of taxes you get in the way of taxation by virtue of this amendment the interest paid will be four times that tax. The people pay this in the long run, whether the bonds are issued by the Federal Government, the State government, the county, the school district, the road district, the irrigation district, the drainage district, or by whatever other political subdivision. The people pay for it after all. Why do you want to adopt a system by which for every dollar you get into the Treasury of the United States $4 will have to be paid by the public in the form of added interest?

I have that statement from the Secretary of the Treasury—not the figures I have quoted, but I have got the statement from the Secretary of the Treasury that undoubtedly the adoption of this amendment will increase the rate of interest on all bonds—State, county, and municipal. Why, I go further than that and say it will stop the issue. It will so cripple the market for these county and State bonds that you can not sell them, and why? I have an issue, we will say, of a million dollars' worth of bonds from the city of San Antonio, Tex. They are perfectly good, they bear 5 per cent interest, a very high rate, by the way, for those bonds, because I think they have sold them above par drawing only 4½ per cent interest; but I have them at 5 per cent, and I go to Mr. Mills in New York and I say, "I want to sell you these bonds." He replies, "Mr. GARNER, the city of San Antonio is a large city, that security is perfectly good, but there is a provision in the Constitution of the United States which says that the Congress may the day after to-morrow, after I buy these bonds at 5 per cent, take 2½ per cent away from me as income tax and put it in the Treasury. I do not want your bonds." That is quite natural on his part. He is a business man. He is not going to buy something that the Congress of the United States in 24 hours can destroy. Is not that so, Mr. MILLS? Can not the United States destroy that bond for you?

Mr. MILLS. Only by destroying every other security on the market.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, I am just giving illustrations of what might be done if this amendment passes. The power to tax income from State, county, and municipal bonds would be the power to destroy them.

I can go before a joint session of the Legislature of the State of Texas and say, "Gentlemen, here is what Mr. MILLS sent down to you. He wants you to surrender the right of the people over in your district to issue bonds by giving power to the Federal Government to levy whatever taxes it sees fit against them, and what are you going to do about it?" And I have no doubt that they will say, "To the lower regions with such a proposition." They will say that they are not going to give up their right to reclaim the desert lands by a bond issue for irrigation, their right to protect the people of the cities in their health by the issue of bonds for sewerage, and their right to build roads in this country by bond issues.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. I will yield in a moment, after I have discussed a little further the proposition I am now talking about. The Federal Government is itself encouraging, and I might say promoting, the issuance of road bonds by the several States, because of the large appropriations made by Congress to be spent in cooperation with the States. These appropriations require the States to match the amount dollar for dollar. How can they do it except by bond issues, and yet you gentlemen come to Congress and ask us to surrender the State right to issue those bonds free from the right of the Federal Government to tax them. You Republicans, by bills brought from your committees, have exempted bonds of the United States Government to the amount of nearly $20,000,000,000. Doctor Seligman said that we have thirty billions of bonds in this country exempt to a more or less extent from taxation, and he is correct. Why? Because Congress did it. The law exempted them. You Republicans passed a provision in the last bill in which you carried $125,000 worth of bonds for every man, woman, and child in this country that could own them, as exempt from income tax, and all a rich man has to do is to place $125,000 in the name of each one of the family, and he does not have to pay anything in the way of income tax on a very large amount of bonds, and you Republicans did it, so that I think you are somewhat estopped from coming to the Congress now and complaining about this tremendous issue of tax-exempt bonds.

Who are the people back of the propaganda for this amendment? I have tried to show you that the President said the real reason for it was that it would restrict the issuance of these State and municipal bonds, so that the money could go elsewhere into other kinds of business. I thought to myself, when I heard him read that portion of his message, what is more important to this country than the building of schoolhouses, the construction of good roads, the reclaiming of the desert lands, and the cultivation of the waste places. Thank God money can be invested in that way. These things are conservers of civilization. If they fail, then our boasted civilization sinks into chaos. If you are going to take away the power to issue bonds to do these things, then these things can not be done.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he contends that State and municipal ability to market bonds is dependent upon the tax-exempt privilege?

Mr. GARNER. Not altogether. The extent of the impairment of the ability to market these bonds would depend upon how heavy the rate of Federal taxation. If present extravagance on the part of the Federal Government continues, taxation will increase instead of decrease. While I am not a supporter of this proposed amendment, I am going to offer amendments in perfect good faith, which I think, if adopted, will greatly improve it. My amendments would confine the power of the Federal Government to tax the income from State and municipal securities at no higher rate than income from "any other source." Is not that what you want? Do you not want to subject the income from these bonds to the same tax that you levy against the income from, we will say, Pennsylvania Railroad stocks and bonds? You do not want to do that. I am going to offer an amendment which, if adopted, will make certain that the Federal Government would not have the power to levy a tax which would discriminate against State and municipal bonds in favor of industrial bonds. The amendments which I will offer at the proper time are:

Amendment No. 1. Strike out all after the word "from," line 1, page 2, first section of the bill, and insert "any other purpose."

Amendment No. 2. Strike out all after the word "from," line 8, page 2, and insert "any other source."

I think a great many people in this country, perhaps a majority of them, would like to subject the income on these county, State, and municipal bonds to taxation, if it could be done without impairing their credit. I think that is absolutely true. I want to do that. I would like to do it. I would join with any man who is able to solve the difficulty. I offered to join the gentleman from Iowa, and he said——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER. I ask some gentleman to whom I have agreed to yield time if I may have 10 minutes more.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Take my time.

Mr. GARNER. Thank you. Now, let me say, I can take the inheritance tax law—I see you shake your head—I can take the inheritance tax law and I can put it on the books so that in the course of time the graduation will be the same, and I will get the same amount of money from these securities or maybe more than I will from securities that are subject to Federal income tax.

I might also add in this discussion that the States have already surrendered about all the power they should to the Federal Government.

How far, gentlemen, how far are we going to go in surrendering to the Federal Government the right to control society, finance, and everything else pertaining to the people? If the Federal Government keeps on assuming functions which properly belong to the State government, what is there going to be left for the State to do anyhow, except to duplicate what the Federal Government is doing? There is another point in this matter which I want to emphasize before I conclude my remarks. There is about $11,000,000,000 in round numbers of these State, municipal, and county securities outstanding. Now, gentlemen, do you know what that means? Do you know that the passage of this proposed amendment by the States would increase the value of those outstanding bonds two billions and a half? Perhaps that explains some of the activity for this amendment. It is natural that the owners of these securities would favor an amendment which would increase their wealth by 10 or 15 per cent. It is a natural thing for them to want legislation that will increase it. Then, there is another active group who are urging this amendment. They are the gentlemen who have heretofore been loaning large sums on landed property in this country. Ah, gentlemen, the records of the hearings on this amendment are full of their advocacy of it. They want Congress to discontinue the tax exemption feature as to farm loan bonds. I say that because the men who appeared and represented these loan companies frankly admitted it. They were honest fellows, at least. They said they could not compete with this non-tax money. The situation as to agriculture and live stock we all know has been bad. Why, you find in the present Congress a number of bills having for their object the affording of relief to these important interests. How can you do so? I say the man who has given it one moment's thought knows that you can not help the farmer get cheap money except in one of two ways. You can loan him the Government's credit or you can afford him a system like the farm loan system, wherein his own securities are assembled and sold to the investing public free of Federal, State, and municipal taxes. I much prefer this latter system than the loaning of the Government's credit, because I think it is a much sounder one.

Shall we drive the Government into the business of direct loans to agriculture by removing the tax exemption from Federal farm loan bonds? I am not willing to do so.

I fear that these gentlemen who are clamoring so loudly for the removal of tax exemption from farm loan bonds do not want the system to succeed.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, I know if you ask the people if they want to tax the securities in the hands of the rich people they will say yes. The farmers and the farm unions and the chambers of commerce say they favor this amendment. At least some of them do. But I believe a more thorough study of the proposition and a full realization of all that its adoption might mean will change their conclusions in the question at issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Just one minute more. And, gentlemen, as for me, especially in respect to constitutional amendments which go so far to affect the very fundamentals of our Government, I feel a very keen responsibility. I will vote for what I believe to be for the best interests of the whole people, of posterity, of my children and grandchildren, rather than in accordance with propaganda which is frequently based on imperfect understanding and must surely and certainly give way to better reason and judgment. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to Senate amendment No. 4 to the bill (H. R. 13316) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I was to have 30 minutes. It is impossible to argue this proposition in 30 minutes, so that I shall ask the Members of the House not to interrupt me, because I prefer to present in a logical way the reasons why I am going to support this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman can not complete his argument in the time given, I will give him more.

Mr. CRISP. I will try to get through. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, when this amendment was at first proposed, I was against it. As the hearings progressed, attending those hearings and listening to the witnesses, I became convinced that it was the greatest economic evil, this matter of tax-exempt securities, that confronted the country, and I believed the welfare of my country demanded that that evil be stopped, and the only way that I know of whereby you can correct the evil is by a constitutional amendment providing that in the future tax-exempt securities can not be issued.

I am proud of our dual system and have reverence for our forefathers who created this great Government, and I do not think the fundamental law should be changed lightly or with every passing whim, but only where the welfare of the country is vitally concerned.

It is with regret that I find myself differing with my party leaders on this subject, but it is not a political question but an economic one. Besides, Mr. Chairman, years ago I decided as long as I was in Congress to be true to my convictions and vote in accordance with them, and I shall do so in this instance. I believe in State rights. I believe our system of government is the greatest one ever devised. But those statesmen of years gone by realized that the world moves. They realized that time would demonstrate the necessity for amendments to the Constitution, and they provided a method in the Constitution itself whereby it could be amended; and since the Government was organized 19 amendments have already been adopted to that sacred instrument, so it is no sacrilege to again amend it.

Now, gentlemen, at the time the Government was formed the tax-exempt privilege was more of a theory than an actual economic condition. It really conferred no special benefit and worked no serious injury, and the tax-exempt privilege did not become of great importance until the country adopted the sixteenth amendment which authorized an income-tax law and Congress had passed a graduated income-tax system. Then it became of vast and vital importance. I believe in a graduated income tax. Economists of every country believe that the fairest of all taxes are graduated income taxes. They believe that men should pay taxes according to their ability to pay. We have an income tax law, both dominant political parties of the country supporting it, and we have provided for high surtaxes. Gentlemen, if you do not stop the issue of tax-free securities you absolutely nullify and destroy your income tax law.

Now, I have always heard the adage, "Beware of Greeks bearing gifts," and long before to-day I had thought of that in connection with this constitutional amendment. Unfortunately for me, I am not rich; unfortunately for me, I do not own a bond that will be affected by this legislation. But when I saw a number of able, wealthy gentlemen advocating this amendment I began to look around to see why. It is quite apparent why a man that believes in high surtaxes should favor it, but I was more at a loss to see the reason which actuated those who did not believe in them in supporting it unless, if you wish to attribute an unworthy motive to them, it was because they owned a great number of tax-exempt securities whose values would be increased by the adoption of the amendment. I know many splendid rich men and I prefer to believe they are supporting the amendment for love of country and patriotic reasons and not for selfish, ulterior motives.

But, gentlemen, be that as it may, as I read the testimony and listened to the hearings I became convinced of the absolute necessity for legislation being enacted that would stop the vast fortunes of this country from escaping taxation by being invested in tax-exempt securities, and the one way to do it is by a constitutional amendment.

Gentlemen of the Congress, do you realize the vast amount of tax-free bonds now outstanding and available for investment? According to the testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, there are between 10 and 15 billions of State and municipal tax-free bonds in existence, and 3 billions of United States bonds totally exempt, making an aggregate of totally tax-exempt securities of from 13 to 18 billions of dollars. In addition, there are outstanding about 18 billions of United States bonds containing certain tax-exempt privileges for the next three years, which swell the total of possibly tax-exempt securities to from 20 to 30 billions of dollars.

These securities afford a complete haven of refuge to wealthy men seeking to escape taxation, and they are undoubtedly availing themselves of the privilege. In his message of December 6, 1921, President Harding said:

I think our tax problems—the tendency of wealth to secure nontaxable investments and the menacing increase of public debt, State, Federal, and municipal—all justify the proposal to change the Constitution so as to end the issue of nontaxable bonds.

Financing the late European war was a Herculean task, but the Democratic administration successfully did it. The man who directed the financing was the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. R. C. Leffingwell, so he qualifies at once as a bond and tax expert. Referring to tax-exempt securities in testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, he said:

Tax exemption is a very grave peril that to-day undermines the very basis of public revenue, and it is a social evil of the first magnitude. It casts the greater part of the tax burden upon earned incomes and gives more or less immunity to unearned incomes. It diverts capital from productive enterprises and housing into wasteful or deferable Government enterprises. * * * I think the combined social and economic objection to the present situation is absolutely controlling. This country has been a land of opportunity, and to-day's rich men got to be rich men when the money they saved was theirs and not the Government's. By virtue of the high surtaxes and the exemptions awarded to the fortunes already existing you are confirming in their monopoly of the country's capital the rich men who got to be rich men before the war, and you are denying to the men who had not gotten there before the war the hope of ever getting there. You have taken away a very important stimulus to effort, and you have created a sense of social wrong that is a very grave problem, because it is a social wrong to take a third of the income "of a man who with his brains made $50,000 last year and had not a penny before, and to take nothing of the income of a man sitting at home or in his club and enjoying an income of $50,000 derived from tax-exempt bonds."

Hon. D. F. Houston and Hon. CARTER GLASS, both Secretaries of the Treasury under President Woodrow Wilson, in their annual reports to Congress called attention to the evils of tax-exempt securities. The present Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Andrew Mellon, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, said:

Tax-exempt bonds issued by the Nation, States, and municipalities are drying up the sources of industrial capital and placing a premium on extravagance in government—

That tax-exempt securities constitute one of the greatest economic evils the country has ever faced; that—as long as a large percentage of those most able to pay taxes escape all tax burdens through investment in tax-exempt securities the balance of the population must pay double taxes to raise the revenue needed by the Government.

The hearings before the Ways and Means Committee will disclose telegrams from 15 governors of the States urging the submission of this amendment; 6 governors opposed the amendment, 7 were noncommittal, and the remaining governors did not communicate with the committee on the subject.

The committee hearings show that the subject of tax-exempt securities has been given careful consideration by various tax associations and tax experts. Many of them appeared before the committee and testified, urging the submission of the amendment, among them the National Tax Association, composed of representatives from every State, the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the United States Chamber of Commerce, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the American Economic Association, the Investment Bankers' Association, the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association, associations representing the public-utility business, the New York State tax conference, the People's Reconstruction League, the Ohio Tax Association, representatives of labor organizations, and a large number of business men from the different States of the Union. So far as the committee knows, all prominent authorities on the subject of taxation favor the proposed amendment. This is the only one of the great nations that permits the issuance of tax-exempt securities.

The Dearborn Independent, a newspaper owned by Henry Ford, expressing Mr. Ford's views on this subject, says:

Why should any class of private or corporate property be exempt from taxation? Some one has to pay. Just as the general public had to make up revenue lost in rebates and free passage, so the rest of us are forced to pay a double share to make up for the exempts and delinquents.

The Atlanta Constitution, one of the leading dailies of the South, editorially says on the subject:

There should be no tax-exempt securities. Every dollar should be compelled to contribute its pro rata share toward the support of the Government and the upbuilding of the country. There should be no favoritism as between legitimate investments, so far as the principle of taxation is concerned. So long as there is a bomb-proof, tax-exempt cellar in which capital may hide away from the tax gatherer, the burden of maintaining the Government and of providing adequate public-utility facilities for the masses will not be justly and equitably distributed among the people.

That the wealth of the country is not bearing its just burden of government and is escaping taxation by being invested in these tax-free securities no one who will study the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee or study the statistics from the Treasury Department can for one moment doubt. Money goes where it will make the greatest return to the owner. If I had money I would so invest it, you would so invest it, and the men who have money now do so invest it.

Let me call your attention to some statistics relative to the income tax.

Table showing decline of taxable incomes over $300,000.

	Number of returns.		Net income.
	All classes.	Incomes over $300,000.	All classes.	Incomes over $300,000.
1916	437,036	1,296	$6,298,577,620	$992,972,986
1917	3,472,890	1,015	13,652,383,207	731,372,153
1918	4,425,114	627	15,924,639,355	401,107,898
1919	5,332,760	679	19,859,491,448	440,011,589
1920	7,259,944	169	23,735,629,183

You will observe from the table that, in 1916, 1,296 persons returned an income of over $300,000 each, while in 1920 the number paying a tax on such incomes dropped to 169 persons. To-day, I have no doubt, the number is much less than 169.

The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year 1920 shows that 1,900,000 more persons made income-tax returns that year than made them in 1919; that the aggregate income reported was approximately $4,000,000,000 more than it was in 1919; and yet, notwithstanding that there were 1,900,000 more persons making returns and the taxable income was $4,000,000,000 more, the Government lacked $194,000,000 of collecting as much tax from incomes in 1920 as it collected the year before, 1919. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, there was $1,300,000,000 less collected from incomes and from corporation taxes than was collected the year before. Congress repealed the excess-profits tax, and the greatest estimate we have heard as to the amount it would produce was $450,000,000. If you subtract that from the $1,300,000,000 left, it will leave a falling off from income taxes of $947,000,000 in the last taxable year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With small incomes paying more all the time.

Mr. CRISP. I stated that there were 1,900,000 more income-tax payers than the year before. Now, gentlemen, how can you account for that? There is only one way to account for it. The great wealth of the country is going into tax-exempt securities and avoiding taxation.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. No; I ask the Members kindly not to interrupt me for the reason I gave.

Doctor Adams, tax expert for the United States Treasury Department, states that a man with a very large income will receive more from a 5½ tax-exempt security than he will from an investment paying 24 per cent; that a rich man with an income of a million a year, if he buys a farm mortgage or stock paying 6 per cent, will net only 1 per cent a year, whereas a tax-exempt security will net 5½. The president of the American Railway Electric Association is quoted as saying, "No man with an income of above $10,000 can afford to buy an 8 per cent taxable security; he will net more by purchasing a tax-exempt bond paying 5 per cent."

The following quotation is from Collier's:

The banker, Jacob H. Schiff, left an estate valued at nearly $35,000,000. The net taxable income from the whole of it worked out at scarcely 1½ per cent per year. The bulk of his estate was in tax-exempt bonds, because the surtaxes on other investments would have left him a lower rate of return than did the bonds. Schiff was a business man. Tax schedules did not tax him, but only forced his money out of business uses into governmental uses. He had to invest his money not with those who build up industry but with those who spend the proceeds of State, city, and national bond issues. The information contained in such wills as that of Jacob H. Schiff is disquieting to those who want to "make the rich pay all the taxes."

Our colleague from New York [Mr. MILLS], who is a very able man and a financier, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee, said:

Now, the reason why the rich man prefers the tax-exempt bond at 8½ per cent at 97 is that it yields him a very large income, equivalent to a 12 per cent taxable security, and yet he pays less than par for it.

The late railroad magnate, James J. Hill, left a large fortune invested in taxable securities, which netted his widow an income of $365,000 a year. The trustee of the estate sold these taxable securities and invested the proceeds in tax-free securities and thereby increased the income of the widow to $730,000 a year, thus practically doubling the income. This is not an isolated case, but there are thousands like it.

Julius S. Bache, a New York multimillionaire, states:

The rich escape taxation now, as they have an asylum in tax-exempt bonds.

Charles M. Schwab, multimillionaire steel manufacturer, is quoted as saying he could withdraw from active industry, invest his capital in tax-exempt securities, and net four times as much as he now receives.

If you will investigate the statistics available, you can not escape the conclusion that the men with large fortunes are doing just what you and I would do—investing their money where it yields them the greatest return, and they get the greatest return by withdrawing it from industry and investing it in tax-exempt securities.

Gentlemen, Mr. McCoy, the actuary of the Treasury Department, testifying before the Committee on Ways and Means, estimated that the Government probably lost directly about $120,000,000 on account of not being able to collect a tax on the incomes derived from these tax-exempt securities; but he said that was not all that the Government lost. Men with large fortunes can invest a part of their money in these tax-exempt securities, and if half of their income is yielded from these tax-exempt securities and the other half from taxable securities, making the total income, say, $300,000, if half of it is from nontaxable securities, when the man comes to pay surtaxes he is paying surtaxes on the bracket of $150,000 instead of the $300,000 bracket, when his income, as a matter of fact, is $300,000. The Government is losing many thousands of dollars indirectly in that way in addition to the millions lost directly from not being permitted to tax incomes derived from tax-exempt bonds.

Professor Seligman, of Columbia University, estimates the direct loss of revenue to the Government from tax-exempt bonds at approximately 250 million a year. I believe a study of income-tax statistics will demonstrate that the loss far exceeds this amount.

The proposed amendment does not attempt to tax or affect in any way the bonds now issued, for Congress can not pass any retroactive law. Neither does the amendment propose to tax the ad valorem or market value of bonds to be issued in the future. It only proposes to tax the interest as a part of a man's income derived from bonds issued after this amendment is ratified by the States and becomes a part of the Constitution.

But, gentlemen, to me not only is the loss of money by the Government a reason why this amendment should be adopted but there are other reasons. Tax-exempt securities stagnate business. They put a premium on idleness. They withdraw money from the necessary industrial and business channels of the country. In my judgment they make people pay more for the necessities of life and really add indirectly to the high cost of living. Why do I say that? The railroads must have money for betterments and development. They go into the market and compete with tax-exempt securities. The man with money to loan is going to loan it where it pays him the most. He gets more from a 5 per cent tax-free municipal bond than he does from a 10 or 12 per cent taxable loan if he is a man of large fortune. Therefore, if the railroads get the money necessary for their development they must pay a high rate of interest, which tends to keep up high freight and passenger rates. High freight and passenger rates is one of the great evils of the day. It prevents the farmer from receiving a fair price for his products, and it forces the city man to pay a high price for what he buys.

Let me read you what Mr. Hoover, our present Secretary of Commerce, had to say. Mr. Hoover is a man of world-wide reputation. He says:

Surplus capital is pouring by the hundreds of millions monthly into tax-free securities and foreign loans, and yet our railroads are unable to finance the most moderate of construction programs.

What applies to the railroads applies to other lines of industry. There appeared before the Ways and Means Committee representatives of the various real estate boards throughout the country. I remember the president of the board from Detroit said that there was a shortage of 25,000 to 30,000 homes in Detroit alone; that they could not build them because they had to pay 20 to 25 per cent for money when they used to get it for 10 and 12 per cent; that they could not get it because men with capital were investing their money in tax-free securities that netted them the most. It has been known always, almost a matter of common repute in the United States, that the Astors never sold any real estate, that they held their real estate in New York City.

I understand that within the last few years, since the income tax has been in operation, the Astors have sold $40,000,000 worth of real estate, and are still selling as fast as they can, because after paying taxes, insurance, and high income-tax rates it did not pay them to keep it; they would net more by selling the real estate and investing the proceeds in tax-free securities.

Gentlemen of the Congress, you will find that the public-service corporations, according to testimony of representatives who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, are charging the consumers of gas, electricity, and water higher rates because they have to pay higher interest rates for the necessary money to operate their business. They testified before the committee that when they went into the market before the tax-exempt securities became so valuable to the rich they could get money at a reasonable rate and they sold gas and electricity and water to the consumer cheaper, but now they have to charge the consumers more because they have to pay more for the money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. CRISP. I thank the gentleman. Now, we are all much interested in the farmers. According to the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, there are about $8,000,000,000 of farm mortgages out in the United States. According to these hearings, only about 5 per cent of that amount was obtained through Government agency or the rural credit land banks. You who are sincerely solicitous for the farmer think well of this—95 per cent of the loans outstanding, owed by the farmers, is money belonging to private individuals, mostly men of large means. Five per cent tax-free securities will net the investor more than a 7 or 8 per cent farm mortgage. What is the result? The farmers are finding it difficult to borrow money, and when their loans mature—and they are maturing all the time—if they can not finance a renewal, it means sales of homes and farms on the sheriff's block. A witness testified before the Senate committee that a few years ago there was a gentleman that had $7,000,000 invested in farm mortgages. Now he has 95 per cent of that $7,000,000 withdrawn from the farm mortgages and has invested it in tax-free securities.

There is a gentleman who resides in my home town, Mr. Ellis, who for years has done an extensive business in loaning money on first mortgages on land. He has sold many million dollars of farm-mortgage notes in the East and the West and different parts of the United States. He was in my office a few days ago and stated that he had just returned from Chicago; that in years past he had sold many thousand dollars' worth of these mortgages to the estate of Marshall Field; that he went to see the trustee of the estate the other day and wanted to sell him more mortgages and the trustee said, "No; we will not take any more mortgages; we are collecting those we own as fast as we can and investing the money in tax-free securities, because it nets us more."

There is a grave social evil of tax-free securities, and that is that it builds up an idle class of rich men who toil not, men who give employment to no one, men who contribute nothing to society, men who are drones. They withdraw their capital from business, they do nothing for society or the Government. They flaunt their wealth in the faces of the laboring people; they spend lavishly, living in luxury and ease, and the only work they do is to clip their coupons from tax-exempt bonds. Do you wonder that men and women who labor for daily bread become dissatisfied with the Government which permits this injustice?

Now, let me call your attention to a few things. A man who works or is in business and earns an income of $10,000 must pay a tax to the Government of $520. A man who has an income of $10,000 from tax-free bonds pays no tax to the Government. A man who has $20,000 income from business pays $1,720 tax. A man who has $20,000 from tax-free bonds pays nothing. The man who has an income of $50,000, which he has earned, pays $8,640, while the man who clips his coupons from the tax-free bonds pays nothing. A man who has $300,000 from his business pays $144,000 in taxes, and the man who inherits bonds and has a net income of $300,000 pays nothing. Do you think that is good for the body politic? Does not that tend to breed anarchy and discontent and contempt for the Government that permits it? How long, O Lord, how long will this be continued. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, I do not blame the rich. If I were rich, I would do it. The law invites it, and therefore there is nothing dishonorable in doing it. What I blame is the lawmakers and the law that continues to permit that policy to be pursued. [Applause.] That is the way I feel about it. But I must hasten along for my time is short, and I do not intend to ask that it be extended, for many other gentlemen desire to speak and the time for debate is limited. I have already had more than my share of the time. There are two objections, and only two that I have been able to find against this constitutional amendment. One is that it will increase the value of bonds already outstanding. The testimony before the Ways and Means Committee was that there are ten or fifteen billion municipal bonds outstanding, and, of course, this will increase their value. But you know it will be absolutely necessary some time to stop this practice or you will dry up your source of revenue for the Federal Government, and if the Federal Government can not collect money from the wealth of the land through an income tax, as sure as the night follows the day Congress will have to levy consumption taxes, sales taxes, excise taxes, and other vicious annoying taxes, for the Government must have revenue. Therefore "I would rather bear the ills we have than to fly to others we know not of." I prefer to stop it now when we have only ten or fifteen billions, rather than to wait a few years when there will be from twenty to thirty billions outstanding, which will have to be increased in value. According to the best information available, there were 1,300,000,000 tax-exempt bonds issued this year (1922). If you do not prevent this growing evil by a constitutional amendment, each year the amount issued will increase and keep on piling up. So if you do not do it now, when you do stop their issue—which at some time you will be compelled to do—there will be many more bonds out than are out now whose value will have to be increased.

The other and only objection I can find is that it might possibly, and probably will, make the State and municipalities pay a little more interest on the money borrowed. Mr. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who really managed the finances of the Treasury Department during the war, testified that temporarily it might increase the value one-half per cent, but ultimately when things became adjusted he did not think it would increase the rate of interest on State and municipal bonds. Professor Seligman, of Columbia University, who is an authority on taxation, expressed the same opinion. Secretary Mellon testified it would increase the rate, but did not express a definite opinion as to how much. I admit the rate will be slightly increased, but in my judgment the benefits to the local taxpayers who pay the interest on municipals will far outweigh the evil caused by the slight increase in tax rate.

Gentlemen of Congress, we read in Blackstone there are two things that fix the rate of interest—the scarcity or worth of money and the certainty of its being returned. State and municipal bonds have always brought a premium and have sold cheaper than the highest class industrials, because the security was safer, and there was more certainty of its being repaid. If this amendment is ratified and no other tax-exempt bonds can be issued, State and municipal bonds will still be more desirable, and will bring a better price and sell at a lower rate of interest than the best industrial and railroad bonds will sell for, just as they did before the tax-exempt privilege became of so great a value. Do you know that the tax-exempt privilege of bonds is not of so much value to the borrower as it is to the lender of the money or purchaser of the bonds? It is not for the benefit of the poor so much as it is an unconscionable benefit and advantage to the rich man. Take a man with an income of under six or eight thousand a year, and a tax-exempt 5 per cent bond is worth to him but par.

Take a man with an income of two to three hundred thousand dollars a year, and a 5 per cent tax-exempt bond is worth to him 140. They are the class who are getting the benefit from the tax-exempt privilege. Canada does not permit any tax-exempt securities to be issued. Canada is having no trouble in selling her bonds, and the Canadian bonds, State and municipal, sell for from 1 to 1½ per cent cheaper than the highest industrial bonds. That will be true here, in my judgment, and this amendment does not interfere with the sovereignty of either the United States or of the several States. It puts them on an exact equality, and it was the intention of the committee to put them on an exact equality. I was on the subcommittee that drafted this amendment. As far as I am concerned, I have no pride of opinion as to the wording of the amendment. I am willing myself, although I can not speak for anyone else, to accept amendments that safeguard it; for what I desire and what I want to submit to the States is a constitutional amendment providing that after its ratification no more tax-free State or municipal bonds and no more tax-free United States bonds shall be issued. [Applause.]

If we stop the future issuance of tax-exempt securities, those now in existence in the course of a few years will be paid off or renewed, and wealth will then have no place to hide to escape taxation. I regret that the amendment, if adopted, may to a small extent enhance the market value of bonds now issued, and deplore that it may slightly increase the rate of interest on State and municipal bonds that may be issued and sold after the ratification of the amendment; but the benefits to be derived from stopping the further issuance of tax-free securities so far outweigh these objections that the objections become negligible by comparison. For the reasons given in this speech, I feel that the economic evil of tax-free securities is so great that it is my duty as a national legislator to at least vote to submit the matter to the respective States for their consideration. Our action is not final. If this resolution is passed we simply submit the question to the States for their judgment. If they do not approve of the amendment they will reject it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH].

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] to a statement which he made, to the effect that there was no testimony to show that municipal bonds, if they were taxed, would cost the purchaser more money. Mr. McCoy, the actuary of the Treasury Department, makes this statement on page 21 of the hearings:

> There is little doubt that under these conditions the future investor in our now tax-exempt securities would demand that they pay a higher rate of interest or be sold at a discount sufficient to at least meet the tax.

Mr. CRISP. Oh, I stated that the testimony was that it would increase it one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. BACHARACH. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to Secretary Mellon's statement, which reads as follows—and I think the gentleman from Georgia interrogated him:

> The CHAIRMAN. If we adopt this constitutional amendment and make municipal bonds subject to taxation, are we not going to add additional burdens upon the people in taxes?
> Secretary MELLON. I should say not, in the long run.
> Mr. FREAR. Does not this question arise there, Mr. Secretary, that there is an assumption that the 3½ per cent tax-free security of the Government can be put out at par? Is that true?
> Secretary MELLON. Probably.
> Mr. FREAR. That is true to-day, that the Government can issue 3½ per cent tax-free securities?
> Secretary MELLON. Perhaps. Now, to sell a security at par that is not tax free the Government would have to pay a rate of interest to-day of more than 4 per cent, of course.
> Mr. CRISP. More than what?
> Secretary MELLON. More than 4 per cent. I suppose it would depend upon the length of time they would have to run, but it would be somewhere from 4¼ to perhaps 5 per cent, depending on the length of time they would run.

Mr. GARNER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that Congress recognized that three-quarters of 1 per cent and 1 per cent interest is the difference, by differentiating securities to be sold at the same time, one taxed and one not taxed.

Mr. BACHARACH. Yes. What I have read indicates that it would cost 1 to 1½ per cent more.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this resolution because I believe that it will not be effectual in reducing the amount of tax-free securities. If the provisions of this resolution could be made retroactive, or if it were possible to enact legislation in this respect which could become effective immediately without the necessity of an amendment to the Constitution, which requires the approval of two-thirds of the States of the Union, there would probably be some merit in it.

The Secretary of the Treasury, at the hearing before the Ways and Means Committee on January 16 last, contended that the total amount of tax-exempt securities of State, county, and minor political subdivisions is $8,142,000,000, and of this amount he contends that 56 per cent is held by insurance companies, banks, and trust companies, which are required by law to retain certain reserves.

It should be further noted that the figures given by Mr. Mellon as to the total indebtedness of States and municipalities is the gross indebtedness; in other words, no allowance is made for sinking funds of the various States and municipalities through which they gradually take up these securities whenever they are put upon the market at attractive prices; and the money held in such sinking funds amounts to fully one-third of the total indebtedness mentioned by the Secretary.

As we all know, savings banks are conducted without profit to anyone excepting the depositors, and naturally the more money these institutions earn, the more interest the depositors receive.

Of course, the highest class of securities that one could own are United States Government securities; the next are the securities of States, counties, and municipalities, which are solvent and financially sound and strong.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], the author of a similar resolution, who appeared before the committee, stated that the effect of this legislation would be to increase the price of bonds. This statement is absolutely correct, and the final ratification of this resolution by the required number of States making it a law would mean that thereafter States, counties, and municipalities would have to sell their bonds either at a higher rate of interest than they now carry or they would not bring the same premium they are bringing in the open market to-day.

The consequence of such a condition would mean that the individual would have to pay a higher proportion of State taxes and a higher proportion of municipal taxes, and I believe the increase in State and municipal taxes would be considerably more than would be gained by any decrease in Federal taxes brought about by the adoption of this resolution.

It is also evident if, as a result of this legislation, the higher grade of securities would sell at a higher figure, those securities which are not considered as good from an investment standpoint as State and municipal bonds, would naturally sell at a still higher figure.

In other words, in our section of the country an individual can now borrow money on mortgage at the rate of 6 per cent, but it is my belief that this legislation would result in his having to pay more than 6 per cent for a mortgage on his home and in addition to that he would have to pay increased State and municipal taxes.

Before the provisions of this resolution can become a law the proposed amendment to the Constitution must be ratified by 36 States. So far as my knowledge goes I have no information that the governing bodies of any State are in favor of this legislation, and in my opinion it will be a long time before the State legislatures of a sufficient number of States ratify the amendment to put it in full force and effect.

In the meantime, fearing the possible ratification of the amendment, there is no question in my mind but what every State and political subdivision thereof which had not already issued its full quota of bonds would authorize bond issues for every conceivable sort of public improvement, without any consideration of the real need for such improvements, because these bonds would sell at a very attractive premium. Such bonds would be issued for as long a term as it would be possible to issue them, running from 50 to 100 years. It would be the forerunner of an era of local governmental extravagance, I fear, the consequence of which we can not foresee at this time.

Further, I am of the opinion that at the time this legislation was first suggested there was more merit to it than there is at the present time, for this reason: Then there was a great business depression and stagnation, and capital was afraid to invest its money in industrial undertakings. To-day business conditions are much improved, and I am one of those who do not believe that because a man has wealth he will try to put all his money in tax-free securities.

I think you will find the business people of this country, if we in Congress will only permit them to go on in their normal way, without the constant fear that we are going to change our tax laws, will place their money in enterprises where not alone will their capital be used but where their own energy and business ability may find a field of usefulness.

With the gradual reduction of our bonded indebtedness in the course of a few years there is no doubt in my mind that the present surtax rate can be reduced, making Federal taxation less burdensome to industry.

Now, so far as the State of New Jersey is concerned, it is one of the States that has not issued any bonds up to the present time. We voted a $40,000,000 bond issue last year, and these 5 per cent bonds when offered for sale will probably sell at 115, 118, or 120. Pennsylvania State bonds were recently offered for sale, as I saw in last week's paper, at 117, and they are 5 per cent bonds, tax free. Of course, the reason that they are selling at that high price is because they have a time limit of about 20 to 25 years to run, and in consequence they have a greater value than if they had a shorter term to run. Personally, I am always anxious to support legislation that comes from the dominant party of the Ways and Means Committee, but this is one matter in which I feel that the individual is entitled to express his own mind; this I have done; and I am not only expressing my own opinion but I have taken the matter up——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. BACHARACH. I just want to call attention to the fact that I have consulted with the responsible heads of the Government of the State of New Jersey as to the effect of this legislation upon my State. Our budget commission is composed of the governor, who is a Democrat, and the State comptroller and State treasurer, both of whom are Republicans, and all three men, individually and collectively, feel that it would be a bad proposition for the people of the State of New Jersey to tax State and municipal securities; and I feel myself that not only would it be bad for the people of the State of New Jersey but I do not believe we are going to effect anything at all for the benefit of the whole people by the adoption of this resolution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask how the time stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 1 hour and 15 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas 68 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall be very brief. I shall vote for this bill. A majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means favors the report. The Treasury Department recommends the bill. Frankly permit me to say I have my doubts about the wisdom of a law such as this bill proposes, but I feel that if my vote against the bill would result in loss of opportunity to the people of the various States to register their approval or disapproval of this measure I would not do my duty here by so voting, and therefore I shall vote for it. I do want to call the attention of the House to the reason why I doubt the merits of the measure. Last evening I read in the Evening Star quotations of closing prices of Government bonds in the market yesterday at 1.30 p. m. I notice that the 3½ per cent bonds outstanding, which are tax free, were selling for $100.70 on a par value of $100. Mind you, they carry a rate of interest at 3½ per cent. The Liberty 4¼ per cent bonds sold at $98.84, or $1.86 below that price, notwithstanding the fact that the rate of interest on these Liberty bonds is three-fourths of 1 per cent higher. Second Liberty 4¼ per cent bonds sold at $98.12, or $2.58 a hundred less than the tax-free bonds. Third Liberty, $98.90, or $1.80 less. Fourth Liberty, 4¼ per cent, $2.26 below the 3½ per cent tax-free bonds. Victory loan of 4¾ per cent, due in 1923, on or before the 20th of May next, were selling for 32 cents below the tax-free bonds. And the United States bonds, 4¼ per cent, due in 1952, recent issue, 98 cents below the tax-free bonds. The point I want to make is this: There are now outstanding about $15,000,000,000 of State and municipal bonds tax free. If the law is so changed that taxes must be paid on the income from those bonds, then the taxpayers must pay the difference in the rate of interest at which these bonds will sell.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the position of the gentleman from Michigan, it is that this proposed amendment is economically unsound; but he does not want to take the responsibility of not submitting it to the States?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas, my opinion is that the reason why these higher interest-bearing Government bonds sell on the market for a less price than the 3½ per cent bonds is because of their taxable feature.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask this question, if I may.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me complete one sentence here. Let me call the attention of the House to the fact that there are in round numbers now $20,000,000,000 of Government bonds, the incomes from which are subject to taxation.

One-fourth of 1 per cent on $20,000,000,000 of bonds is $50,000,000 a year. Three-fourths of 1 per cent, or the difference between a 3½ per cent bond and a 4¼ per cent bond, is $150,000,000 per year taxes that the people of the country are called upon to pay into the Treasury of the United States as interest. What for? To be paid out by the Secretary of the Treasury to the bondholders.

Now the point is, how much of that $150,000,000 will the Treasury of the United States get back in taxes from the bondholders? That is the point. I called upon the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, when those bonds were first authorized, and pointed out to him that in my opinion the taxable bonds must bear a higher rate of interest in order to carry a value of par in the market, and I called his attention to the fact that where three-fourths of 1 per cent on $20,000,000,000 would cost the taxpayers an additional $150,000,000, the average taxpayer was paying but 11 per cent of his income in taxes to the Federal Government.

That is not a fair comparison as to the amount of taxes paid by the bondholder, because the man that holds Government bonds undoubtedly is a heavier taxpayer than the average taxpayer. But let us go to the extreme and say that if you tax the people three-fourths of 1 per cent, a higher rate of interest because of the taxable feature of that bond, the taxpayers must pay $150,000,000 a year into the Treasury of the United States, and if under the law we take a much larger per cent of the bondholder's income you will not get back the additional sum imposed upon the taxpayers.

Now, I may be wrong in my calculation, but in substance I think I am right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury Department officials who testified before us, as the gentleman will remember, said that if all the Government issues had been made tax exempt it would have made very little difference.

Mr. FORDNEY. I am inclined to say to my good friend that that is a matter of opinion. It may be that they are right and that I am wrong. But I am giving you what seems to me a sound reason as to why a tax-free bond will sell at par at a lower rate of interest than a taxable bond, and that the Treasury will not get all of the money paid by the taxpayer in interest because of the taxable feature in that bond.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of fact, out of the $150,000,000 that the taxpayers are now paying we are only getting back 22½ per cent.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Treasury is getting back only one-fourth of the taxpayers' income. The law never intended that we should take all of the taxpayers' income. If you do not take it all, the bondholder gets some of the money paid by the taxpayer, and the Government gets the balance.

Now, I was willing to submit the question of prohibition to the country. Why? Because I felt that the people of the country should have the right to express themselves on the question, and that if by my vote I prevented them from expressing themselves at the polls I would not be doing my duty. I feel that same way about this matter. I am willing that the States should pass upon the question as to whether we shall have such securities taxed, whether municipal, State, or otherwise.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Would the gentleman agree to submit to the States the question of the recall and referendum?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, such a proposition is Bolshevism, and I would not vote for it. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman speaks of relieving himself of responsibility by allowing the people to vote on it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks by inserting a letter written to me by Judge W. M. Cain, of Nebraska. It dwells chiefly upon our primary election laws, and, in my opinion, it is a very able document. I heartily concur in its sentiments. I would like to have it inserted in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the document indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

FREMONT, NEBR.

Hon. J. W. FORDNEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

In a recent issue of an eastern paper with a large circulation there appeared two editorials, one headed "The direct primary" and the other "No compromise with Bolshevism," and it appears to me that these two editorials are wholly inconsistent and utterly irreconcilable with each other.

In the first of these editorials the writer advocates the retention of the direct primary, which in the isolated instances where it functions at all effectively its results represent rather the uninformed emotions of the people than their intelligent and sober judgment. In the second editorial the writer depicts the dangers of Bolshevism, which, whether it exists in Russia or in America, is government by emotion instead of government by judgment.

The fundamental defect in the direct primary is that it proceeds upon the false assumption that this Nation is a pure democracy, while the fact is that it is a Republic, in which the people are governed, not by themselves directly, but by representatives duly chosen by them. It appears that the writer of the editorial has been carried away by William Jennings Bryan's perpetual cry of "Let the people rule," and has lost sight of the fact that it was never intended in this country that the people should rule directly, but only by their representatives, who have an opportunity to inform themselves, and then only within the limits laid down by the Federal Constitution and the constitutions of the several States.

The inconsistency of the two editorials lies in the fact that one deplores Bolshevism and the other advocates the very method and means by which Bolshevism can be made effective in the United States.

The trouble with us right now is that there is too much room for fakers and claquers and agitators to influence government in all its three branches. This idea has even influenced the courts to make constitutional restrictions more elastic or to disregard them entirely. If carried out, this can only lead to anarchy and communism. It is time to call a halt.

Here in Nebraska our experience with the direct primary has been intensely disgusting. Candidates are chosen almost by guess or accident. Our primary was held three weeks ago, and I have before me the primary ballot. There were three Democratic, six Republican, and two Progressive candidates for United States Senator. For governor, there were four Democratic, four Republican, and two Progressive candidates. For State treasurer there were five Democratic, five Republican, and one Progressive candidate. For attorney general there were five Democratic, five Republican, and one Progressive candidate. For Congressman, there were two Democratic, three Republican, and four Progressive candidates. For the nonpolitical office of State superintendent of public instruction there were six candidates.

It is wholly impossible that any considerable number of the people could know about nine-tenths of these candidates except from their own fulsome eulogies of themselves printed in the press. Most candidates chosen were minority candidates. The loudest advertiser stands the best chance. The defects of the primary system are also—and necessarily, of course—reflected in the character and competency of our public officials. They are substantially, with few exceptions, very noticeably below the character of our public officials under the convention system, where a body of men who are well acquainted in their respective localities meet in convention and nominate their best men for the various offices.

The direct primary in Nebraska has been a direct loss of excellence in the service of public officials. There is a livery-stable keeper in western Nebraska who has twice been on the ballot as candidate for the President of the United States, and he received about one-third as many votes as either the Democratic or Republican candidates for President. Though those who know him classify him as mentally and morally subnormal, yet he got thousands and thousands of votes in Nebraska.

Nor is the injury to the public service all. It is necessary for every candidate to advertise his supposed qualifications in the newspapers, and this at great expense. I positively know that it has taken and still takes at least $25,000 to conduct a candidacy for United States Senator for Nebraska. Candidates for governor have often spent from $10,000 to $20,000. Candidates for Congress, I judge, about midway between. I know of two candidates for judge of our supreme court, one of whom spent $8,000 and one $9,000. No one on earth benefited from this except the newspapers. A candidate for State office here in Nebraska told us the other day that he had received requests from 100 Nebraska newspapers, each wanting $40 for running his advertising matter. This expense is too much of a mortgage on the future of the official.

Wherever the people have been more closely connected with the Government and could make their direct impulses immediately effective the result has been far from satisfactory. Just now the chief issue in Nebraska is taxation, and all the candidates indiscriminately pledged the reduction of taxes. Analysis of the situation, however, shows that about 80 per cent of the people's taxes have been levied upon themselves by themselves. The chief items of taxation here have been for schools and roads, and the people have gone in strong for fads on the former and are building many expensive roads on the latter. We have, of course, here in Nebraska innumerable boards, bureaus, commissions, and inspectors traveling over the State and impertinently interrogating decent citizens of this State. We have pure food and drug inspectors, and the food is no better and the drugs no purer than they were a quarter of a century ago, before this madness began. We have three State fish hatcheries, with innumerable fishing and hunting license inspectors, and I undertake to say that outside of the hatcheries and a few lakes or ponds newly replenished with fish from the hatcheries there is not a half dozen more fish in this State than there would have been if we had never had any fish hatcheries. We have a bureau of animal industry, whose methods of testing cattle for tuberculosis conflict with those of the Federal Government, so that it is possible for animals to be condemned as tubercular under our State law and pass the tuberculin test of the stockyard where the Federal method is employed.

We had a blue sky department in our State government to guard the people from buying worthless securities, and that department has been vocal and in active operation at least since 1916, and in 1918 and 1919 tens of millions of dollars of worthless corporate stocks were unloaded on the people of this State, each corporation having a permit from the blue sky department to sell its worthless stock. Our State capitol is crowded and jammed with scores of stenographers who write hundreds of letters that nobody reads and are just as well off for not reading them. This is all the fruit of the people's uninformed and fanatical ruling of themselves.

I am a firm believer in the intelligent, deliberate, and dispassionate judgment of the American people, but I fear and abhor their uninformed emotional impulses translated into government. Before the people "pass a law" which deprives me of my liberty or property or my rights as a citizen I want the machinery to be so fixed that they will do it intelligently and deliberately, for I know if this is required that the people will not do it.

The direct primary is a menace to our institutions and to that governmental tranquillity so vitally necessary for the prosperity and happiness of all the people. If one is opposed to Bolshevism, it logically and necessarily follows that he is likewise opposed to the direct primary.

Yours very respectfully,

W. M. CAIN.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR].

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I have long felt that one of the causes of ptomaine poisoning from which the body politic is suffering is tax-free securities. We must get them out of our system before we can hope to restore a healthy condition.

Tax-free securities are bad because—

1. They shift the burden of taxation from the backs of the rich to those of the poor.

2. They discourage enterprise, create nonemployment, hinder reduction of transportation rates, cause higher living costs, and create unrest among our people.

3. They encourage extravagance in municipal expenditures with a consequent increase of taxation.

It is estimated that there now exist a minimum of $30,000,000,000 of tax-free securities in the United States. Upon the basis of a national wealth of three hundred billion they represent one-tenth of the whole. The output is increasing at the rate of two billion per year. It would seem to follow that the proportion of taxes to be paid by wealth would decrease while the burden grows greater upon the man of moderate income.

Self-preservation is nature's first law. This is particularly so with wealth. It is human nature that a man will not invest his wealth in commerce or business and pay a large share of his income into the Public Treasury through taxes when he can invest his fortune in tax-free securities, live in idleness, take no chances, and pay no part of the cost of running the Government.

The situation is strikingly presented in connection with the estate of the great New York banker, Jacob H. Schiff. He left an estate of nearly thirty-five million. The net taxable income of securities left by him was about 1¼ per cent per year. The bulk of his estate was in tax-exempt securities, because the surtaxes upon other investments would have left him a lower return than did the tax-exempt bonds.

Charles M. Schwab says that he could retire from active business, reinvest his money in tax-exempt securities, and treble his income.

The financial manager of the widow of James J. Hill says that he changed her holdings from taxable securities to tax-exempt and increased her income from $365,000 to $730,000.

It is not fair to the ordinary business or salaried man that he should labor and use his talents diligently to secure a good income with the prospect before him that the larger his income for the year the greater his income tax, when the man with the accumulated fortune can sit by with folded hands, rendering no service to the country, and enjoy his income tax free.

It is apparent that when there is such a large field for the investment of large fortunes in tax-free securities that there should be difficulty in obtaining money for the carrying on of the business of the country. It will be argued that if municipalities could not issue tax-free bonds, that then they could not get necessary funds without payment of a higher rate of interest, which eventually the taxpayer would have to pay, and thus the difference is equalized. But that argument is not sound, because, independent of the fact that the low rate of interest has caused extravagance which has led to greater taxation for public purposes, business has had to pay a much higher rate of interest to secure money in competition with tax-free securities, which is reflected in enhanced costs to the people.

This fact is quite vital also in connection with our transportation problem, which is perhaps the most important one that is confronting us at the present time. If we could solve the proposition of reduction of freight rates, we would solve most of the troubles that are confronting our country. The railroads of the country can not get money essential for betterments except by the payment of a very high rate of interest. This is reflected in the freight rates, and thus all of the people of the country suffer—the producer and the consumer—so that the wealth of the country can enjoy this special privilege.

It is essential for the welfare of the country that capital should be invested in enterprises that give employment and produce more capital. Municipal improvements are essential, but not to the point of paralyzing industry.

Judge Lovett, chairman of the Union Pacific Railroad, puts the situation very tersely:

> The processes of common sense seems to be reserved in our basis of taxation. Instead of a premium upon industry and enterprise by a lower tax upon earned than invested income, just the opposite is the law. A salary or a profit made by personal effort is taxed the maximum rate under the provisions for surtaxes, while capital escapes the tax altogether by being invested in municipal securities. The result is not only a sense of injustice suffered and discouragement in the individual relying upon his own efforts but an orgy of recklessness and extravagance in municipal expenditures unparalleled in history to supply bonds for tax-exempt investment of capital. These huge sums are not only going into tax-exempt securities, shifting the burden of taxation to industry, but are being withdrawn from investment in industrial enterprises of all sorts that employ labor and in the building of homes for housing the people.

The argument will be made by some that the abolition of tax-free bonds will take away from the farmer the benefits of the Federal farm loan system. The president of the American Farm Bureau Federation says:

> Tax-exempt bonds are rapidly increasing, and unless soon checked will more than equal the values of all farm properties in the United States, including lands, buildings, live stock, and machinery. These tax-exempt bonds are property. Being tax exempt, they throw additional taxation burdens upon other classes of property. When the amount of tax-exempt bonds equals the value of the farm lands of the Nation, it means that every acre of farm land will be carrying approximately a double taxation.
> The farmer is certainly as much entitled to tax-exempt securities as anyone else, but if all tax exemptions could be done away with and the farmer's bonds placed on equal basis with other bonds, he would be the gainer and not a loser.

Senator CAPPER's Weekly says:

> These untaxed billions penalize the farmer with a heavier tax upon his land.

Mr. MacKenzie, a tax expert of the Farm Bureau Federation, says:

> Some farmers fear to have the issuance of tax-free securities stopped for fear it would raise the interest rate on Federal farm loans. This is quite likely to happen, to a small degree at least. But the total amount of farm-loan bonds outstanding is only a little over half a billion—only a small fraction of the total value of tax-free securities. The small gain that comes to the farmer from lower interest on Federal farm loans is much more than offset by his having to pay his tax and the other fellow's, too.

It is estimated that the total amount of mortgages upon farm properties in the United States is in excess of $8,000,000,000. The amount loaned through the Federal Farm Loan Board is $500,000,000. The burden created by $30,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities much more than offsets the benefits of the exemption to the farmers as a whole.

A curb must be placed upon municipal extravagance. The mounting costs of State and municipal governments is appalling. In 1912 about $400,000,000 of State and municipal securities were placed upon the market. In 1921 there were $1,305,868,916. It is estimated that 1922 will show at least two billion.

The people groan under the burden of taxation. The orgy of extravagance of Federal, State, and municipal governments must cease. The old adage, "Come easy, go easy," applies to governments. Cheap money tends to easy spending. Capital needed for industry to create employment must not be diverted. Capital needed to the end that transportation rates may be reduced, with a consequent reduction of living costs and the bringing of a greater degree of prosperity to the farmer, must not be induced to be withdrawn or withheld. Great wealth must not be given a special privilege.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in answer to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. FORDNEY], who has just given figures to the House as to the loss suffered by the Government, I would like to call to your attention the testimony of the Treasury Department, on page 23 of the hearings, in which they took the very figures that the gentleman has just presented to the House and pointed out that in calculating the loss to the Government he had only estimated the tax on three-fourths of 1 per cent interest on the $20,000,000,000, or $150,000,000, whereas, as a matter of fact, if the securities had not been exempt the Government would have collected the tax on the full amount of the interest paid, namely, $700,000,000. So that instead of showing a loss, as the gentleman from Michigan does, even taking his figures, there would be a net gain of over $62,000,000 if the tax exemption were denied.

Mr. FORDNEY. I may be in error in my judgment about the matter and for that reason I am going to vote for the resolution and give to the people the benefit of the doubt and let them decide on it.

Mr. MILLS. I want to begin by answering some objections that were raised by my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who on these occasions always favors me by addressing his remarks to me. The gentleman from Texas says we are threatening the credit of the States. Now, the only way you can threaten the credit of the State is by giving the Federal Government the right to levy a discriminatory tax, and that is the very thing we are not giving to the Federal Government. It must be obvious to every man in this room that if there are no taxes whatsoever imposed on the income from securities, then all securities, whether municipal, State, Federal, industrial, or public utility, are on the same basis. If, now, you impose a uniform tax of 10 per cent on all securities, including municipal and State, they would still be on the same basis and the credit of the State in nowise impaired. You might conceivably threaten the credit of the State if a discriminatory tax were levied against State securities, but that clearly is not contemplated by the proposed amendment. What we are doing in effect is to put the States back precisely where they were prior to 1916. We are simply taking away from them the bonus which has come to them by reason of excessive war taxation, an advantage never contemplated, much less guaranteed, by the Constitution.

You talk about destroying the credit of the States! Let me point out to my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that when the Federal Government issues $20,000,000,000 worth of Federal securities, exempt from State taxes, it is effectually destroying the credit of the States by narrowing to a dangerous extent the base available for the levying of State taxes, and that if we compare the advantage to be derived from tax-exempt securities by the Federal Government and the State governments, respectively, the advantage lies very clearly with the Federal Government. State securities and the securities of municipalities and other subdivisions will amount, in the case of individual States, at best to but a few hundred million dollars. But there are $20,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt Federal securities available to the citizens of the individual States, by means of which they may seek refuge from all State taxation. If that is not destructive of State credit by impairing the tax base itself, I do not know what it is.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I should prefer not to yield until I finish, because I have only 20 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. All right.

Mr. MILLS. Now, the other proposition is that there are desirable public improvements, schoolhouses, roads, and such things, and that if you permit the Federal Government to put the State and municipal securities on the same basis with all other securities, the State will not be able to market the securities to finance them. That is what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] says. As a matter of fact, long before we ever had this bonus created by high income taxes you were able to market your securities. You were able to bring your million dollars worth of bonds of your city of San Antonio to New York and you were able to sell them, and you were able to sell them at a rate which ran anywhere from twenty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent to sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent over the best railroad securities sold in the New York market. You were able, during the years from 1904 to 1916, to sell them at an advantage over the best public utilities securities sold in the market at a rate which averaged from one-half of 1 per cent to over 1.25 per cent.

Mr. GARNER. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I should like to ask him just one question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MILLS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman as to this: I hope you will tax them so they will be on a parity with railroad securities. Now, I should like to ask the gentleman, Why are you not willing to do that?

Mr. MILLS. I am willing to put them on the same advantageous basis they always enjoyed before this bonus came to them, and that, as I have just shown the gentleman, and as I will demonstrate by the tables which I will put in the RECORD, was a very substantial benefit. You will find that since the war, when we adopted high income taxation, that advantage increased somewhat, but nothing like as much as I expected to find. This table shows that from 1900 to 1904 municipal bonds enjoyed an advantage anywhere from fifty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent to sixty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent over railroad bonds, whilst from 1905 to 1908 they enjoyed an advantage of approximately 1 per cent over the best public-utility bonds. Since 1916 the advantage enjoyed over railroad bonds has been on the average only seventy-two one-hundredths of 1 per cent, which is a pretty small increase, and on the average the advantage over public-utility bonds has been 1.37 per cent. So that after all this talk the privilege enjoyed by the State and municipalities can be measured by a small fraction of 1 per cent.

Whatever other fears you may cherish, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that there is not the slightest question but that, even if we adopt this amendment, you will be able to sell your Texas securities in the New York market with a favorable margin of one-half of 1 per cent interest over the best railroad or public-utilities securities. In other words, you will have the same advantage which you enjoyed for over 40 years prior to 1916.

But if the disadvantage to the State be measured in terms of a fraction of 1 per cent, what are the disadvantages to the Nation resulting from this system that has grown up? Tax-exempt securities, gentlemen, are absolutely indefensible, whether you study them from the standpoint of the fiscal needs of government or from the economic or social standpoint. Let us consider the fiscal one first.

The Treasury estimates that there are $11,000,000,000 of wholly tax-exempt securities outstanding, and that they are being issued at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year. There are, in addition, some $20,000,000,000 of partially exempt United States securities, partially exempt because they are totally exempt only as to the normal tax, in so far as the surtaxes are concerned, being limited both as to the amount to be held by one individual and as to time, the exemption having only some three and one-half years to run. If we assume that this $10,000,000,000, more or less, of wholly exempt securities and the $20,000,000,000, more or less, of partially exempt securities are held in the following percentages by the following classes, I can give you an estimate of what it is costing the Government.

Assuming that 37 per cent of these securities are held by corporations, that 23 per cent are held by people who pay no income tax, and the balance by people whose average rate of income tax is 35 per cent, tax-exempt securities are to-day costing the United States Government $242,000,000 a year. Mr. McCoy says $120,000,000, which is low. Professor Seligman says $300,000,000, which is high, in my judgment. Mr. McCoy limits his estimate to the $11,000,000,000 of wholly tax-exempt securities. Moreover, he estimates the loss in the corporate income tax at but $35,000,000, whereas the returns of the Internal Revenue Bureau, published since his estimate, show the loss in corporate income tax can not be less than $60,000,000 a year. For my part, I am confident that $240,000,000, more or less, is what the tax-exempt securities are costing the Government to-day.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman state whether that is growing or becoming less?

Mr. MILLS. As to that, of course, the amount will be diminishing in the course of three and a half years, when the number of partially exempt securities disappear. But, on the other hand, the wholly exempt securities are increasing at the rate of $1,000,000,000 a year, so it will not be many years before the United States Government will find itself again in the position of losing through tax-exempt securities one quarter of a billion dollars a year.

Theoretically this loss should be offset by the lower rate of interest which the Government has to pay by reason of the tax-exempt privilege granted the investor, but this, under our system of government and taxation, is only true to a very limited extent. Thus the Federal Government derives no benefit whatsoever in so far as State and municipal securities are concerned. In the second place, even with respect to its own securities, it is unable to capitalize the reduced taxes, first, because the rate is uncertain; and, second, because it is progressive. There is no question but that, if we had a flat, uniform, and reasonably permanent tax, tax-exempt securities would command a price in the open market which, as compared with the price of taxable securities, would be higher in proportion to the exact extent represented by the tax-exemption privilege; that is to say, they would sell at a price high enough so that the net yield of the bonds would be equal to the net yield of the taxable bond after the payment of the tax. The Government would, of course, get the benefit of the increased value. But with the progressive rate we have a very different situation. Let us assume that a man with an income of $10,000 bought in 1920 a 5 per cent taxable bond which yielded him a net return of 4.58. Had he bought a tax-exempt bond and paid 105.17, it would have yielded him 4.58 net. In other words, he was equally well off whether he bought either a taxable or a nontaxable security at that price. But assuming that the nontaxable security was selling at 106, then he was obviously better off if he bought a taxable security. This meant that under the 1918 revenue act the $10,000 man dropped out of the tax-exempt security market at 106. Applying the same line of reasoning to the other income classes, you will find the $20,000 man dropping out at a somewhat higher figure, and so on down the line. The million-dollar man could have afforded to pay 143.80 for the nontaxable as compared with the taxable 5 per cent bond. As a matter of fact, he obtained the nontaxable bond at a much lower figure by reason of the fact that the other income classes dropped out long before the bond had reached a price where it would be still profitable for the million-dollar man to buy it. The result is that the men with the large incomes obtain a much greater reduction in their taxes than the Government can hope to make up by a lower interest rate on the securities which it issues.

If you estimate the gain in interest charges at one-half of 1 per cent on the $1,500,000,000 still outstanding first Liberty bonds, the saving is $11,000,000 a year. Add one-half of 1 per cent on the $20,000,000,000 of partially exempt securities, and you have an additional $100,000,000. We are losing $250,000,000 and getting back at most $111,000,000, making a net loss of $140,000,000 a year to-day and one that is constantly increasing.

Now, turn to the economic aspect. Is there any need again to point out to the House how excessively high surtax rates sin against the fundamentals of a sound tax system in that they are becoming increasingly unproductive; that they encourage evasion and are too great a burden on industry, initiative, and thrift? Whether you believe it or not, there is not the slightest doubt but that high progressive surtax rates coupled with tax-exempt securities will destroy the progressive income tax, which is the fairest tax ever devised by man, and will in the course of a few years make as big a farce of progressive income taxation as the personal property tax on intangible property is in every State in the Union that tries to enforce it at general property rates.

Can there be anything more fantastic than the Government of the United States solemnly declaring its purpose to take 58 per cent of a man's income and then providing the means whereby he will not pay any tax at all? [Applause.] What is the sense of talking about the rich tax dodgers when the United States Government considerately provides isles of safety on which men of wealth can find complete security from State and Federal taxes?

Furthermore, mark you, and mark you well, the privilege is reserved for men who have accumulated their money and are living on its interest. The doctor, the lawyer, the professional man, the man in active business pays his 10, 20, 30, or 40 per cent of income to the United States Government. He pays 40 per cent to the United States from income that he is making in his prime to support his family, to insure himself a comfortable old age, and to give his children a start in life, while his neighbor, the man with accumulated wealth invested in tax-exempt securities, contributes nothing to the support of government. Gentlemen, how long do you suppose such a system of taxation can endure in any enlightened country?

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I prefer to wait until I am through. Is there any need again to point out to you that you are driving liquid capital needed for production into unproductive channels? You have been repeatedly reminded of this, but let me give you one illustration that came to my attention within the last 10 days. A man I know had half a million dollars of bonds of an industrial corporation paying 5 per cent and selling at 85. By selling the bonds, taking a loss of 15 points, and investing in New York City 4½ bonds due in 1971 at 106 that man would make in the course of the life of the bonds $226,000. If instead of buying New York City bonds due in 1971 he bought farm-loan bonds callable in 1932, that were last week selling on a 4.40 basis, he would in the course of the next nine years net a profit of $26,000. Is he a tax dodger? Is he unpatriotic? Is he blamable if he takes his money from the industrial corporation and puts it in tax-exempt securities, loaning it to the farmers of the West and making incidentally one-quarter of a million dollars? Gentlemen, multiply that instance by thousands and you will get an adequate picture of what is going on in the country to-day.

It is not a question of wanting to deny to the municipalities and States the money that they need for public improvements. They have always been able to get that money and will continue to do so. What we want to do is to deprive them of this artificial stimulant that was produced by the war, so that municipalities will not spend their money simply because they think tax exemption makes it cheap. I want to have every proposition for a public improvement decided upon its merits, to go back to 1916, to a normal state of affairs when no tax-exemption needle was demanded to stimulate public expenditure.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman does complain about diverting capital to that nonproductive industry.

Mr. MILLS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARNER. Therefore, you ought to stop it.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly not; but you ought to take away the artificial stimulus, and that is where the gentleman and I differ. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. I take it that what the gentleman from New York wants is to prevent cities running races with each other to see how many obligations they can charge up against the taxpayers by the issue of bonds.

Mr. MILLS. In order to get a fictitious advantage.

Mr. GARNER. That is just one more instance of where they are not willing to trust the people.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if we turn to the social question, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has pointed out, we have something that is even more serious. Say what you like about the great American fortunes, they have been accumulated by men of vision, of extraordinary energy and initiative, who in the course of a busy lifetime made very distinct contributions to the development of their country. Their rewards may have been excessive, but what man will care to deny that the Rockefellers, the Fords, the Carnegies, the Harrimans have greatly promoted our economic and industrial development?

The outstanding characteristic of the rich men in this country is that they are or were in active business. They spend comparatively little on their personal needs. They reinvest the money that they do not spend, or they have up to date, in the very enterprises which under their guidance and leadership were constantly developing, employing thousands of workmen, and adding steadily to the economic prosperity of the country by adding to its creative wealth. What are you doing through these tax-exempt securities, backed by a high—a very high—progressive income-tax rate? You are not only drying up this investment fund but you are drying up this fund of initiative, of energy, of business ability. [Applause.] You are driving these men out of active business, because you are depriving them of the great incentive to remain in active business—not only the incentive of building up a great, successful concern, but of the tangible evidence of success. You are creating, in other words, through this system, which came by accident, a class of idle rich and, what is worse, gentlemen, you are creating a class of idle rich that are not contributing their share to the support of government. Can there be from the standpoint of the preservation of the social order in this country a worse spot in the body politic? Is there anything more likely, if history means anything, to engender class hatred and prejudice, and is there anything more likely or more rapidly to bring into general contempt a government which not only permits such a situation but one which has actually, actively created it?

My friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who is a very clear-headed gentleman, who analyzes measures as clearly as anyone I know, who can as quickly lay his finger on the weak spots, has from my standpoint, based on the observation of almost two years, the one weakness of always looking for hidden motives instead of being willing to rest his case upon the powerful arguments which he is so well able to present. I want to say to the gentleman that he need not go any further if he wants to find the motives of the men who are supporting this measure. The motive is that no man who believes in his country and its system of government, who believes in equal opportunities, in equality before the law, who believes that people should contribute to the support of the Government in accordance with their ability to pay, can defend for a single minute, whether it be in the name of State rights or whatever it may be, the iniquitous system which I have had the privilege of describing to you gentlemen this afternoon, a system which if allowed to continue will threaten the structure of the Government itself. [Applause.]

[1] Yield on municipal bonds is higher than on railroad bonds. All others, yield on municipal bonds is less.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it is naturally with a feeling of timidity that I take a stand to-day different from that of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury and the many men who have studied this subject, and who are perhaps much more familiar with it than I am. I believe that in the Secretary of the Treasury we have a man who has shown his capacity and ability and whose administration of that great office will go down in history as something wonderful; but I am not willing to surrender my idea as to the rights of local self-governing bodies, States, counties, and cities, for the opinion of any man, no matter how expert in financial matters he may be.

There are two phases of this question, as I look at it. The constitutional phase first, and that is to be divided into two parts. First, there is the demand of the Government to have the right to tax municipal and State bonds, and in exchange, in order to get that approved by the several States, give the States the right to tax Federal bonds which we issue. I am not in favor of either of these propositions. I am a believer in a strong, central, Federal Government, but when I say that I mean that I am in favor of a strong Federal Government along the line of our national defense, in our Army and in our Navy, and in our dealing with foreign powers. I want to reserve just a little of self-government to the counties, towns, and States if I can, and not have the Federal Government reach out its hands into every locality in this land and demand additional taxes on everything in sight. [Applause.]

Looking at this question from the standpoint of one who has seen something of the benefits of these tax-exempt securities, I look at it in this way, and I differ fundamentally and radically from the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], who contend that these men who buy these tax-free securities are tax dodgers and are not paying taxes. They are all paying their taxes. They paid it right at the source without cost and expense of collection when they made their contract for that low rate of interest. They paid a fixed rate, and they know what that rate is to be, and they were willing to sacrifice the additional interest in order to get something upon which they could depend, and to know what they could be called upon to pay. Years ago I heard a distinguished lecturer at Princeton, who was afterwards President of the United States, say that in many cases "certain injustice is better than uncertain justice." I have come since then, as I have had to deal sometimes with the tax bureau, to believe more or less in that doctrine.

If we know what we have to meet we will adjust our business accordingly, but we should not attempt to amend the Constitution of the United States every time some temporary situation annoys us. Let us not fool ourselves about who pays the taxes. The consuming public pays the taxes. They seek their level. They all go back to what we eat and wear and consume, and the reason the man of moderate means pays more than his proportionate share of all the taxes is because he must live, he must have clothing, he must exist just the same as the man who has millions, and when we hear men stand up and say that the man who takes the low interest-bearing security and lets that local community have the benefit of that low interest rate is not paying tax I say you are mistaken. Every county and every city is limited in the amount of these bonds they can issue by their State constitution or legislative enactment, and they are not going beyond that limit; and when a community of live, energetic people are willing to vote to put a mortgage on their homes in order to make public improvements, improve their streets, provide proper sewerage, provide schools, and so forth, I do not think we ought to sit here and try to trade something and force something upon the people and compel them to abandon these improvements and take away advantages they have heretofore possessed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how the time stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has 39 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas 63 minutes remaining.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not that a mistake? He had only 68 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. My attention was diverted and I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thought I was considerably ahead.

Mr. GARNER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I wish I could have more time. This is a large question. I do not agree with the sentiment expressed here that we have a right to turn the decision of that question over to the States. The Constitution says that we may do this when two-thirds of each House of Congress deem an amendment necessary, but we must first deem it necessary. We have seen what it means to give such amendments to the States. Oddly enough, if a State assents it can not withdraw its assent, but if the State disagrees it can withdraw its disagreement. That is not a fair way to take a vote.

The taxation of Government bonds is a question that is as old as the Constitution, or at least as 1795, when Mr. Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, made his report on the public credit. He held that the credit of the United States was of so much importance that it should not tax its own bonds or the income thereof. More than that, he contended that those bonds, unlike other property, should not even be the subject of sequestration in the hands of an enemy in time of war and that our credit should be sacred. We have seen what that decision meant to the United States. I ask unanimous consent to print what he had to say on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the matter indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE POWER TO ISSUE THEM IS NECESSARY TO SOVEREIGNTY.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say on the two branches of this matter that I am not willing to take away the essential power of the United States Government, the sovereign power of borrowing money, subject to no tax by any other person or government in the United States. I am also not ready to take that power from the several States. I am not ready to take it from the United States and to allow the great State of New York, whose citizens own millions and perhaps billions of Government bonds, to tax these bonds in the hands of their residents and perhaps subject them to the tax which the State levies on investments, a tax which is sometimes up to 2 or 3 per cent of the par value thereof. Such a tax would be lawful under this amendment.

EXPERIENCE CONFIRMS OUR CONSTANT POLICY.

In time of war we must borrow, and in time of peace we want to reduce interest. I agree with the great first Secretary of the Treasury that we will pay more in increased interest than we will get from the taxes. His policy enabled us to reduce interest. I remember at the outbreak of the Civil War that we issued bonds at 6 per cent which we could redeem in five years; we refunded them at 5 per cent, refunded them again at 4 per cent, and refunded those at 3 per cent and some at 2 per cent with the circulation privilege, and we paid over 2½ per cent less than the interest we are paying now. I believe that the Government of the United States ought to hold its bonds sacred. I do not understand why the Government taxes the interest and income received on its bonds when they are sold abroad. We want credit. Perhaps, and it is quite possible, we may have to make remittances abroad when other countries get on their feet again and perhaps become more prosperous than ourselves. In that case we will not want to send cash; we will want to send bonds, and those bonds will have to be absolute bonds, paying what they promise to pay. The great first Secretary said we had no right to take back what we promised to pay in the shape of a tax. [Applause.]

[Under the leave to extend his remarks Mr. PARKER of New Jersey submitted the following:]

THE SURTAX AND NOT TAX-FREE BONDS DRIVES CAPITAL OUT OF BUSINESS.

While it is true that capital is being driven out of business, this is not because of the existence of nontaxable municipal bonds, but because of the surtax on the income from business investments, a surtax often of over 50 per cent, which makes business unprofitable to the rich man.

Capital so driven out of business can always find other investments; if not in municipal bonds, then in unproductive but promising speculations, in lands and mines and abroad.

THE TAX OPPRESSES THE SMALL BONDHOLDER AND HAMPERS THE GOVERNMENT.

This surtax on Government bonds prevented the rich from owning them, and for this reason the small patriotic subscribers were forced to sell their holdings at a loss. Even now that surtax hampers the United States in negotiating new loans except at nearly double the interest that should be paid. Our United States securities should be sacred and untaxed, whether by the United States or the State.

I add as part of my remarks the words of Alexander Hamilton in his report of 1795 on the public credit, wherein he condemns the very suggestion of taxing the public debt. His statement is as follows:

ALEXANDER HAMILTON, 1795.

"The Secretary of the Treasury has reserved for the conclusion of this report, a proposition which appears to him of great importance to the public credit, and which, after some preliminary observations, will be offered to consideration. It relates to the right of taxing the public funds, and to that of sequestering them in time of war.

"A proposition on either of those points would have been deemed superfluous, had there never been discussions asserting a right to do the one and the other, and even the expediency of exercising that right. The negative of both the pretensions, from the habit of regarding it as incapable of being disputed, had acquired, in the mind of the Secretary, so much the force of an axiom as to have precluded even the mention of the subject in the plan which he originally submitted, for funding the public debt. He should otherwise have thought it an indispensable duty to suggest, as a matter of primary consequence to the system of credit contemplated in the plan, the express renunciation of those pretensions; for they are (as he believes) not only unwarranted by principle or usage, but subversive of the sound maxims of public credit. A persuasion that this would always be a truth granted in the councils of the United States, is his apology for the omission.

"Even now, he should think it useless to depart from his silence on the point, had not the discussions alluded to, created some alarm in places where all the circumstances are not well understood, which it is the interest of the country to dispel. The confidence justly to be reposed in the collective wisdom of this Government, forbids the supposition, by one acquainted with its Constitution, that the security of the creditor can need, in this particular, a further sanction. It is presumed to be impossible, that any final act can ever give so deep a wound to the national interest and character, as to derogate from a principle which may be placed among the most sacred in the administration of a government.

"Is there a right in the Government to tax its own funds?

"The pretense of this right is deduced from the general right of the legislative power to make all the property of the State contributory to its exigencies.

"But this right is obviously liable to be restricted, by the engagements of the Government. It can not be justly exercised in contravention of them. They must form an exception. It will not be denied, that the general right in question, could; and would be abridged, by an express promise not to tax the funds. This promise, indeed, has not been given in terms; but it has been given in substance. When an individual lends money to the State, the State stipulates to repay him the principal lent, with a certain interest, or to pay a certain interest, indefinitely, till the principal is reimbursed; or it stipulates something equivalent, in another form. In our case, the stipulation is in the second form.

"To tax the funds, is manifestly either to take, or to keep back, a portion of the principal or interest, stipulated to be paid.

"To do this, on whatever pretext, is not to do what is expressly promised; it is not to pay that precise principal, or that precise interest, which has been engaged to be paid. It is, therefore, to violate the promise given to the lender.

"But, is not the stipulation to the lender, with a tacit reservation of the general right of the legislature to raise contributions on the property of the State?

"This can not be supposed—because it involves two contradictory things; an obligation to do, and a right not to do. An obligation to pay a certain sum, and a right to retain it in the shape of a tax.

"It is against the rules, both of law and reason, to admit, by implication, in the construction of a contract, a principle which goes in destruction of it.

"The Government, by such a construction, would be made to say to the lender: 'I want a sum of money, for a national purpose, which all the citizens ought to contribute proportionately, but it will be more convenient to them, and to me, to borrow the money of you. If you will lend it, I promise you faithfully, to allow you a certain rate of interest, while I keep the money, and to reimburse the principal within a determinate period, except so much of the one and the other, as I may think fit to withhold, in the shape of a tax.'

"Is such a construction either natural or rational? Does it not, in fact, nullify the promise by the reservation of a right not to perform it?

"Is it to be presumed, without being expressed, that such can be the understanding of a lender, when he parts with his money to a government?

"The contrary is so much the more presumable, that nothing short of an express reservation can support the pretension—to tax the fund.

"It may be replied that the creditor might be willing to rely upon the equity of the Government, not to abuse its right by exacting from him excessive contributions.

"This, if true, does not obviate the difficulty of supposing the coexistence of an obligation and a right, destructive the one of the other, in interpreting the sense of a contract, when nothing of the kind is said.

"It is possible that a creditor might be willing so to contract; yet it is still necessary, in order to determine that he has done it, to find some provisions or expressions in the contract indicating the intention to render what is stipulated compatible with what is reserved. But it is not probable that an individual would be willing to lend upon such terms. He would justly apprehend, that in great emergencies, a right, having no limit but the opinion of the party possessed of the power, would be abused, and that the convenience of laying hold of a fund already prepared and at hand, supported by a claim of right, would be a temptation to abuse, not easy to be resisted. However well disposed to contribute, in common with his fellow citizens, on all the ordinary objects of property or income, he would be unwilling to subject himself to a special burden in the peculiar character of creditor of the State. He would prefer to employ his money in other ways, even to lend it to private persons, where it might be more likely to escape the hand of the fiscal power.

"Let the question be tried by another analysis.

"Public debt can scarcely, in legal phrase, be defined either property in possession or in action. It is evidently not the first, till it is reduced to possession by payment. To be the second, would suppose a legal power to compel payment by suit. Does such a power exist? The true definition of public debt is a property subsisting in the faith of the Government. Its essence is promise. Its definite value depends upon the reliance that the promise will be definitely fulfilled. Can the Government rightfully tax its promises? Can it put its faith under contribution? Where or what is the value of the debt, if such a right exist?

"Suppose the Government to contract with an individual to convey to him a hundred acres of land, upon the condition of paying a hundred dollars. When he came to pay the $100 and demand his title, could the Government require of him to pay $50 more as a tax upon the land, before it would consent to give him the title? Who would not pronounce this to be a breach of contract, a fraud, which nothing could disguise?

"This case is parallel with that under examination, with circumstances that fortify the right of the lending creditor.

"The Government agrees with him, that, for $100, which he delivers to the Government, it will deliver to him, at the end of each year, $6. Here the $6 to be delivered answer to the land to be conveyed, with this stronger ground of right, that the consideration for them has actually been given and received.

Yet when the creditor comes to demand his $6 he is told that he can not have them except with the reservation of $1 as a tax upon the $6, or that he can not have them, except upon the condition of returning $1 as that tax. What is this but to say, that his title to the money in this case, as to the land in the other, must depend upon his paying or allowing a further consideration for it not contemplated in the contract? Can there be a doubt that this, also, would be a breach of contract—a fraud?

"The true rule of every case of property, founded on contract with the Government, is this: It must first be reduced into possession, and then it will become subject, in common with other similar property, to the right of the Government to raise contributions upon it. It may be said that the Government may fulfill this principle by paying the interest with one hand and taking back the amount of the tax with the other. But to this the answer is, that, to comply truly with the rule, the tax must be upon all the money of the community, not upon the particular portion of it which is paid to the public creditors; and it ought, besides, to be so regulated as not to include a lien of the tax upon the fund. The creditor should be not otherwise acted upon than as every other possessor of money, and consequently, the money he received from the public, can then only be a fit subject of taxation, when it is entirely separated and thrown, undistinguished, into the common mass. A different practice would amount to an evasion of the principle contended for and to oppression. A rent or annuity liable before it passes, or in the act of passing, or at the moment of passing from one proprietor to another to a deduction or drawback, at the pleasure of the party from whom it is to pass, is an imaginary thing, destitute both of shape and substance.

"When a government enters into contract with an individual it deposes, as to the matter of the contract, its constitutional authority, and exchanges the character of legislator for that of a moral agent with the same rights and obligations as an individual. Its promises may be justly considered as excepted out of its power to legislate, unless in aid of them. It is in theory impossible to reconcile the two ideas of a promise which obliges with a power to make a law which can vary the effect of it. This is the great principle that governs the question and abridges the general right of the Government to lay taxes, excepting out of it a species of property which subsists only in its promise.

"There are persons who, admitting the general rule, conceive a distinction to exist between a tax upon the funds, which must be paid at all events, and a tax upon alienations of them, which will only be paid when they are transferred from one to another. The latter they think justifiable, because it is in the option of the creditor to avoid the tax, by avoiding the alienation. But the difference between the two cases is only a difference in the degree of violation.

"The stock in its creation is made transferable. This quality constitutes a material part of its value, and the existence of it is a part of the contract with the Government, which has undertaken itself to conduct the operation of transferring by its own officers, and consequently at its own expense. It is as completely a breach of contract to derogate from this quality, in diminution of the value of stock, by encumbering the transfer with a charge or tax, as it is to take back in the same shape a portion of the principal or interest. It is obvious, too, that this may be carried so far as essentially to destroy the transferable capacity. But what is a tax upon transfers, other than the faculty of taking away from the actual proprietor of stock a portion of his principal, whenever his interests or his necessities demand a transfer, in derogation from the full enjoyment of the right to transfer and from the express promise of the Government to pay to him or his alienee? For it is upon the seller, not upon the buyer, that such a tax will fall. And where is the substantial difference, on the ground of contract, between this and a direct tax upon the fund itself? The value of it is as certainly impaired by the one as by the other.

"But shall the proprietor of money in the funds, then, be exempt from his proportion of the burdens which other citizens bear?

"This will not be the consequence of the principle. As a consumer, of which his income is the instrument, he will pay his proportion of the taxes on consumption. As a holder of any other species of property procured by that income or otherwise which is liable to a tax, he must also contribute his proportion.

"But without undue refinement, the lender of money to the public may be affirmed to have paid his tax when he lends his money.

"Relying upon the engagement of the Government, express or implied, that he will receive what is promised him without defalcation, he is content with a less interest than he would take if subject to any such defalcation, and especially if it was to be arbitrary as to its extent. In this lower rate of interest he may be truly said to pay his tax, or to purchase an exemption from it.

"Here, also, we find what is decisive on the point of expediency.

"If the Government had a right to tax its funds, the exercise of that right would cost much more than it was worth. The money lender would exact exorbitant premiums, not only as an indemnification for the use which the Government might probably make of its right, and which, in practice, would be likely to be qualified by some regard to equality of contribution but as an equivalent for insurance against the risk or possibility of a more extensive use. Hence the Government would be likely to pay much more in premiums upon its loans, than it would draw back in taxes; and the former being supposed but equal to the latter, there would be no advantage in exercising the right.

"But it will be, perhaps, more safe to affirm that there would be no borrowing at all upon such terms. The first precedent of a tax upon the funds might be expected to compel the Government to an express renunciation of the right in every future loan. Solid capitalists would not be much inclined to adventure their money upon so precarious a footing as is implied in a power of taxing their credits.

"These reflections lead readily to an estimate of the impressions which would be produced by the example of an imposition on the funds. Regarded either as a positive breach of contract, or as a deviation from the sound maxims of credit, the effect upon it would be nearly equally fatal. Whatever might be excused to a time of revolution, to a defect of means, or to some extraordinary peculiarity of situation, no excuse would be admitted for a deliberate departure from principles—at a time, too, of national prosperity, in a flourishing state of the finances—after the foundations of a regular system had been laid. The departure would argue an incorrectness, an instability, or a depravity of views calculated to give a lasting shock to public credit.

"The United States must henceforth tread with the most cautious steps.

"A renunciation of the right in future might not speedily heal the wound which an example of its exercise had given. Durable suspicions might fasten on to the wisdom of the integrity of the Government, which might occasion to it no inconsiderable loss and embarrassment, before a course of contrary experience would obliterate them.

"The right of a Government to sequester or confiscate property, in its funds in time of war, involves considerations analogous to those which regard the right of taxing them. Whether the foreigner be himself the original lender, or the proprietor of stock in its constitution transferable without discrimination, he stands upon equal ground with the citizen. He has an equal claim upon the faith of the Government.

"In the second case: as the substitute of the original lender, the promise made attaches immediately upon him. Indeed, the certificates which issue upon every transfer, and which may be called the public bonds, designate him as the creditor and expressly invest him with the correspondent rights.

"To sequester or confiscate the stock is as effectually a breach of the contract to pay as to absorb it by a tax. It is to annihilate the promise under the sanction of which the foreigner became a proprietor.

"But does not the general right of war, to seize and confiscate enemy property, extend to the property of the citizens of one nation in the funds of another—the two nations being at war with each other?

"Resorting to principle as the guide, this question may, on solid grounds, be answered in the negative.

"The right to seize and confiscate individual property in national wars, excludes all those cases where the individual derives his title from the enemy sovereign or nation; for the right to property always implies the right to be protected and secured in the enjoyment of that property; and a nation, by the very act of permitting the citizen of a foreign country to acquire property within its territory, whether to lands, funds, or to any other thing, tacitly engages to give protection and security to that property, and to allow him as full enjoyment of it as any other proprietor: an engagement which no state of things between the two nations can justly or reasonably affect. Though politically right, that, in wars between nations, the property of private persons, which depend on the laws of their own country, or on circumstances foreign to the nation with which their own is at war, should be subject to seizure and confiscation by the enemy nation, yet it is both politically and morally wrong that this should extend to property acquired under the faith of the Government, and the laws of that enemy nation.

"When the Government enters into a contract with the citizen of a foreign country it considers him as an individual in a state of nature, and contracts with him as such. It does not contract with him as the member of another society.

"The contracts, therefore, with him can not be affected by his political relations to that society. War, whatever right it may give over his other property, can give none over that which he derives from those contracts. The character in which they are made with him, the faith pledged to him personally virtually exempt it.

"This principle, which seems critically correct, would exempt as well the income as the capital of the property. It protects the use as effectually as the thing. What, in fact, is property but a fiction without the beneficial use of it? In many cases, indeed, the income or annuity is the property itself. And though general usage may control the principle, it can only be as far as the usage clearly goes. It must not be extended by analogy.

"Some of the most approved publicists admitting the principle, qualify it with regard to the income of lands, which they say may be sequestered 'to hinder the remittance of it to the enemy's country.'

"But the same authority affirms that a state at war 'does not so much as touch the sums which it owes to the enemy. Everywhere, in case of a war, funds credited to the public are exempt from confiscation and seizure.' These expressions clearly exclude sequestration as well as confiscation.

"The former, no less than the latter, would be inconsistent with the declarations that a state at war does not so much as touch the sums which it owes to the enemy, and that funds credited to the public are exempt from seizure. And on full inquiry, it is believed that the suggestion thus understood is founded in fact.

"Usage, then, however it may deviate in other particulars in respect to public funds, concurs with principle in pronouncing that they can not rightfully be sequestered in time of war.

"The usages of war still savor too much of the ferocious maxims of the times when war was the chief occupation of man. Enlightened reason would never have pronounced that the persons or property of foreigners, found in a country at the breaking out of a war between that country and his own, were liable to any of the rigors which a state of war authorized against the persons and goods of an enemy. It would have decreed to them an inviolable sanctuary in the faith of those permissions and those laws by which themselves and their property had come under the jurisdiction where they were found. It would have rejected the treachery of converting the indulgences, and even rights of a previous state of amity, into snares for innocent individuals.

"Happily, however, the practice of latter times has left several of those maxims little more than points of obsolete doctrine. They still retain their rank in theory; but usage has introduced so many qualifications as nearly to destroy their operation.

"This appears from the acknowledgment of writers, from the barrenness of modern history in examples of the application of those doctrines, from the opinions known to be generally current in Europe, and from a variety of articles which are constant formulas in the treaties of the present century.

"The United States are in every way interested in the mitigation of the rigor of the ancient maxims of war. They can not better demonstrate their wisdom than by their moderation in this respect. Particularly interested in maintaining in their greatest purity and energy the principles of credit, they can not too strictly adhere to all the relaxations of those maxims which favor the rights of creditors. No temporary advantage can compensate for the evils of a different course of conduct.

"Credit, public and private, is of the greatest consequence to every country. Of this it might be emphatically called the invigorating principle. No well-informed man can cast a retrospective eye over the progress of the United States from their infancy to the present period without being convinced that they owe, in a great degree, to the fostering influence of credit their present mature growth. This credit abroad was the trunk of our mercantile credit, from which issued ramifications that nourished all the parts of domestic labor and industry. The bills of credit emitted from time to time by the different local governments, which passed current as money, cooperated with that resource. Their united force, quickening the energies and bringing into action the capacities for improvement of a new country, was highly instrumental in accelerating its growth.

"Credit, too, animated and supported by the general zeal, had a great share in accomplishing, without such violent expedients as generating universal distress would have endangered the issue, that Revolution of which we are so justly proud, and to which we are so greatly indebted.

"Credit likewise may no doubt claim a principal agency in that increase of national and individual welfare since the establishment of the present Government, which is so generally felt and acknowledged though the true causes of it are not as generally understood. It is the constant auxiliary of almost every public operation; has been an indispensable one in those measures by which our frontiers have been defended; and it would not be difficult to demonstrate that in a recent and delicate instance, it has materially contributed to the safety of the State.

"There can be no time, no state of things, in which credit is not essential to a nation, especially as long as nations in general continue to use it as a resource in war. It is impossible for a country to contend on equal terms or to be secure against the enterprises of other nations, without being able equally with them to avail itself of this important resource; and to a young country with moderate pecuniary capital, and not a very various industry, it is still more necessary than to countries more advanced in both. A truth not less weighty for being obvious and frequently noticed.

"Public credit has been well defined to be, 'a faculty to borrow at pleasure considerable sums on moderate terms; the art of distribution over a succession of years the extraordinary efforts found indispensable in one; a means of accelerating the prompt employment of all the abilities of a nation, and even of disposing of a part of the overplus of others.'

"This just and ingenious definition, condenses to a point the principal arguments in favor of public credit and displays its immense importance.

"Let any man consult the actual course of our pecuniary operations, and let him then say whether credit be not eminently useful. Let him imagine the expense of a single campaign in a war with a great European power, and let him then pronounce whether credit would not be indispensable. Let him decide whether it would be practicable at all to raise the necessary sum by taxes within the year, and let him judge what would be the degree of distress and oppression, which the attempt would occasion to the community. He can not but conclude that war without credit would be more than a great calamity—would be ruin.

"But credit is not only one of the main pillars of the public safety, it is among the principal engines of useful enterprise and internal improvement. As a substitute for capital it is little less useful than gold or silver in agriculture, in commerce, in the manufacturing and mechanic arts.

"The proof of this needs no labored deduction. It is matter of daily experience in the most familiar pursuits. One man wishes to take up and cultivate a piece of land; he purchases upon credit, and in time pays the purchase money out of the produce of the soil improved by his labor. Another sets up in trade; in the credit founded upon a fair character, he seeks and often finds the means of becoming at length a wealthy merchant. A third commenced business as a manufacturer or mechanic, with skill but without money. It is by credit that he is enabled to procure the tools, the materials, and even the subsistence of which he stands in need until his industry has supplied him with capital, and even then he derives from an established and increased credit the means of extending his undertakings.

"Among the circumstances which recommend credit, and indicate its importance in the whole system of internal exertion and amelioration it is impossible to pass unnoticed its unquestionable tendency to moderate the rate of interest—a circumstance of infinite value in all the operations of labor and industry.

"If the individual capital of this country has become more adequate to its exigencies than formerly, it is because individuals have found new resources in the public credit, in the funds to which that has given value and activity. Let public credit be prostrated, and the deficiency will be greater than before. Public and private credit are closely allied if not inseparable. There is perhaps no example of the one being in a flourishing where the other was in a bad state. A shock to public credit would therefore not only take away the additional means which it has furnished, but, by the derangements, disorders, distrusts, and false principles, which it would engender and disseminate, would diminish the antecedent resources of private credit.

"The United States possess an immense mass of improvable matter: the development of it, continually making, may be said to enlarge the field of improvement as it progresses; and, though the active capital of the country has no doubt considerably increased, it is probable that it does not bear at present a much greater proportion to the objects of employment than it has done at any former period. Credit, upon this hypothesis, of every kind is nearly as necessary to us now as it ever was. But at least it may be affirmed with absolute certainty that to a country so situated, credit is peculiarly useful and important.

"If the United States observe with delicate caution the maxims of credit as well toward foreigners as their own citizens in connection with the general principles of an upright, stable, and systematic administration, the strong attractions which they present to foreign capital, will be likely to insure them the command of as much as they may want, in addition to their own, for every species of internal amelioration.

"Can it be doubted, that they would derive from this in a course of time, advantages incomparably greater than any, however tempting, that could partially result from a disregard of those maxims, or from the exercise of a questionable right which should even appear to derogate from them?

"Credit is an entire thing; every part of it has the nicest sympathy with every other part; wound one limb, and the whole tree shrinks and decays.

"The security of each creditor is inseparable from the security of all creditors. The boundary between foreigner and citizen, would not be deemed a sufficient barrier against extending the precedent of an invasion of the rights of the former to the latter. The most judicious and cautious would be most apt to reason thus, and would only look for stronger shades of apparent necessity or expediency to govern the extension. And, in affairs of credit, the opinion of the judicious and cautious may be expected to prevail. Hence the Government by sequestering the property of foreign citizens in the public funds at the commencement of a war, would impair at least, if not destroy, that credit which is the best resource in war.

"It is in vain to attempt to disparage credit by objecting to its abuses. What is there not liable to abuse or misuse? The precious metals, those great springs of labor and industry, are also the ministers of extravagance, luxury, and corruption. Commerce, the nurse of agriculture and manufactures, if overdriven, leads to bankruptcy and distress. A fertile soil, the principal source of human comfort, not unfrequently begets indolence and effeminacy. Even liberty itself, degenerating into licentiousness, produces a frightful complication of ills, and works its own destruction.

"It is wisdom, in every case to cherish whatever is useful, and guard against its abuse. It will be the truest policy of the United States, to give all possible energy to public credit, by a firm adherence to its strictest maxims; and yet to avoid the ills of an excessive employment of it, by true economy and system in the public expenditures, by steadily cultivating peace, and by using sincere, efficient, and persevering endeavors to diminish present debts, prevent the accumulation of new, and secure the discharge, within a reasonable period, of such as it may be at any time matter of necessity to contract. It will be wise to cultivate and foster private credit, by an exemplary observance of the principles of public credit, and to guard against the misuse of the former, by a speedy and vigorous administration of justice and by taking away every temptation to run in debt, founded in the hope of evading the just claims of creditors.

"As an honorable evidence of this disposition, and with a view of quieting the alarms which have been excited, and to silence forever a question which can never be agitated without serious inconvenience, the Secretary of the Treasury, in the last place, respectfully submits:

"That there be an express renunciation, by law, of all pretension of right to tax the public funds, or to sequester at any time, or on any pretext the property which foreign citizens may hold herein.

"This will be particularly essential to the success of the plan for converting the foreign into domestic debt; as the present contracts for the Amsterdam and Antwerp debt contain an equivalent stipulation, and there is no prospect that the creditors would consent to a change, but upon the condition of a like stipulation.

"In the commencement of this report it was the intention to submit some propositions for the improvement of the several branches of the public revenue, but it is deemed advisable to reserve this part of the subject for a future communication.

"All which is respectfully submitted.

"ALEXANDER HAMILTON,
"Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a little more time.

Mr. GARNER. I am sorry, but I have more requests. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, this resolution in effect seeks to create a double form of taxation. The Federal Government is to be given the power to impose an income tax upon the interest paid by cities, counties, or municipalities or other subdivisions upon bonds issued for public improvements, provided at the same time the Federal Government imposes a like income tax upon the interest of its own securities. With the hope of inducing the States to ratify such an amendment, the States in turn are given the power to impose an income tax upon the interest of Federal bonds held by residents, provided the same rate of income tax is at the same time imposed upon the interest of the State, county, or municipal bonds.

This tax is not retroactive. State legislatures, in my opinion, will guard with jealous right the power of their political subdivisions to issue bonds for public improvements.

Our form of Government is based on the proposition that local affairs should be managed by home authorities and general affairs by central authority. To permit the Federal Government to impose a tax upon the interest of bonds issued by a city is a tax upon the exercise of the power of that city to improve its streets or to erect schoolhouses.

The argument is advanced by those favoring this resolution that cities are extravagant in the sale of bonds for public improvements and that by this check this extravagance will cease. For myself, I prefer to trust local authority rather than Congress on the question of what public improvements should be made in my home city. These bonds are generally issued by vote of the people and the State of Ohio, at least, imposes a tax limitation upon the amount of bond indebtedness. It should be recalled, on account of the war, that for several years there were very few public improvements. Schools became crowded; streets and roads were out of repair; few public buildings were erected. If the people in their particular communities desire they should be permitted to progress to prosperity by improvement and they should not be hindered by a Federal tax imposed at the will of Congress. Tax-exempt bonds are easier to market at lower rate of interest, thus saving at once part of the initial cost of construction.

The fault of our present taxing system does not lie with my home city or county, or yours, but rather with Congress. Everyone should contribute to the support of his Government in proper proportion. The rich should not escape through tax-exempt securities, but neither should the small property owner be penalized or punished through this resolution by increasing his local taxes. The tax-exempt securities in the hands of the wealthy are an evil—but the remedy proposed is worse than the disease. Pass this resolution and tax-exempt securities will flood the market, issued lest there be ratification. Bonds coming due after ratification that must be funded would have to be reissued at a higher rate of interest, increasing the local debt. Bonds issued after ratification will bear higher rate of interest. This higher rate falls on the small home and farm owner in the cities and counties throughout the country. Abolish tax-exempt securities and you increase at once the value of outstanding bonds, so that "the rich become richer and the poor become poorer." You can not stop the issuance of bonds for public improvements by repealing tax-exempt securities. Necessary local improvements will always continue.

The issue of such securities will not be checked, because history shows that municipal and county bonds have been, are now, and always will be easier to market and at a lower rate of interest than railroad, industrial, and public utility bonds. The ratification of this amendment will impose a tax upon Federal farm-loan bonds, these issues being substantially the only new bonds of the Federal Government at the present time.

Those advocating this measure should recall that the resolution was introduced in a period of depression. Prosperity has now returned and with it will come increased Federal taxes, so that the need for finances will not be so urgent. The year 1923 will be better and more prosperous than 1922. Capital, in my opinion, will be available for all industry. Besides schoolhouses, improved streets, roads, irrigation districts and the like, are just as beneficial and just as productive as the construction of a new industry.

Let Congress unite to save more and waste less. Cut Federal expenditures to the limit and balance our Budget. Reduce the burden of taxation rather than impose additional taxes. For the last complete fiscal year there was a reduction of about one billion in gross debt; a balanced Budget and successful refunding operation which have reduced the yearly maturing debt to manageable proportions. These facts indicate that Uncle Sam is not in such dire need for cash that he must seek, through constitutional amendment, to impose taxes on our States. Whenever a right to impose a tax exists it is a right which in itself never acknowledges limitation. It may be carried to any extent. The power to tax is the power to destroy. A tax war between States and Federal Government is not probable but would be possible if the amendment should be ratified. Let us permit the States of our great Union to maintain their financial independence.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks made earlier in the day by including the text of the proposed constitutional amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by including the text of the proposed constitutional amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. BACHARACH. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and fellow Members, I was told that there was no time to spare, and I had dismissed the idea of saying anything at this time. However, I will take advantage of the generosity of the gentleman in charge of the opposition [Mr. GARNER] to express two or three thoughts in connection with this subject.

Personally I regard the frequency with which, whenever any difficulty arises, resort is had to an act of the legislature in a State or an act of Congress, or when it can not be reached otherwise, through an amendment to the Constitution. Already irreverent hands are laid upon that sacred document with the thought of amending it in various ways; and I know of no amendment that has been offered to that instrument which will be more pernicious than the amendment which is here proposed, and which we now have under discussion.

It is an invasion of the fundamental distinction founded by the fathers of the Republic when this Government was created. It is an effort to rob each State of one element of its sovereignty.

The offer is made here of an exchange—"reciprocal," say the friends of this measure. What is there "reciprocal" about these two sections? On one side the Government of the United States gains everything. On the other side the State loses infinitely more than the Government of the United States gains.

This right of a sovereign State to control the issue of its securities, to regulate its taxes, is a fundamental right and one necessary to its very existence. [Applause.] If you invade that right, you destroy the sovereignty of the State.

Gentlemen, if we are going to do this, let us obliterate all State lines and make of this a strong central Government. "Oh," they say, "we want to check these municipal departments from issuing freely, too freely perhaps, these securities." What? Transfer to another and a foreign jurisdiction the right to say what shall be issued for a local improvement? Who is there that can better be trusted than the people in the different localities? Home rule there is an essential element of safety and security.

There is no argument in the statement that this is a refuge for the rich. As my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] said, if a rich man wants to pay the penalty at the beginning and invest money in bonds that are tax free, with a very limited income, let him do it. But they say "You are diverting this money from the industries of the States." The money must come from some source and must be used. What for? Why, in maintaining the government, managing and developing the institutions and the developments and improvements of the community. And what better use could the money be put to than that?

Another argument that has been advanced here is that only the rich seek this avenue to escape taxation. I am sure if men will be honest with themselves they will recollect and recognize that there are thousands and thousands of people with small incomes whose money is invested in Government bonds and in State securities. The savings banks and other kindred institutions invest in them. Why should they not have the refuge of an investment for their little savings which they have accumulated and desire to have free from tax, if they are content to take the lesser income?

I submit that the credit of every State will be injured and impaired by this amendment to the Constitution. You are going to rob the State of its power through its municipal subdivisions to borrow money. You will make it probably impossible for them to realize on their bond issues. A necessity will arise in a community that is not blessed with a great credit like the United States Government, and it will wish to raise money by bonds for the purpose of some little necessary improvement in its midst, and when faced by this possible double taxation of income the State will be powerless to carry out its purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this resolution provides, first, for the taxation by the United States of incomes derived from securities issued by or under the authority of the State; and, second, for the taxation by the State of incomes derived from securities issued by the United States.

The second provision, in my opinion, is far more objectionable than the first, and I doubt if any persons who advocated the passing of a constitutional amendment preventing a State from issuing tax-exempt securities ever dreamed that Congress would favor an amendment preventing itself from issuing securities the value of which would be materially depreciated, and yet such would be the effect of this proposed amendment if the State can tax the income from the bonds.

When Congress was given power by the Constitution "to borrow money on the credit of the United States," was it intended that the credit should be taken away or impaired by the State by making less valuable the securities given for the money received? I can not believe that such was the case.

The amount of outstanding tax-free securities, as stated by Joseph S. McCoy, Government actuary, and by Secretary Mellon, page 17 of the hearings, "on January 1, 1922, was $10,660,000,000, and of this amount $5,000,000,000 is held by corporations, such as insurance companies, surety and bonding companies, banks and trust companies, which are required to maintain certain reserves." But neither Mr. McCoy nor Secretary Mellon nor anyone else has ever stated that the balance or any specified part of the tax-free securities are held by those seeking to avoid the payment of an income tax of any kind. On the other hand, it is well known that by far the greater portion is held by guardians and trustees for the benefit of widows and orphans and by elderly people, who are satisfied with a small income of which they can not be deprived.

The mere fact that there has been a decrease in the amount of the surtax is no proof that more money of the rich has gone into tax-exempt securities. It is well known that there are other ways of avoiding the payment of income taxes. It is but natural that when the war was still on that a person should feel that he ought to contribute liberally, but with the war ended the old habit of avoiding taxes would again be resorted to and incomes reduced accordingly. This, with the change in rates, would account for the falling off of incomes without charging it to investments in tax-exempt securities. If such was not the case, is it not probable that an actuary would estimate the amount instead of leaving us without any information on the subject?

What is the real reason for this demand for this constitutional amendment at this time? Certainly Secretary Mellon did not demand it, for on pages 24 and 25 of the hearings he makes four positive suggestions as to what he advises to be done: First, repeal the excess-profit tax, and then follow four other recommendations, and finally, before closing his fifth recommendation, he says:

> I suggest for the consideration of Congress that it may be advisable to take action by statute or by constitutional amendment where necessary to restrict further issue of tax-exempt securities.

This is far from recommending a constitutional amendment, especially one that will enable each State to place a different tax on the income of bonds issued by the United States. It seems to me that the real reason for this proposed amendment is found in the statement of Philip H. Gadsden, on page 36 of the hearings, when he says:

As this committee probably knows, the three associations which I represent comprise in their membership practically all the gas, electric railway, electric light, and power companies of the United States. Those companies have an aggregate investment of over $10,000,000,000.

And on page 41 he concludes his evidence by stating that a municipal bond sells so that the difference in the actual investment rate is from 2½ to 3 per cent. He says:

The cities are going to demand that these facilities be increased, and what will be the result of these demands? The public utilities are going to say we can not find this money because you are competing with us and getting the money cheaper. The reply will be, "Well, if you can not do it, we can," don't you see? "We will take you over and operate you," and the municipality can secure its money for 5 per cent as against the 8 per cent that the utilities have to pay, and you are going to cause a municipalization of the public utilities whether you like it or not, because under the present economic conditions there is no other answer to it. If the city can own its own gas plants and street car lines, they can operate them on money which they can get at 5 per cent, when it is necessary for the public utilities to pay 8 per cent more, so they can not compete with the city.

This seems to be the sole reason why some at least are interested in obtaining this amendment; in fact, if there was any doubt in the matter it is removed by the report of the committee itself, which, in speaking of the issuing of tax-exempt securities, says:

It also operates as an inducement to every municipality to have all kinds of public utilities owned and controlled by the municipality itself, thereby escaping its proper share of Federal and State taxation. In 1921 over a billion dollars was issued of tax-exempt securities, and the amount in existence is constantly increasing. It is obvious that this condition of affairs makes it difficult for public utilities privately conducted to maintain their financial condition, for just in proportion as the money can be obtained cheaper on bonds that are tax exempt the rate becomes higher on those which are subject to levy.

This is certainly a bold statement. Do the members of the committee believe that a municipality should be required to pay more to a private corporation than it would cost the municipality to own and operate its own plants, should the taxpayer be mulcted for the benefit of contractors? This is certainly a new doctrine that is sought to be promulgated.

I doubt if there is a State in the Union in which there are not municipalities that own either their electric light, waterworks, or railway plants, many of which are selling their products or carrying their passengers far below what is asked by privately owned plants in the same municipality. I know that such is the case with the municipal electric plant at Cleveland. I doubt if there is a city in the Union in which either electricity or water is furnished at as low a cost, and both are furnished by the city. While the electric railways are not owned by the city, the city has a contract by which it virtually controls the rate of fare, which is regulated by the increase or decrease of the so-called interest fund, and no city has a lower rate of fare or better service or better equipment. And yet the admitted purpose of one, at least, of the principal witnesses and the committee itself is to prevent municipalities from issuing bonds to engage in any municipal enterprise.

It is said that investments in municipal and State securities prevent capital from being employed in industries that give employment to labor and in mining and oil industries. What can be of more interest to the laboring man and our citizens generally than good schools, plenty of water and light, and transportation to his place of employment at a reasonable rate, not by paying 8 cents for a mile ride, as is required in this city? Every citizen demands a competent police and fire department to protect his life and property, and numerous other improvements which a municipality should itself provide.

But, as stated, this resolution should be defeated, especially for the reason that it provides that a State can tax the income from United States bonds. I am opposed to the United States surrendering any part of its sovereignty to any State in the Union, to its permitting any State to impair its credit. The United States bond to-day is the best security in this or any other country. It is as good in one State as in another and in any country in the world. Why was it that the first issues of Liberty bonds were subscribed for by persons in every walk of life? Every person who urged their sale made special mention of the fact that they were tax free and as good as gold and could never be impaired. At present an emergency does not exist and an immediate sale of bonds is not necessary, but let trouble arise as in 1914, and then who would say that the United States should not have the right to put upon the market a bond the interest from which can not be decreased by any State in the Union and which will be as good the day it is payable as it is the day issued, no matter how distant that day may be, and that the interest thereon shall not be subject to decrease by any law in the land.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from Iowa go ahead?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas should use as much of his time as we have used of ours.

Mr. GARNER. It is nearly 5 o'clock. Suppose we quit. Gentlemen have gone away with the understanding that we were going to quit at 5 o'clock. I think it is a good time to quit. If you were going to try to finish to-night, it would be a different matter: but if you are not going to finish to-night, why keep the membership later to-night than at any other time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCARTHUR). The gentleman from Iowa has 39 minutes and the gentleman from Texas has 43 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. I will even up the time by yielding five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, this proposed amendment has emanated from the wrong source to get my support. [Applause and laughter.] The very same crowd that have humbugged the people of the United States for the last 40 years are sponsoring and propagandizing this amendment, and sending out statements to the patent outside of weekly and farm newspapers, and putting the same thing in labor papers. They are absolutely endeavoring by false information to win the favor of the farm organizations and labor unions for the purpose of fooling them, and through this method get these organizations to write their Representatives in Congress. The people of the United States ought to know what is going on. It sounds good to say, "We want to grab by the nape of the neck the big rich man who owns these securities and make him pay taxes." Listen! The men who are sponsoring this proposition do not mean to pay any more taxes into the Treasury of the United States than they are paying now. They mean to make the poor farmer, whose house is on the hillside; the poor people in the workshop and in the factory, who must vote school bonds in order to have a decent school building for their children, and road bonds in order to have a good gravel road to haul their produce to town—they mean to make that poor man and his wife and children pay a higher rate of taxation on the bonds that must be sold for these improvements. They further mean, when it becomes necessary, to prevent the town and the city from having the necessary school buildings, to prevent them from having a municipally-owned electric-light plant, a municipally-owned gas plant, a municipally-owned electric railway system, a municipally-owned sewerage system.

That is a part of the propaganda. It means, as the President not only implied but said in his message the other day, to put the railroad bonds, the Bethlehem Steel bonds, the bonds of the great and powerful corporations and trusts in a class over the good-roads improvement bonds, drainage bonds, and municipal bonds, bonds that are for the poor people of the country. That is the effort of the powerful, rich, monopolistic corporations of this country at the expense of the poor men and people of the United States. [Applause.] Men, do not deceive yourselves in this matter to-day, do not put faith in any of this propaganda which has gone out from this iniquitous Wall Street source, ramifying through the subdivisions of the United States for the purpose of fooling Members of Congress and getting them to vote to fasten this iniquity around the necks of the poor people of this Republic. They have in past times been successful in this propaganda, and they may be successful to-day, but at the other end of this Capitol, where they will pass on this question, the folks back home can be informed by that time, and if it runs the gantlet and gets back to these people I hope there will be patriots enough in the United States Senate who believe in upholding the hands of the people against the power of the rich to kill this iniquitous proposition. [Applause.] It is the intent and purpose of this amendment to ultimately raise the interest rate on the farm loan bonds. That crowd has endeavored in every possible way to prevent the farm-loan banks from functioning properly, and now they think they will slip up on the farmer and fool him into the net of this constitutional amendment, and after it is adopted Congress can tax all farm-loan bonds and, of course, make the farmer pay higher rates of interest. The private mortgage companies are doing all they can to get this amendment adopted. Do not you know they are after higher rates of interest? They want to force the Government farm loan bank bonds to bear a higher rate of interest. Let us stand by the farmer and kill this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCARTHUR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 314, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that it had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. NORTON, Mr. VARE, Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, and Mr. SWING were granted leave to extend in the RECORD their remarks on this resolution.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, after consideration of the merits of House Joint Resolution 314, being considered by this House, I am forced to announce my opposition to the measure, which provides as follows:

That the following article be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States:

"SECTION 1. The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State, but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

"SEC. 2. Each State shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived by its residents from securities issued after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States, without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of such States."

I am firmly convinced that this proposed constitutional amendment should be defeated in the House for the following reasons:

First. That it is an infringement upon the rights of the various States.

Second. That it has a tendency toward reducing or weakening the credit of the various States and their subdivisions.

Third. Taxation of State, municipal, county, and school bonds would increase the interest rates paid on such securities and thereby increase the local burden of the people of every community in the country.

Fourth. Public development will be retarded and enterprising communities will be taxed unjustly for public improvements.

Fifth. That the contention made on the floor that practically all of this class of securities are held by the rich is not altogether based on facts. Municipal securities on several occasions have been sold over the counter in Philadelphia, and the thrifty wage earner has been, on the whole, the largest purchaser.

It is fundamentally wrong to place any greater burden on the erection of schoolhouses, on the construction of new highways, and the prosecution of other State and municipal undertakings. These activities should be encouraged as other activities of progress are encouraged, and public enterprise should be fostered and protected the same as private industry.

In Pennsylvania a great road-building program has been formulated. It is perhaps the greatest road-building program in the United States. As a Pennsylvanian, I do not propose to cast my vote here in Congress for a proposal which in any way will hamper this program.

The city of Philadelphia is about to proceed with the issuance of bonds for transportation subways and elevated railroads, sewage disposal, construction of many large public buildings. As a Philadelphian, I am unwilling to support any legislation which in my opinion would be a handicap to this great development.

I regret that I can not accept at this instance the views of the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, for whom I have the highest regard, and who I believe will go down in history as one of the greatest men who ever sat as Secretary of the Treasury. It seems to me further, however, that the people of the country are tired of having the tax laws changed each year so that experts must be employed by the average business man in order to present a reasonably correct report of his earnings or losses. Changes in the tax laws by legislation or constitutional amendment, as well as the ever-changing regulations, are bad.

For these reasons, which are based primarily on my earnest desire to see the various communities in Pennsylvania and other States of the Union progress, I am unable to support this measure.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. PATTERSON of New Jersey, for the balance of the week, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEDMAN, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. LINEBERGER, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SEARS, for 15 days, on account of business.

To Mr. BRAND (at the request of Mr. CRISP), indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS ON JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on House Joint Resolution 314.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the resolution under consideration. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, nearly everyone has come to accept as fundamental the axiom that taxes should be levied and paid according to ability to pay. This is based upon the almost universal conception that he who has been richly endowed should give in proportionate amount for the social good. It is also based on the theory that he who has the greatest possessions enjoys the largest measure of protection from the Government and, therefore, as a matter of equity should contribute in like measure toward its support.

From time immemorial the burdens of government have fallen the most heavily upon the poor. They have not only fought its battles in time of war but as an aftermath have been compelled to rebuild the waste places and pay the heavy obligations incurred. It is only in recent years that any real headway has been made in securing anything even approaching a fair distribution of the tax burden. We have yet a long way to travel before that much-desired goal shall be reached. The issuance of tax-exempt securities is not in the line of progress. It is a retreat, a reversal of the stride forward represented by the adoption of the income-tax amendment to the Federal Constitution. This amendment is one of the outstanding achievements of the Roosevelt administration, and marks the greatest single step forward yet made by this Nation in its attempt to work out a rational and just system of taxation. Now, however, we have largely nullified the primary purpose of the amendment by creating a class of superrich who pay no taxes on their vast incomes from tax-free Federal, State, and municipal securities.

SALES TAX CONDEMNED.

The shortening of our revenues thus occasioned has given rise to advocacy of the sales tax. This agitation is further augmented by the heavy taxes on business income made necessary by these exemptions. To levy a sales tax is to lay still heavier burdens upon the poor. The argument that a sales tax is a fair tax because it equitably distributes the burden according to consumption is so manifestly absurd as hardly to be worth passing notice, and yet in the plausible form in which it is put forward by its advocates it has deceived many. The amount which a man and his family must consume in order to live in ordinary comfort has little relation to his ability to buy. More often it is the poor who have the large families. Their needs for subsistence are correspondingly great. Most generally their entire income is spent for the bare necessaries of life, and yet there are plenty of those of affluence who are willing to still further lighten their own burden by saddling a tax upon everything that a man must eat, wear, or use for shelter. Not only is a sales tax contrary to the principles first enunciated, but is well calculated to drive the country into sovietism. Its advocates may as well save their breath and the large sums they are spending for propaganda. Their theory will never be accepted by the American people. Equality of opportunity is the highest tenet of a just government. This can never be approached until there is an equitable system of taxation that distributes the burden according to ability to pay.

TAX-EXEMPT BONDS DO NOT MATERIALLY DECREASE INTEREST RATES.

The issuance of tax-free securities on the assumption that the Government thereby is enabled to get money at an appreciably lower rate of interest, resulting in a corresponding saving to the public, is another of those plausible suggestions that has often deceived, but which will not bear analysis. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that on June 30, 1921, individual deposits in all reporting banks in the United States and island possessions amounted to the stupendous sum of $35,459,155,000. This amount has been greatly increased the past year and, according to the best available information, there is now an untapped total of about $40,000,000,000. Most of these savings belong to people of comparatively small means, who would be only too glad to invest their funds in Federal, State, and municipal bonds were these not immediately grabbed up by the rich. For those whose income falls within the lower brackets it matters little whether the bonds are tax free or not, and, in my judgment, the removal of this feature would not materially increase the interest burden to the public. On the other hand, we are now sustaining huge losses in revenue, as, for all practical purposes, the bonds are so distributed with reference to the income of those holding them as to be tax exempt.

HEAVY LOSS OF REVENUE SUSTAINED.

There are now at least $10,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities that have been issued by the States and their subdivisions, including school and drainage districts. This does not take into account the vast sums tied up in tax certificates, county warrants, and the like. In addition to these, there are $5,560,453,600 of the first Liberty and Victory bonds, which, together with the Federal farm-loan bonds of about $500,000,000, make up the $16,000,000,000 which I gave as my estimate of tax-exempt securities in addressing the House some time ago. There are in addition to these, however, the second, third, and fourth Liberty issues, aggregating $13,272,546,850, which are partially exempt.

According to the figures submitted by Prof. Edward B. A. Seligman upon the hearings on the resolution now under consideration, it is possible for any one man to hold as much as $160,000 worth of these securities in such proportions as to make the income from this amount totally exempt from any kind of taxes. And, as a matter of fact, these intermediate issues are now so distributed that the income from them is practically tax-exempt in the hands of those who own them. It is clear, therefore, that we have just about thirty billion of tax-free securities in this country. The loss in revenue from this vast sum has been estimated all the way from $150,000,000 to $400,000,000. It is safe to say it is $200,000,000 annually. In the hands of the present owners the loss is more probably in the neighborhood of $300,000,000.

Just as an illustration of how this works out, let me read an excerpt from the Detroit Free Press which I clipped last summer:

A probate court fight among the heirs of James J. Hill and Mrs. Hill has been on of late in St. Paul. The row has been over the appointment of an administrator for Mrs. Hill's estate of $12,000,000. But that is only incidental here. The significant point of public interest is that Louis W. Hill, former business adviser for Mrs. Hill, testified that, beginning in 1916 and continuing until 1919, he disposed of heavily taxed securities held by his principal, substituting therefor tax-free holdings, and in this way increased her annual income from $365,000 to $730,000 a year; that is, he doubled net returns.

Here is a concrete example of the working of the tax-exempt bond evil anybody can understand at a glance. In a single instance, in the case of a personal fortune which is surpassed by several in Michigan which have been similarly invested, a little shrewd readjustment has withdrawn $365,000 annually from the reach of the taxgatherers.

EXEMPTION DESTROYS CREDITS FOR PRODUCTIVE INDUSTRY.

Nor is the loss in revenue the only serious consequence of the existence of this huge sum of tax-exempt securities. Mr. Kingman N. Robins, president of the Farm Mortgage Bankers' Association of America, tells us that "there is a sort of general principle apparently among investors now who have incomes of $30,000 or more that they will not buy anything but tax-exempt securities." The result of this is that the larger incomes are artificially diverted from productive industry. It is this diversion in large measure that has been responsible for the business stagnation and unemployment from which we have suffered until recently. It is not that there has been any lack of money, but everywhere there has been a failure of credits for private enterprise. While business and industry have suffered, the farmers have fared even worse. Since 1919 they have found it impossible to secure adequate funds to carry on their ordinary business operations. Not only were they the chief losers from the indefensible policy of rapid deflation but they were robbed of every defensive weapon because of inability to secure necessary funds so as to enable them to market their products in an orderly manner. Strike down the exemptions and the bonds would soon find their way into the hands of the small investor whose savings are insufficient to enable him to engage in business or invest in mortgages. This would release billions for business credits and industry from which the returns would be larger.

The solution of our Federal tax problem is not to be found in an effort to save a few dollars in interest by the issuance of tax-free securities, which saving is paid manyfold in heavier taxes upon those engaged in productive industry, but in requiring everybody to pay in the same proportion, no matter what the source of his income. Only through this policy and the practice of the most rigid economy can we relieve the burden now resting on business and the earnings of individual effort. The lightening of the tax load upon productive enterprises and the earnings derived from individual effort will result in stimulated activity and the creation of new tax values, which in their turn will aid in reducing the rate of taxation which is now causing so much hardship and discontent.

POLITICAL AND SOCIAL ASPECTS.

But if the economic aspects of the question are important, the political aspect is even more so. From the days of Moses we have been warned against the oppression of the poor. And from that day to this the economically weak have struggled to free themselves from the heavy burdens imposed by the economically strong. To permit a privileged class is bad enough, but to create one—particularly of the superrich—by exempting them from taxation is supreme folly. Such a class is inimical to the fundamental concepts of human society and runs counter to the principles laid down in the Declaration of Independence. While all men are not born free and equal in the sense that they are equally endowed, they should be born free and equal so far as equality of opportunity is concerned. This fundamental can never be realized by a system which fosters the accumulation of untold wealth in the hands of the relatively few, and more especially is this true where these are permitted to escape the burdens of government.

The issuance of tax-free securities is wrong in principle and any seeming advantage that may be gained is lost many times over by the added burdens placed upon the backs of those engaged in productive toil and industry. When government becomes so burdensome to the average man that he begins to mentally weigh the advantages it offers against the burdens it imposes, it is high time that we not only seek means to lessen the load but that we take particular pains to see that it is equitably distributed.

To permit men of great wealth and large income to practically escape all taxation is a social and political wrong. It is the occasion of much unrest and agitation against the rich and ultimately will give rise to serious political convulsions that may become revolutionary in character. If we are to avoid confiscation and repudiation we must so order our system of government that the causes which give rise to them shall be either removed or suppressed.

The fundamental principles that underlie successful self-government have been known for generations, but their practical application to the new conditions that are constantly arising is the test of statesmanship. Greed, avarice, and self-interest will always wield their mighty forces for advantage against the interests of the great mass of our people. These forces must be combated and held in check; the gates of opportunity for the humblest must be kept open, and a substantial equality be maintained among our citizens, if we are to avoid the pitfalls that ultimately lead to the destruction of free government.

The rapid increase of our tax-free securities and the corresponding increase of those of great wealth who pay no taxes have already grown into a national menace. The grumbling discontent of those who are left to carry the added burdens is daily growing in volume. The proposed constitutional amendment now under consideration will serve as the basis for remedial legislation and should therefore receive the sanction of this body. What the States may do in the way of approval or disapproval does not immediately concern us. Our duty is to do that which seems imperative in order that the abuse may come to an end. I am confident that the States will approve when their people shall have had time for reflection and study.

Whereas a shortage of labor now exists in the industries of agriculture and metalliferous mining;

Whereas under the existing percentage system for the admission of immigrants there are now being admitted into this country immigrants unsuited to employment in the fields of labor in which such shortage exists, thereby failing to relieve such shortage and increasing unemployment in other fields of labor; and

Whereas there exist many difficulties in the administration of the present immigration laws which may be avoided by suitable legislation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the Senate appoint a select committee to consist of three members of the Senate who are members of the Committee on Immigration, to investigate immigration problems in the United States, particularly with a view to relieving labor shortage in the United States by selecting, as the immigrants admissible under the present percentage system of admission, those who are best suited for employment in the fields of industry in which any shortage of labor exists and with a view to remedying the existing difficulties in the administration of the immigration laws. The committee shall make a final report to the Senate not later than January 1, 1924. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act at such times and places, to make such expenditures, and to employ such stenographic and clerical assistants, as it deems necessary. The committee is further authorized to send for persons and

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, it seems to me that neither the friends of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska nor its opponents could lose anything by fixing a definite time to vote upon it. It would, I know, accommodate many Senators who have other things to do if they knew when the motion would be voted upon, so they would not have to stay here under the uncertainty of its coming up at any moment. I know that the mover of the motion is perfectly willing to vote to-day or to-morrow, although he would prefer, I think, to vote to-morrow, and I would have no objection to fixing a time to-morrow. So I ask unanimous consent that we vote on the motion to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington, and suggest also to the Senator from Nebraska, why could we not agree to vote on the motion, say, the day following the report from the Committee on Banking and Currency? The chairman of that committee stated yesterday that in all probability they would make their report the first of next week, as I understood him. We could in that case vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska about Tuesday or Wednesday. The motion is still pending. The speeches are now directed with respect to the agricultural credits bill and also the ship subsidy, and it would not disarrange anything. I make that suggestion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The only question about that which occurs to me right now is that there might be a desire to take up the bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee. It is very likely that bill could be taken up without motion, by unanimous consent, or if it should require a motion then it could not be substituted for the other measure; we would be put in the position of having to vote squarely on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska one way or the other. If that motion should be defeated, of course we could take up the bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, or if the Senate should vote to take up the bill of the Senator from Nebraska, probably an effort would be made to substitute for it the other bill. Otherwise I would have no objection, so far as I am concerned; but that, it occurs to me, would be rather an embarrassing situation.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say in answer to the suggestion that it seems to me if the Committee on Banking and Currency would make its report, all opposition to bringing up this question would give way, and you could substitute the Banking and Currency measure if you had the votes, the same as you could substitute it by voting to take it up, and it would save that much time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No motion could be made to amend the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HARRISON. No; but if his motion prevailed and a majority voted for substituting the other bill, it could be done in that way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON. The question would be whether the bill of the Senator from Nebraska or the Banking and Currency bill was to be considered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The whole proposition would be up, whether his bill was here or whether the other bill was here, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. So far as I am personally concerned I would rather vote to-day than to-morrow. I would not like to vote to-morrow because one Senator who is now in the Chamber will not be here to-morrow. Perhaps he can change his arrangements so that it would not make any difference.

I think I ought to state to the Senator from Washington, and likewise to the Senate, because I want to be frank about it, that if the motion now pending, which I have made, shall fail, I intend to follow it as soon as I can get the floor with another motion to take up Order of Business No. 918, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 253) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. I realize that if my motion fails there will not be any possibility of taking up any legislation affecting agricultural conditions until the Banking and Currency Committee reports. In the meantime the joint resolution, to which, so far as I know, there is no objection—there may be some opposition, and there may be Senators who will propose to offer amendments to it—will not have an opportunity to be considered until after the question of farm credits is disposed of. Between the action of the Senate, if it should refuse to take up the bill that I have suggested in the motion, and the time the Banking and Currency Committee reports we will probably have time to dispose of the joint resolution. If that joint resolution is to be passed in this Congress it ought to be passed soon in order to give the House an opportunity to act upon it.

The joint resolution has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It proposes an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, one effect of which would be to eliminate the short session of Congress. It also provides for the beginning of the terms of service of Members of the Senate and of the House on the 1st day of January in each year after they shall have been elected. It further provides for the elimination of the Electoral College and the beginning of the presidential term on the third Monday of January following the election.

I feel that there is quite a deep interest in the country in the joint resolution; but if it should be passed in the short time remaining before the adjournment of the present Congress, which will expire on the 4th of next March, it would not bring about any effective result, for the House of Representatives would hardly have opportunity to act upon the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Nebraska has a perfect right to make a motion to take up any measure that he desires, and I merely suggested that we vote to-morrow. As the Senator knows, in my conversation with him on yesterday I gained the impression that he had no objection to voting to-day, but that he would prefer that the vote be taken to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator got a wrong impression. I desire to ask the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] if he is going to be able to be present to-morrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I have no choice; it does not make any difference to me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, perhaps, would just as lief vote to-day as to vote to-morrow?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] would not present that request. I think we are proceeding in an orderly way and without waste of time. I think we shall reach a vote in due course perhaps as quickly as, and it may be more quickly than, we should if we set a time for voting. There is one objection for setting a time to take a vote on a motion like this, and that is that nearly all Senators absent themselves from the Senate until the time for voting arrives; that there are very few here to listen to the debate and the discussion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I desire to say that I do not think that would be the case as to the pending motion, because we could go on considering the bill, and if the time should arrive when it was likely that the debate would run out, we could vote upon amendments to the bill; so it is not like the ordinary case of fixing a time to vote on the final passage of a bill. If we shall fix the time when the vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, then of course we shall proceed with the consideration of amendments to the bill if there should be no further debate upon the measure; so, I take it, that Senators would feel just as much obligation to be here as they otherwise would.

Mr. NORRIS. So that there may be no misunderstanding, I should like to suggest to the Senator, though I may be wrong about it, that my idea is that so long as this motion is pending it would be improper to vote upon any amendment to the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I myself think that would be so. The motion would be the pending question, I take it, and I think it would not be in order to consider anything else.

Mr. NORRIS. It would not be in order to vote on any other question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that we vote to-day at 3 o'clock on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. FLETCHER. I object.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make that request simply for the convenience of Senators, for it would be no convenience to me at all. It will not hasten or delay the passage of the pending measure in any way.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, as I have stated, that we are proceeding without the waste of any time and should gain nothing by entering into an agreement to vote on the pending motion. I think that we shall reach a vote on it in due course and in an orderly way, and also without very much lapse of time. I do not like the idea of fixing a time for a vote for the reason which I have stated, that it means that Senators will be absent until the time for voting arrives; that they will not be here to listen to the discussion in the meantime. Fixing a time for a vote does not mean that another measure may be taken up or that a vote on amendments may be taken in the meantime, because the motion is the pending question and is the only question that may be considered until it shall have been voted upon. I think the Senator from Washington is in error in his statement in regard to that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in making my request I thought I was accommodating Senators who on yesterday urged the necessity of getting promptly at legislation for the benefit of the farmer. It was urged, I know, by several Senators in the discussion yesterday that they were very anxious to consider legislation for the benefit of the farmer, and I thought the earlier we could get a vote on the pending motion, if it were carried, of course, the sooner we would reach a consideration of that question.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we vote to-day at 4 o'clock on the motion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington is anxious to consider farm legislation, if that is really his purpose, as is indicated by what he has just stated, it would be very easily accomplished by the Senator simply withdrawing his bill and letting us go on with the Norris bill, for he has that power.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Missouri did not, of course, intentionally misrepresent my position, but he did not correctly state it. I suggested that several Senators on yesterday expressed a desire to take up the consideration of legislation for the benefit of the farmer and that I thought agreeing to my request would aid that end. However, Mr. President, I made my request really for the convenience of the Senators, and that is all. If Senators do not desire to give the consent which I have asked, it will not disturb me in the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the request for unanimous consent which has been preferred by the Senator from Washington.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock this day, being the calendar day of Wednesday, December 20, 1922, the Senate shall proceed to vote without further debate upon the motion of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4050, a bill to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

TRANSFER OF LANDS IN FULTON COUNTY, GA.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the privilege of reporting from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys two measures which are pressing for action. I first report from that committee, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 12174) to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary, and I submit a report (No. 952) thereon.

I may say the bill authorizes the Attorney General to quitclaim to Fulton County a strip of land 5 feet in width at the rear of the United States penitentiary in Georgia. McDonough Road is the principal thoroughfare in Fulton County, and in order to make it conform in width from one end to the other the 5 feet are asked for from the Government to be added to the roadway. The officials of the penitentiary report that the widening of the road would be a great advantage by facilitating the passage of incoming and outgoing vehicles from the penitentiary. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall not object if the bill does not lead to discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. If it shall lead to any discussion whatever I will withdraw it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not think what I wish to suggest will lead to discussion to exceed more than a minute or two; but the question arises in my mind why does this bill provide that the Attorney General shall make the conveyance? That is not the usual way of conveying land owned by the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is the usual method wherever the land is built upon and used and is not a portion of the public domain. The lands in question in this case were originally purchased by the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. The act of Congress would make the title good, of course. The Congress could authorize the Senator from Utah, or anybody else, to make the conveyance; I realize that; but there ought to be a uniformity in legislation of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that the uniform practice has been that the Attorney General has made such conveyances wherever the land has been originally purchased by the Government and does not constitute a portion of the public land. I think that the bill in this instance is in conformity with the general rule.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it occurred to me as a member of the committee that it is quite appropriate in this instance, inasmuch as the penitentiary is under the supervision of the Department of Justice, that the head of that department should make the conveyance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to convey, by quitclaim, to the county of Fulton, in the State of Georgia, for use as a public road, and for no other purpose, all the right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all that strip of land, 5 feet in width, off the northerly and northeasterly sides, along the McDonough Road frontage of United States penitentiary farm No. 1, in said county, between the easterly line of Sawtell Avenue and the westerly line of Forrest Road: Provided, however, That the county of Fulton shall not have the right to sell or convey the said premises, nor to use the same for any other purpose whatever than as herein provided, and in the event the premises shall cease to be used for a public road and cease to be cared for and maintained as are other public roads in said county, the right, title, and interest hereby authorized to be conveyed shall thereupon immediately revert to the United States: Provided further, That the conveyance herein authorized shall not be made until and unless a strip of land 5 feet wide is dedicated by the property owners on the opposite side of McDonough Road: Provided further, That the county of Fulton shall bear the cost of replacing the existing curb in front of the residence of the warden along said McDonough Road as widened.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the report of the committee, accompanying the bill, may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 952) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12174) to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of this bill is fully explained in House Report No. 1261, as follows:

[House Report No. 1261, Sixty-seventh Congress, third session.]

WIDEN M'DONOUGH ROAD IN FRONT OF THE UNITED STATES PENITENTIARY, FULTON COUNTY, GA.

Mr. LANGLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 12174:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12174) to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary, having duly considered the same, hereby make report of it to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This bill was introduced by the chairman of your committee pursuant to a letter addressed to him by the Attorney General of the United States, which is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. JOHN W. LANGLEY,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. LANGLEY: The department is advised that the board of county commissioners of Fulton County, Ga., has undertaken to widen, by 10 feet, and otherwise to improve McDonough Road, one of the public streets of said county, under a plan which contemplates the dedication by abutting owners of the necessary land on each side thereof. As McDonough Road extends along the northerly and northeasterly sides of penitentiary farm No. 1, the county authorities have requested the United States to dedicate for that purpose a strip of land 5 feet in width, beginning on the easterly line of Sawtell Avenue and extending, of that width, along the southerly and southwesterly sides of McDonough Road to the westerly line of Forrest Road.

The superintendent of prisons and the warden of the penitentiary are of the opinion that to widen McDonough Road as aforesaid will result not only in better facilities of egress and ingress but will otherwise improve the Government's property, and they recommend that the dedication be made.

I see no objection to the proposed improvement, but am of opinion that the conveyance should be made only after the requisite authority has been secured from Congress.

I have therefore prepared the inclosed bill, with certain provisions and restrictions which I think adequate and proper, and am transmitting the same with the request that it have consideration by your committee with a view to its passage.

Respectfully,
H. M. DAUGHERTY,
Attorney General.

The following statement of Hon. Clint W. Hager, Federal district attorney of the northern district of Georgia, setting forth the need for immediate action on this bill, is made a part of this report:

"McDonough Road, which is the street running along the front of the penitentiary, is at the present time completely torn up and impassable along the entire front of the penitentiary property, rendering it impossible to either get in or out of the penitentiary with wagons or trucks. McDonough Road is a very narrow street and is entirely inadequate for the traffic since the Atlanta Penitentiary was located on it. The county commissioners of Fulton County have agreed to widen McDonough Road and have secured donations of land from the abutting property owners, so that the street may be widened approximately 10 feet. The county commissioners propose to widen the street along the penitentiary without cost to the Government provided an act of Congress is passed authorizing the Attorney General to convey a strip of land 5 feet in width to Fulton County for the purposes above set forth. It is imperative that quick action be taken in this matter by reason of the fact that if the work is delayed a few weeks and cold weather sets in, it will be impossible to make concrete, and in its present condition the penitentiary is isolated, with no means of ingress or egress. The commissioners are now completing the work on either side of the penitentiary property, and if they finish without completing the road in front of the penitentiary it will be a great loss to the Government."

McDonough Road extends along the penitentiary property a distance of 6,600 feet, and unless this bill is passed at once the road will be turned over to the county with this gap in it, and it will be necessary for the Government to do the work at its own expense.

Your committee recommends immediate and favorable action.

HOMESTEAD PRIVILEGES TO AMERICANS SERVING IN ALLIED ARMIES.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I also report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 180) extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War, and I submit a report (No. 953) thereon.

I am advised, Mr. President, by the Secretary of the Interior that there are a number of cases pending now before the department, and he would like, if possible, to have the House joint resolution passed so that those cases may be acted upon and settled. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I understood that some time ago—immediately after the close of the war, I think it was, and during the last administration—there was a law passed giving priority in homestead entries to veterans of the World War. Is not that so?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, why is it necessary to enlarge that right by this joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. The joint resolution which I have reported merely affects American citizens who served during the war with the armies of our allies. All of the boys who served in the Army of the United States have that privilege, and the joint resolution simply extends it to American citizens who fought in the armies of the allies.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For instance, American boys who went into the Canadian army.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what the joint resolution is designed to cover.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall not object to the consideration of the joint resolution if it does not lead to further discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry, be, and the same are hereby, extended to apply to those citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War, and who were honorably discharged, upon their resumption of citizenship in the United States, provided the service with the allied armies shall be similar to the service with the Army of the United States for which recognition is granted in the act and resolution herein referred to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMOOT. In connection with the joint resolution, I ask that the report of the committee accompanying it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 953) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to whom was referred the bill (H. J. Res. 180) extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The purpose of this bill is fully explained in House Report No. 678, as follows:

[House Report No. 678. Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

CREDIT FOR MILITARY SERVICE DURING WORLD WAR.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany House Joint Resolution 180:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 180) extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, and of Public Resolution No. 29, having had the same under consideration, report the same back to the House with the following amendment and recommend that as amended the bill do pass:

Amend page 2, line 1, by inserting after the word "War" the words "and who were honorably discharged" and a comma.

In recommending the passage of the measure the committee recites that before the United States became involved in the World War numerous American young men volunteered for service in the armies of France, Great Britain, notably Canada, and possibly other of the allied nations. Again, after the United States had entered the World War, other Americans who could not meet the high physical standards required for entrance into the service of the United States entered the armies of the Allies.

These soldiers gave service in the common cause in which the United States was engaged, similar to the service rendered by the American soldiers.

Following the World War, by act of Congress, citizenship was restored to all such Americans who had forfeited their citizenship by taking the oath of allegiance to a foreign country.

There seems to be every reason why the provisions of the acts referred to in this bill, applicable to those who were in the naval and military forces of the United States during the World War, should apply equally to those other citizens of the United States who saw service with the armies of the Allies and whose citizenship has been restored to them.

There is herein attached letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior to Hon. N. J. SINNOTT, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, indorsing the resolution.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 9, 1921.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: I have your request of July 29, 1921, for report on House Joint Resolution 180, which proposes to extend the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preference right of entry in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War.

It is believed that the legislation proposed is meritorious, and I therefore recommend that the resolution be enacted.

Respectfully,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, some time ago the Senate passed Senate bill 3275 increasing the rate of pension allowed to Civil War veterans and the widows of such veterans. That bill passed the House with certain amendments. A conference was ordered between the two Houses on the disagreeing votes thereon. As a member of the committee of conference, I desire at this time to submit the conference report and ask unanimous consent that it be taken up immediately for consideration.

Mr. President, we are now in that season of the year when good will and good cheer should prevail all over the land, and I feel that it would be a splendid expression of gratitude on the part of the people of this country to the veterans of the Civil War now to consummate and complete this proposed legislation so that it may be passed in time to permit the signature of the President and may become a law as a Christmas present to the children of Lincoln of 1861.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether the conference report has been made to the House and acted upon there?

Mr. BURSUM. It originated in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Who asked for the conference?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it should go to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the House granted the conference.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the report should be submitted to the House first if they granted the conference. We asked for a conference. In that case the other side granted it, and it goes to them first.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it goes to the House first.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to clear up this matter. He is advised that there are no papers here from the House, and, as he now understands, the conference report is not in a position to be acted upon by the Senate until some measure is received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURSUM. My understanding was that the Senate had asked for this conference.

Mr. SMOOT. But the House granted the conference. Therefore the report must go to the House first.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, it seems to me that of course the papers should properly go to the House that has not asked the conference, and there the papers should stay until the conferees report; but that is not the question involved. I understand that the papers are on the desk of the Senate; and if the original papers are on the desk of the Senate and the Senator from New Mexico got hold of them there is no reason why the Senate can not act on the matter. It does not make any difference how he got hold of them.

I know that a good many years ago, in reference to a tariff bill that I reported to the House in a past administration, somebody raised the question that the Senate was entitled to the papers; but I had them, and I moved the adoption of the report, and the bill went to the President. Of course, if there is any real objection to the pension bill, that may be another matter; but if there is not any objection to the pension bill the papers are here, and there is no question that the Senate can act on the matter if it wants to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BURSUM. The motion is to agree to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the original bill as it passed is among the papers, then the statement of the Senator from Alabama is correct; but if the original bill as it passed Congress is not in those papers we have no right to it at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the Senator thoroughly; but the Senator from New Mexico said that the original papers were on the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair endeavored to state that the papers were not in the Senate, nor has the Senate been notified of any action on the part of the House. The original bill is not in the Senate and not on the desk.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That makes a different state of the case. The Senator from New Mexico stated that he had the original papers.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the rural credits committee of the Conference of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations, held in Washington last week. There were present at that conference representatives of about 1,000,000 members of cooperative marketing associations, and this report embodies their ideas as to rural credits legislation. It is very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

REPORT OF THE RURAL CREDITS COMMITTEE ADOPTED BY THE CONFERENCE OF NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARMERS' COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS IN WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 15, 1922.

The committee on rural credits of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations has made a survey of the subject of farmers' credits and the legislation proposed on such rural credits.

Your committee recommends as follows:

1. That this national council announces as a general policy that the primary reliance of the farmer for credits for production or for marketing should be upon the local banker, and that under normal conditions the local banker is likely to meet the greater part of such needs.

2. That the Federal reserve system should be modified so as to meet the special requirements of farm credits and to permit the financing of farmers and farmers' cooperative marketing associations conveniently and efficiently through normal banking channels.

That such modification involves primarily the extension of the maturity of agricultural paper to a maximum limit of nine months, with the fixing of cooperative marketing for loans on such agricultural paper to any one cooperative marketing association to be fixed as 50 per cent of the capital and surplus of banks, members of the Federal reserve system, subject to the State laws wherever applicable; and that encouragement and inducement be made to have more State banks exercise the privilege of membership in the Federal reserve system.

3. That the maximum basis of loans from farm loan banks be raised from $10,000 to $25,000.

4. That adequate opportunity be presented for the creation of agricultural credit corporations with sufficient minimum capital to purchase or discount ordinary agricultural paper, with a maximum maturity paper of nine months and live-stock paper with a maturity of not more than three years; with rediscount corporations adequately capitalized to purchase such paper from agricultural credit corporations, with the privilege of rediscounting any such paper with its indorsement, through Federal reserve system.

5. That a farm credits department in the Federal land banks be set up in each of the land banks, with a capital of $5,000,000, making a total of $60,000,000 capitalized, against which credits may be issued to the extent of approximately $600,000,000; and that these farm credits departments of the Federal farm banks be authorized to discount or purchase agricultural paper in a broad sense and to make loans or advance directly to cooperative marketing associations and agricultural cooperative credit organizations.

6. That the right of the Federal land banks to purchase production credits shall be limited to production credits where the note of the individual is indorsed by the cooperative credit association or is secured by a chattel mortgage on implements or animals, or both, and indorsed by the local banks, or where the note or draft itself is made by a cooperative credit association of producers; and that any Federal land bank may exercise any of the powers herein granted in any section or district of the United States.

We further recommend that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House and Senate be requested to consider these suggestions and to combine them if possible into a rural credits act, to be introduced in such way as the committee may deem advisable.

The council announces as its policy that the cooperative marketing associations do not ask anything from the Federal Government except that legislation be enacted to permit farmers and farmers' organizations to have the same access to the Federal credits system, adapted to its needs, that all industries now possess, and to make provision for unforeseen emergencies by setting up a last reserve in such a manner as is above suggested in the farm credits department of the farm land banks.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, a few days ago my friend, the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], took occasion to point out in the Senate what to him appeared to be injustices in the Ford proposal, in part to purchase and in part to lease Muscle Shoals, and he made some observations with regard to the attitude of those who differed with him on the proposal he has offered to the Senate and the country. To allow these charges to go unanswered, and as sponsor for the Ford offer, leaves me before the country, to say the least, in a compromising position. I, therefore, Mr. President, propose to present some phases of the other side of this great picture in which the large majority of our people are deeply interested.

Mr. President, there is apparently a great division of opinion as to the proper disposition of the great power project at Muscle Shoals, and in this division of opinion and the resultant inaction I fear that we are faced with the serious possibility of the plant either being scrapped or left in an uncompleted and haphazard manner as a serious liability of the Government. In this divergence of views there are some very meritorious ideas that are worthy of profound analysis, and such an analysis can be made without the slightest reflection upon the motives of anyone. There is honesty and integrity that has stood the test of years, and such honesty and integrity as has been most intelligent in most of its endeavors; but, Mr. President, honesty and integrity is not always infallible in its application. Human mental processes will not always allow us to reach the same conclusion, even with the same statement of facts, because individual logic is different. And when there is a different understanding as to fundamental facts, it is quite reasonable to expect that there will be different conclusions as to the proper action to take.

There can be but little doubt, Mr. President, that if it had not been for the offer of Henry Ford, Muscle Shoals would be on its way to the scrap heap to-day; indeed, it would probably already have been there—save such portions as were desired by particular interests, and which they would probably have acquired for a song. Furthermore, it is doubtful if very much would have been said about the scrapping, but by common consent it would have been agreed that it was a great failure and a great blunder—chargeable to war cost—and it would have made its way to destruction, just as have so many other things that have come in the pathway of special privilege.

There is another thing, Mr. President, that we must bear in mind, and that is Mr. Ford was requested to make a bid for this property, and he did so upon the invitation of the Government. He has made his offer and has simply requested that we accept it or reject it; if there has been pro-Ford-offer propaganda, it has sprung from the American people, who know what they want in the way of the disposition of this plant. The burden is not upon Henry Ford to show that his proposition is the best thing for the country, but the burden is upon the Ford opponents to produce a better proposition. Mr. Ford's attitude is above reproach. He complied with the request of his Government and made an offer; that offer certainly resulted in saving Muscle Shoals from the scrap heap. Suddenly other men decided there was some value to the proposition; now Mr. Ford's position is simply "accept my offer or reject it," the responsibility is upon us. It would come with very poor grace for anyone to rise upon this floor and propagate the insinuation that Henry Ford is trying to graft something from the Government. I hope and believe that it will not be done.

FACTS VERSUS FICTION.

Mr. President, since the burden must be upon the opponents of the Ford offer to produce a better proposition, I first wish to direct attention to what is believed by some to be a solution of the problem, before I specifically answer some of the objections that have been made to the Ford offer.

My good friend, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], is advocating a proposition about which he said (page 178, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 7, 1922), "If the Senator will devote his energies and his eloquence to getting the Ford people to support the bill I have tried to get through, we will help the Alabama farmer ten thousand times more than the Ford proposition, if carried out, would help him. We will furnish him fertilizer at a price which does not include even an 8 per cent profit." I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the Senator believes every word of what he has said, and that his faith in his proposition is very much larger than the size of a mustard seed, but his belief is not conclusive evidence that he is right in his conclusions. He might have faith sufficient to remove mountains and still be wrong in his ideas as to the disposition of Muscle Shoals. Should, under his plan, the manufacture of fertilizer be successful and should that fertilizer be sold to the farmer at cost, Henry Ford might, even then—at a profit of 8 per cent—produce it and sell it to the farmer very much cheaper. There is no argument in that part of his statement. As to his statement that his proposition "will help the Alabama farmer ten thousand times more than the Ford proposition," I think I will be able to show in pointing out some features of his bill that he has tremendously overestimated the possibilities of farmer aid provided for in this proposed measure. In fact, I seriously doubt if the Senator really understands the possibilities, yea, the probabilities, of his bill.

In studying it I think I understand just what the Senator would like to accomplish; but his bill strikes me as being only a preamble to something more gigantic and, when beyond his control, something that would probably prove frightful in its consequences. What the Senator would like to accomplish and what his bill proposes are two separate and distinct things. The Senator believes that under his bill there will be a great development at Muscle Shoals, great reservoir dams built, vast endeavors in research. It is a glorious picture that he paints when he waxes eloquent on this subject, and he waxes eloquent because he believes that his bill will accomplish all these things. But, Mr. President, I make this expression of belief: If Senate bill 3420, as introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, should be passed and become a law, just the opposite of all these desirable things enumerated by the Senator would happen. If there was any special interest that wanted Muscle Shoals, such as the Alabama Power Co., for instance, I do not see how they could draw a more subtle measure, such as would stand a chance of being slipped by the people of this country, than the Norris bill. I am sure that the Senator from Nebraska has never taken this viewpoint of the matter, but I am going to try to point out to the Senate some of the provisions of his bill.

WHAT THE NORRIS BILL PROPOSES.

The caption of the bill is—

To provide for the manufacture of explosives for the use of the Army and Navy, to provide for the manufacture of fertilizer for agricultural purposes, to incorporate the Federal Chemical Corporation, and for other purposes.

The first section of the bill clearly authorizes and directs the Secretary of War "to cause surveys to be made" above the dams on the Tennessee River and its tributaries "for the purpose of locating storage reservoirs." However, there is no appropriation provided for this work, and there must be further legislation if the surveys are made. The section further provides—if a suitable site or sites can be found upon such investigation where practical storage reservoirs can be obtained at reasonable cost, the Secretary is directed to take the necessary steps to secure such sites and to build the necessary dams for the impounding of water therein.

The defect in this is that the decision is left entirely with the Secretary of War as to whether or not suitable sites are found, and if they "can be obtained at reasonable cost." Therefore, it is left to the Secretary of War to decide whether or not there are suitable sites and if the cost at which they can be obtained is reasonable. What more authority could he desire, should he want to delay action, than to have such decisions left entirely within his power? Does anyone suppose that under these times of "normalcy" that the enormous business interests of this country that are in conflict with Muscle Shoals development would be challenged and antagonized by the selection of sites and the development of dams for the purpose of the Government going into competition with large private capital? Would the present administration go contrary in this matter to its avowed policy of taking the Government out of business? Does the Senator contemplate a delay of at least two years in this matter until the present administration passes into history and then take his chances with another administration that would probably prove just as positive in the same kind of policy? In addition to that, suppose the Secretary of War should select such sites, and suppose he should find that he could purchase such sites at "reasonable cost," then before he can buy them he will have to come to Congress for an appropriation. Indeed, this is splendid machinery to create all the delay that any interest who might desire the scrapping of Muscle Shoals could desire. In so far as this bill providing a means that will result in the development of the upper reaches of the Tennessee River and its tributaries and establishing these desirable reservoirs is concerned, we might as well discard the idea as merely a pleasant pipe dream.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LADD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator, if the proposition that this survey be made by the War Department is not proper, if it ought to be done in some other way, whether he would make a suggestion as to where the power should be placed rather than in the Secretary of War? Let me state to the Senator that I put it in the hands of the Secretary of War because the Secretary of War has the men, and the War Department has always been the instrumentality by which such surveys have been made. I would be very glad indeed if the Senator could suggest a better place to put it. I would be glad, if the bill was before us, to accept an amendment from the Senator from North Dakota or any other Senator lodging the power in better hands. Would the Senator be willing to put it in the hands of the corporation which it is proposed to set up?

Mr. LADD. No; I will perhaps show, as I go on further, the reason why I would not be willing to put it in the hands of the corporation.

Mr. NORRIS. I am referring to the survey. Assuming that we pass the bill, and the corporation provided for in the bill is set up, would the Senator rather put the power in the hands of the corporation than in the hands of the Secretary of War?

Mr. LADD. No; but I would want some control over it.

Mr. NORRIS. Where would the Senator put it? The Senator will admit, will he not, that this survey and the building of these reservoirs on the Tennessee for storage purposes are absolutely necessary if we are to get the maximum amount of electrical energy out of the Tennessee River?

Mr. LADD. There is no question there. What I maintain is that the machinery is so cumbersome, the time required would be so long, the delays would be just what the opposition would desire in order to prevent action. Before the survey can be made there must be appropriations, and after the survey is made there must then be further appropriations and money raised from some source with which to purchase those sites.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must admit that provision of the machinery for bringing about the building of the storage reservoirs, if they are to be built, is just as important as the completion, for instance, of Dam No. 2 or Dam No. 3, particularly Dam No. 2. They could go on just the same, and it would necessarily have to be delayed long enough to make the surveys. If there is any other way to do it more quickly I want to say to the Senator that I would be delighted to have him suggest it and I would be glad to adopt it.

Mr. LADD. I think, if the Senator will allow me to go on, I will point out some of those things before I am through.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. LADD. It does not require very much experience in the National Legislature to know that there is frequently a difference of opinion between those who recommend appropriations and the Congress that grants such appropriations. Considering the various interests concerned about what happens to Muscle Shoals, and the difficulty that this Congress has had with that very proposition during the past two years, it is not an unreasonable conjecture that young men would blossom into the grave during the process of its long-drawn-out development, should it be developed by the Government and for the Government at all.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. LADD. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Either now, or at some other time in the course of his remarks, I wish the Senator would point out to the Senate and to the country where in the Ford proposal there is any proposition to survey the river and to build storage reservoirs, which everybody admits are necessary to the full and maximum enjoyment of the water power there. Has the Ford proposition in it anywhere anything which would bind the Ford corporation to do anything of that kind, or have they even suggested such a contingency?

Mr. LADD. I will deal with those subjects somewhat later.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. LADD. In so far as the bill relates to the development of such reservoirs, it sounds like only a preamble to what might be desired.

FEDERAL CHEMICAL CORPORATION.

In sections 4 and 5 are found provisions for the chartering of "The Federal Chemical Corporation," and all of the powers of this so-called corporation are set forth. These two sections are very important, Mr. President. They are as follows:

SEC. 4. That there is hereby incorporated and created a corporation by the name, style, and title of "The Federal Chemical Corporation" (hereinafter referred to as the corporation). Said corporation shall have perpetual succession and shall have power—

(1) To adopt, use, and alter a corporate seal;

(2) To sue and be sued, and to complain and to defend in any court of law and equity within the United States;

(3) To make and enforce such contracts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act;

(4) To appoint and fix the compensation of such employees, attorneys, and agents as are necessary for the transaction of the business of the corporation, to define their duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalties thereof; but in no case shall any such employee receive a salary in excess of $12,000 per annum;

(5) To prescribe, amend, and repeal by-laws not inconsistent with this act for the conduct of its business; and

(6) To exercise all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred upon it by this act and such additional powers as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That the business of said corporation shall be transacted by a board of directors (hereinafter called the board), consisting of three persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Members of said board shall hold their offices during good behavior and shall receive a salary of $7,500 per year, payable monthly: Provided, That any member of said board may be removed from office at any time by a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate. No member of said board shall during his continuance in office be engaged in any other business, but shall give his entire time to the business of said corporation. Said board shall select one of its members as president. It shall select a treasurer and as many assistant treasurers as it deems proper, and such treasurer and assistant treasurers may be corporations or banking institutions and shall give such security for the safe-keeping of the moneys of said corporation as the board may require. In the appointment of officials and the selection of employees for said corporation and in the promotion of any such employees or officials no political test or qualifications shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency. The board shall give publicity to any request, coming from any source, asking for any favor in behalf of any person or the promotion of any employee. Any member of said board who permits the use of political or partisan influence in the selection of any employee, or in the promotion of any such employee of said corporation, or who gives any consideration to political considerations in the official action of said board, or who, knowing that such political influence has been or is attempted, does not give publicity to the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned not to exceed six months, or both such fine and imprisonment, and the conviction of any member of said board of the offense herein defined shall have the effect of removing such member from office.

Mr. President, I want to observe right here that the attempt to build up a merchant marine by means of a private corporation under governmental control was practically the same character of machinery as that proposed in this bill. That attempt, although started in good faith, resulted in failure, waste, extravagance, and the greatest scandals in the history of our Government. Even now we are faced with the colossal task of scrapping, junking, subsidizing, and a general untangling of business mismanagement that is so bad as to stagger the imagination and so rotten that it almost becomes necessary for us to put on gas masks as we approach the task. We have no assurance that we will not be faced with a very much greater problem in untangling the complications that will certainly result should Senate bill 3420 become a law.

Mr. NORRIS. In drawing the provisions which the Senator has just read, I was moved by a desire to make this corporation entirely independent of partisan or political control, as much as human ingenuity could make it so. Of course, I understand that the Senator is opposed to the Government operating anything. He is opposed to the Government operating anything either through the instrumentality of a corporation or otherwise, and I concede he has a right to that opinion; but I would like to ask the Senator again if he can point out any amendment which would improve the measure or avoid the dangers he says exist, which I do not believe exist. I would be glad to have him do it. I do not claim to have the last word in the construction of an act providing for a corporation. I welcome any criticism tending to improve it, and even though the Senator is opposed to Government operation of anything, I wish he would take the viewpoint of one who believes that there are some things the Government ought to do and, taking that viewpoint, assist to the extent of his great ability in suggesting amendments which would avoid the pitfalls he says are certain to overtake the corporation.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, if the Norris bill comes before the Senate I shall offer some amendments and suggestions, in the first place; in the second place, I want to correct the statement of the Senator that I am opposed to Government operation and ownership. Just the opposite to that; I am in favor of Government ownership and operation of certain industries, and especially those which may be considered as public utilities, but I am not in favor of such operation unless I am convinced that it is going to be for the best interests of all the people of the country.

Mr. NORRIS. I assumed from other things he has said about this proposition that the Senator was opposed to Government operation, because the bill I have reported, the one setting up this corporation, provides one method of Government operation. I am not criticizing the Senator because he is opposed to it. He has a perfect right to be opposed to the Government operation at Muscle Shoals, of course, and to be in favor of Government operation of public utilities. But does not the Senator favor Government control of any kind of the use of electricity which is generated from our navigable streams?

Mr. LADD. I certainly am, and if the Senator will wait until I am through I think he will find that I pointed out some of the reasons.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is in favor of that, I would like to have him explain why he is favorable to the Ford offer, which proposes that the Government shall turn over to the Ford corporation, without any regulation, all of the surplus energy which will be generated at Muscle Shoals.

Mr. LADD. I can not agree with the Senator that such is done; but I prefer to discuss the matter along this line, and take up those other matters on another occasion.

WHICH, A COMMISSION OR A CORPORATION?

Let us notice for a moment the character of this proposed corporation.

First, does this bill actually create a corporation? There is some doubt in my mind as to whether this is a corporation or is simply a commission. We will take it for granted, however, that it is a corporation. If it is, there is no limit upon its capital, and should it become necessary to have capital in order to begin its operations, then that capital must be obtained by appropriation of Congress or the corporation must rely upon its own resources in order to obtain money. If capital is to be supplied by an appropriation of Congress, then there is a still further delay, and there is no assurance to the American people as to what amounts will be required. Indeed, it is entirely probable that each succeeding Congress will be besieged with requests for additional appropriations. It is safe to assume that there can be no activity in the way of manufacturing fertilizer unless the corporation is at least supplied with sufficient capital for operating expenses. But suppose the corporation should not wait upon Congress for an appropriation, but depends entirely upon its own resources, and the directors should decide that it was necessary to borrow money for operating expenses. Under paragraph (3) of section 4 the corporation has the power "to make and enforce such contracts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act." Under this authority the corporation could borrow money and secure it by mortgage upon any property that was in its possession, and the first step would be made toward turning it over to private control, or else pave the way for burdensome appropriations in order for Congress to save the situation.

ALABAMA POWER CO. AND GORGAS.

It may be contended that funds would be provided by that portion of section 6 which reads, "Said corporation is authorized to negotiate with the Alabama Power Co. for the purpose of settling the difficulties existing between the Government of the United States and the said power company by virtue of the joint ownership of the power plant at Gorgas, Ala.; and it is authorized to sell the interest of the Government of the United States in said plant to the said Alabama Power Co., and to use the money received therefor in the operation of its business as hereinbefore described." But there is nothing in the act which prescribes just what that settlement would be, and the red tape of negotiation for settlement might be strung out over a period of years, most especially should the Alabama Power Co. decide that it would be desirable to delay and hamper the corporation as long as possible. And I might observe in this connection, Mr. President, that it is doubtful if the Alabama Power Co. itself could have drawn a provision that would have been more pleasing to them than this provision which assures them the ownership of the Gorgas plant. It makes it impossible for the directors to dispose of the interest of the Government to anyone else, and serves notice to the Alabama Power Co. that they will have no competition but can negotiate as long as they please and finally, no doubt, settle on their own terms; and that would be most especially true should the corporation experience some period wherein it was short of funds and would be willing to make considerable sacrifice in order to obtain money.

Mr. President, this bill either provides for a private corporation or a simple commission or it provides nothing. If it is a private corporation—and it must be, since it is to be granted a legal entity and the right to sue and be sued, and to adopt, use, and alter a corporate seal, make and enforce contracts, and the other rights of a corporation—then there are some very serious aspects of its powers that should be carefully considered.

In the first place, "said corporation shall have perpetual succession." The bill reserves to Congress no rights to alter, amend, or repeal, and once it is organized and contractual relations established, Congress can not in any way alter or change the law or the powers granted under it, because all the powers granted in the act become part of the contracts entered into by it. On the other hand, if it is not such a private corporation, and Congress has the right to change the law, then the whole act is nothing but a scrap of paper, because any succeeding Congress may change it. It is well established that no Congress has the power to bind any succeeding Congress.

GOVERNMENT WITHOUT CONTROL.

The fact that the corporation is supposed to be controlled by the Government does not affect the legal position of the corporation. This situation again parallels the situation in the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The Supreme Court held (October term, 1921) in the case of Sloan Shipyards Corporation et al., appellants, v. United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and the United States of America, that—

The United States took all the stock, but that did not affect the legal position of the company.

Indeed, there is another point to consider: This corporation being a private corporation, could it compete with other concerns to the extent that it was injurious to their business, and would it not be brought under the restrictions of the Sherman Act, the Federal Trade Commission acts, and other regulatory measures? If so, then all of the wonderful possibilities that the Senator claims for it as an aid to the farmer begin to fade into insignificance. Indeed, it can not be a private corporation for one purpose and at the same time be a Government commission for another purpose. It must be one or the other; it can not blow hot and cold.

IS IT A PRIVATE CORPORATION?

This corporation being a private corporation can very easily get around the provision that attempts to limit the salary of any employee to $12,000 per annum. Congress may provide that in its charter, but since it is a private corporation and the employees are not under the direction of Congress, there is nothing to prevent the payment of fees and commissions in addition to the salary. Of course, if the salaries were to be paid by appropriations of Congress, then Congress could direct the expenditure of its appropriation. But it is contemplated that this corporation will receive great funds from sources other than Congress.

Now, let us consider for a moment another grave provision in this bill, and that is that the business of the corporation—shall be transacted by a board of directors consisting of three persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Members of said board shall hold their office during good behavior and shall receive a salary of $7,500 per year, payable monthly: Provided, That any member of said board may be removed from office at any time by a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

What the Senator has attempted to do here may be commendable, but he has actually done nothing other than to provide that the President shall appoint these directors by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and that they shall hold their office during good behavior. Notwithstanding the fact that the Senator attempts to reserve to Congress the right to remove these directors by a concurrent resolution, he has not done so. The President has the right of appointment here and he alone will be the judge of "good behavior," and if the President decides that they shall come out or stay in his word alone is final. The only way that Congress can remove one of them is by the constitutional method of impeachment or by abolishing the office, and since the bill does not reserve the right to alter, amend, or appeal, then Congress can not abolish the job. This whole question has been thoroughly thrashed out and settled. The question arose during the first administration of President Cleveland and the whole matter is set forth at length in Senate Report No. 135 of the Forty-ninth Congress, first session. So the Senator simply places these three directors in the same category of all other presidential appointees, and, notwithstanding the fact that he has provided a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, for the use of political influence in the selecting of officers and employees of the corporation, yet these directors will not come within that provision, and they will be subject to the pleasure of each succeeding administration.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LADD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contend that a new President coming could remove one of those directors?

Mr. LADD. He alone has the authority.

Mr. NORRIS. He would not have authority to remove them any more than he has authority to remove an appointee of the Supreme Court. Does the Senator contend that the President, for instance, President Harding, could remove a member of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. LADD. I am not referring to that; I am referring to what took place under the Cleveland administration and a similar power under the bill here.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, the Senator must be in error about it. The President would not have any authority to remove one of those men, and the only reason the Senator gives why he would have the authority is because he has the appointing power. He would not have any more authority to remove one of them than he would have to remove a member of the Federal Trade Commission. Does the Senator seriously contend that by concurrent resolution the proposed directors could not be removed?

Mr. LADD. I say there is some grave doubt about it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think there is a particle of doubt, but if there is, and if the appointment plan is not right, if the Senator has a better way, I would be very glad to follow it. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill never even came before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry so an opportunity was had for anybody to suggest an amendment. The Senator himself was one of the members, and the other Ford supporters helped him to prevent even the consideration of those propositions by the committee and voted to prevent it from having any opportunity to amend it or even to discuss it. I would like to have the Senator assist us in a constructive way. If there is something wrong with it, or if there is anything that can be offered to improve it—and I have no doubt the Senator could indicate many places where it ought to be improved—I would go with him whole-heartedly and endeavor to improve it in every respect.

Mr. LADD. That is just why I am trying to point out at this time some of the defects, as I consider them, in the bill. It was only because the Senator made the remark he did a few days ago in the course of his observations that I am led to make the statement I am now making.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, it seems to me, is inconsistent in pointing them out now when he and the other Ford men prevented the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from doing just what I say I would like to have done by constructive statesmen like the Senator—to suggest amendments and improve the measure.

Mr. LADD. And those who are opposed to the Ford offer prevented action also on the other side equally well.

Mr. NORRIS. What action?

Mr. LADD. Favorable action for consideration of the Ford offer.

Mr. NORRIS. The majority of the committee was against accepting the Ford proposition. The majority of the committee, composed of all the Ford men and a few members of the committee who were probably opposed to either proposition, went with the Senator and the other Ford men and prevented the improvement of the bill that ought to be made if the Senator's criticism is right.

POLITICAL MAKESHIFTS.

Mr. LADD. But even in the question he raises about the use of political influence, what is to be the definition of "political or partisan influence"? Who is to determine these things? Is it to be done by a court and jury? Mr. President, the whole idea is simply visionary. We will never accomplish anything in the way of reform by such makeshift measures.

May I direct the attention of the Senate to this thought: Since these directors are to come in the class of other political presidential appointees, who for one moment doubts that they will be subjected to the same pressure of the same old interests? Mr. President, this bill would simply result in a financial juggernaut, a collossus that would crush the whole project. Instead of proving a salvation to the farmer it would prove a curse. I know that the Senator has conscientiously given a great deal of time and thought to this subject, and that there is no man in the Senate who has the interests of the people more at heart, but he has evidently taken some very bad advice in this matter.

WOULD PROTECT BIG BUSINESS.

To this private corporation, with this loose organization, with practically no governmental regulation, is to be granted all of these great properties and without consideration. Mr. President, if there were designing big interests who wanted to "trick" the American people out of all this property, they could not desire a better measure than this bill to accomplish their purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator tell just how the big interests would get it? How would they get it away from this corporation?

Mr. LADD. I shall have to object to further interruption at this time and must confine myself to a full discussion of the matter in my own way.

To accept this means of settling the Muscle Shoals matter means to accept a proposition that will either terminate in scrapping the entire project, or eventually turning it over to some special interests for practically nothing. Under this arrangement, Mr. President, like the Shipping Board, it will be made to show losses if it is actually making money. It will soon be held up to the American people as a dismal failure, a white albatross around our necks, a thing to be gotten rid of in some manner—to be "wished" off on some private parties if they are willing to assume the burdens. The farmer's dream of cheap fertilizer will vaporize into the heavens. It is not a pleasant thing to say it, but it is a fact that we must face.

That the administration does not indorse Government ownership or operation of public utilities is clearly evident from statements set forth in President Harding's address before Congress when he said, speaking of the railroads:

> Government operation does not afford the cure. It was Government operation which brought us to the very state of things against which we now rebel, and we are still liquidating the costs of that supreme folly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall not interrupt the Senator if he meant what he said awhile ago that he did not want to be interrupted further. Of course, the Senator has a right to object to interruption, and without complaint I shall accept his suggestion. If he objects I shall not ask any questions, but I would like to ask on the proposition he has just mentioned——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LADD. I yield for a question only.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator agree with the President of the United States on what he has just read from the President's message?

Mr. LADD. I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. Then on the Muscle Shoals proposition the Senator does agree with the President, who is opposed to my bill, as is the Senator. Is that true?

Mr. LADD. That is not entirely true.

Mr. NORRIS. How true is it? How much truth is there in it? The President has said that he is opposed to my bill, and I think he is, and the Senator from North Dakota is opposed to it. Does the Senator agree with the President?

Mr. LADD. As I shall state further on in my remarks, when there is presented a bill providing Government ownership or otherwise that is more favorable to the people, in my judgment, than the Ford offer, I shall drop the Ford offer and take up the new proposition within 20 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would prepare such a bill. I would like to go with him on it, or modify mine so it will meet that contingency.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, if one but studies governmental operation and control of our railroads, of the magnificent fleet of ships owned by the United States, and other activities, one can not escape being convinced that there is no intention on the part of certain great interests in permitting Government ownership to succeed even in handling or operating public utilities in the interest of all the people, but it may be done for the benefit of certain groups. For New York to build a great State-owned elevator to handle grain, to promote foreign export, to insure a needed food supply for New York City, and for the special benefit of the middlemen and speculators is lauded as good business and a great achievement. That there should be built a great grain elevator and magnificent cotton warehouses by Louisiana to promote foreign export through New Orleans by the middlemen and speculators is again acclaimed as a great achievement and proper use of governmental funds, but when the producers of my own State propose to erect an elevator to be used for the benefit of the producers in that great basic industry, agriculture, now prostrate because of unfair discrimination on the part of the Government, the manipulation of middlemen and grain speculators with protection of a four to five decision by courts to overthrow the lower courts, the building of such an elevator by the State is nation-wide acclaimed as paternalism, the putting of Government into business, as interfering with the sacred rights of privilege who already have gained control of the insurance companies, banks, mills, railroads, and mines, and who are now seeking to control the land, and by the policy adopted through credit control are fast accomplishing their purpose. Those who advocate such a policy for State warehouses are branded as socialists and dangerous citizens, and at times mob rule encouraged and protected by self-appointed representatives of special privilege which marks a forward step in evolution of government by and for the people. We are now at the fork of the road; which way shall we proceed?

The Senator from Nebraska stated in his speech in the Senate on December 7 (p. 175, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD) that—

> When the farmers of America understand the iniquity of this Ford proposition they will rise en masse and condemn it, and they will condemn any man who stands for it.

May I but caution the Senator, Mr. President, that Haman hung on his own gibbet.

The Senator seems to be afraid of corporations, yet he does not seem to realize that he proposes to create a private corporation that will have infinitely more of power than the one proposed by Mr. Ford, and infinitely less of control, supervision, and regulation than the one proposed by Mr. Ford. To my mind, Mr. President, the proposition does not harmonize in the least with the wonderful fight the Senator has made during a long period of years in behalf of the people.

Perhaps we are all prone to overlook faults in our own creation, but it seems to me that the Senator does not apply the same rules of analysis to his own proposition that he insists upon applying to the Ford proposal. Both are private corporations, and there is the distinction that the Ford corporation will have less of power and equally as much, if not more, of regulation under the general laws than will have the proposed Norris corporation. I know of nothing that will exempt the Ford corporation from the operation of the Federal Trade Commission acts, the Sherman Act, and other regulatory measures.

AMOUNT OF FERTILIZERS USED.

Mr. President, during the years from 1913 to 1920, inclusive, the average annual amount of fertilizer used in the United States was 6,543,435 tons (House hearings on Muscle Shoals propositions, p. 96).

I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to paragraph 15 of the Ford offer, which is as follows:

Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitutes one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed at nitrate plant No. 2, or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant, within a reasonable time, to its former capacity, and further agrees:

(a) To determine by research whether by means of electric furnace methods and industrial chemistry there may be produced, on a commercial scale, fertilizer compounds of higher grade and at lower prices than farmers and other users of commercial fertilizers have in the past been able to obtain, and to determine whether in a broad way the application of electricity and industrial chemistry may accomplish for the agricultural industry of the country what they have economically accomplished for other industries, and if so found and determined, to reasonably employ such improved methods.

(b) To maintain nitrate plant No. 2 in its present state of readiness, or its equivalent, for immediate operation in the manufacture of materials necessary in time of war for the production of explosives.

This language seems to be plain enough for anyone to understand that the company is bound "continuously throughout the lease period" to "manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand." We will discuss Mr. Ford's personal liability a little later on.

Also, "the annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen." There seems to be some contention over this point, Mr. President, and some of the opponents of the Ford offer seek consolation in the fact that his obligation to manufacture fertilizer is limited to that amount. There had to be a minimum, and the only reasonable minimum to take was the annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, which was the only plant that was running successfully. The fact that Mr. Ford has agreed upon a minimum does not mean at all that he will not produce more. But suppose that he should not produce but the minimum amount, what then?

FORD WOULD MAKE A FOURTH OF ALL FERTILIZERS USED.

How much of commercial fertilizer would that be? I quote from page 367 of the House hearings:

Mr. Ford agrees in his offer "to operate nitrate plant No. 2 at the approximate present annual capacity of its machinery and equipment in the production of nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers (said capacity being equal to approximately 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum) throughout the lease period," etc.

He therefore agrees to make nitrogen commercial fertilizers and other kinds of commercial fertilizers requiring for their nitrogen content an amount of nitrogen equal to the amount of nitrogen contained in 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate. Since ammonium nitrate is 35 per cent nitrogen, 110,000 tons of ammonium nitrate contains 38,500 tons of nitrogen. This is sufficient nitrogen to make—

Ammonium sulphate (24 per cent nitrogen), 160,000 tons; sodium (Chilean) nitrate (16 per cent nitrogen), 240,000 tons; 2-8-2 commercial fertilizer (2 per cent nitrogen), 1,925,000 tons.

It should not be understood, however, that Mr. Ford intends to make any of these, for it is his expressed purpose to produce a more concentrated plant food than any of the above forms.

If Mr. Ford should succeed in producing a more concentrated plant food, and can save the farmers in the weight of fertilizer shipments, he will cut down a great deal of the fertilizer expense in freight. It will be seen by these figures, however, that under the proposition to which Mr. Ford is obligated he will produce a minimum of nearly 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 commercial fertilizer, or about one-fourth of the amount required for American use. If the theory that the price obtained for our 10 per cent surplus in farm commodities governs the price we obtain for the entire crop means anything, then it should be equally true that the price Mr. Ford will make for his amount of fertilizers, equaling about 25 per cent of what we need for national consumption, should equally affect the price for all the fertilizer sold in the United States. If the theory holds good in one instance, it should hold good in the other.

REDUCE THE COST OF FERTILIZERS.

Even the opponents of the Ford offer seem to think that Mr. Ford will reduce the cost of fertilizer. It is not necessary to assume that he will cut the price in two. That would be very desirable, but suppose he should only reduce the price by $5 per ton, that alone would mean a saving to the American farmer of approximately $35,000,000 in a single year. It is granted that none of us expect Mr. Ford to live 100 years, but should he only live for 10 years more and should effect such a saving for the farmer each year—which estimate of saving is not at all unreasonable, but I think it rather conservative—then during those 10 years he would have saved for the American farmer an amount approximating $350,000,000—a sum far in excess of the cost to the Government of the entire project. Naturally, Mr. President, these great savings to the American farmer will be chipped off from the unreasonable profits that the Fertilizer Trust would realize out of the American farmer, and we may expect them to set up a great howl. To turn this proposition over to Henry Ford will be one of the greatest investments the Government could make in behalf of the American farmer.

GUARANTEE TO MAKE FERTILIZERS.

Mr. President, I think there can be no doubt that Mr. Ford has obligated himself to produce a complete fertilizer. The language of paragraph 15, which I have just quoted, clearly obligates him to manufacture it either "mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand." I do not see how he could employ any language more definite than that. Then his representative, Mr. Mayo, in his explanations of the Ford offer before the House committee (House hearings, p. 253) declared that he will make a complete fertilizer. I quote as follows:

Mr. MORIN. In the form produced at nitrate plant No. 2, it is not a fertilizer, but is a fertilizer compound; is not that true?
Mr. MAYO. He intends to produce a complete fertilizer.
Mr. MORIN. He intends to produce a complete fertilizer?
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.
Mr. MORIN. Would it be sold in this form to the farmer?
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.
Mr. MORIN. Could the farmer use it in this form without the addition of the other essential ingredients?
Mr. MAYO. He will be able to use the completed product as it will be furnished from that plant.
Mr. MORIN. As it will be furnished to him?
Mr. MAYO. Yes, sir.
Mr. MORIN. It will not be necessary, then, for the farmer to mix it with the other ingredients in order to market this product through the fertilizer mixers now existing?
Mr. MAYO. Not further than perhaps mixing it with dry earth or sand or something he has right at hand.

Mr. President, it may be contended that Mr. Ford is not obligated by this testimony. It does not make any essential difference whether he is or not. The essential fact is that he is obligated by the terms of his office to "manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand." This testimony, however, is important in that such intention is emphasized and clarified by his personal representative.

In order to produce mixed complete fertilizers, Mr. President, Mr. Ford would have to manufacture or purchase phosphoric acid and potash. Phosphates are abundant near by, and it has been pointed out by Mr. Mayo (p. 281, House hearings) that the necessary ingredients of fertilizer can be obtained within a radius of 100 miles of the plants; also, Mr. Theodore Swann, president of the Federal Phosphorus Co., of Birmingham, Ala., has shown (House hearings, pp. 432 to 434) how the phosphate rock can be smelted in an electric furnace and phosphoric acid collected for use in the fertilizer industry, and that such a method will reduce the present costs of fertilizer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator long enough to say that there are inexhaustible beds of phosphate rock in southern Tennessee within 100 miles of Muscle Shoals?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt there along the same line——

Mr. LADD. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not suppose it will be contended that there is not anybody except Mr. Ford who can utilize that great quantity of phosphate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; but my contention is that in view of his success in the past in handling machines, if he makes the same kind of success in manufacturing or getting together fertilizers that he made in automobiles he will make it a great success.

Mr. NORRIS. That ought to go to show, and I think does, that anybody—the corporation provided for in this bill that is being condemned, if it is set up, which goes a great deal further than that, or Mr. Ford, or anyone else—will be able to utilize that product, and ought to utilize it, and that it ought to cheapen fertilizer, no matter who does it.

Mr. McKELLAR. We hope so.

Mr. LADD. All of this can be done at Muscle Shoals; and Mr. Ford contemplates experiments along that line, as indicated by section (a) of paragraph 15 of his proposal.

PROFITS LIMITED, HOW?

Mr. President, paragraph 16 of the Ford offer provides the manner of appointment of a board of nine members for the purpose of seeing that fertilizer is manufactured at a profit not to exceed 8 per cent. Here are some of the powers of that board:

The said board shall determine what has been the cost of manufacture and sale of fertilizer products and the price which has been charged therefor, and, if necessary for the purpose of limiting the annual profit to 8 per cent as aforesaid, shall regulate the price at which said fertilizer may be sold by the company. For these purposes said board shall have access to the books and records of the company at any reasonable time. In order that such fertilizer products may be fairly distributed and economically purchased by farmers and other users thereof, the said board shall determine the equitable territorial distribution of the same and may, in its discretion, make reasonable regulation for the sale of all or a portion of such products by the company to farmers, their agencies, or organizations.

Mr. President, the Government could not devise any method that would better protect the farmers of the Nation in the fertilizer that is to be manufactured at Muscle Shoals than in this method. No man could make a fairer or better proposition than this. I do not see how it can be subjected to misinterpretation. Now, how are the members of this board appointed? The board is to consist of nine voting members and a representative of the Bureau of Markets, who will serve in an advisory capacity. Of these nine voting members only two are to be designated by the company, and the other seven are to be selected by the President of the United States from a list proposed by various representative farm organizations, and the President is to then send these seven selections in to the Senate for confirmation.

WHO WILL DUPLICATE FORD'S OFFER?

It is small wonder, Mr. President, that of all the big interests affected by Muscle Shoals none of them have made the Government a proposition that in any way approached the Ford offer. It was simply too staggering for them. Mr. Ford has offered the Government so much more than any of these big interests who are primarily affected are willing to offer that all they can do is to rear back on their haunches, spout their high-priced wisdom, and protest against the acceptance of the Ford offer. Ah, Mr. President, Henry Ford has been too much for them; he does not play the game according to Hoyle. They know he will succeed, and they know his success at Muscle Shoals means more for the farmer and less for them. All they can do is criticize. If his offer is not the best thing for the people of the United States, why do not some of them propose something that is better? As I have before stated, the burden is not upon Henry Ford to show that his offer is the best thing for the country, but the burden is upon the Ford opponents to produce something better. There has been only one proposition that I have heard anyone contend with any seriousness was better than the Ford offer, and that is the proposition embraced in the bill of the Senator from Nebraska. I think I have very effectually shown, Mr. President, that his measure falls far short—indeed, would be very dangerous.

HOW FERTILIZER MEN VIEW IT.

In fact, Mr. President, I was very much struck by the line of argument employed by the Senator from Nebraska against the Ford offer. It reminds me very much of the objections raised by Mr. Charles H. MacDowell, president of the National Fertilizer Association and president of Armour Fertilizer Works—one of the packer concerns—and other big connections, when he stated that the fertilizer manufacturers were opposed to the Ford offer. He said (House hearings, p. 523):

Mr. HULL. Why are they opposed to the Government accepting the Ford proposition?

Mr. MACDOWELL. * * * One reason is a public-policy reason, where they think it is questionable public policy to provide facilities and overfacilities at a water power for one man to monopolize for 100 years. They do not think that it is wise public policy to give one man the power to say to a community what kind of industry shall be located in that particular section of the country. * * *

Imagine such benevolent attitude in packer and fertilizer trust councils, if you can.

There has been much objection raised to the 100-year feature of the Ford proposition. One cry is that Henry Ford can not be expected to live for another 100 years, and that his liability ceases upon the formation of his proposed company. In the first place, Mr. President, contemplating the vast expenditure of money that Mr. Ford will have to make in order to carry out his plans of development, he would not be justified in making such a tremendous outlay of money unless he had a longer period than 50 years. Furthermore, Mr. Ford proposes to back up this proposition with his entire wealth. What further evidence of good faith could he give? The very fact that he does not expect to live for another 100 years is evidence of the fact that he is not in this proposition for the purpose of making money. If it offered such tremendous advantages for money-making, you may rest assured that the great capitalistic interests of this country would very soon be in the field with a better offer to the Government. Everyone knows that Henry Ford is in this matter for the purpose of helping the American people; that is why his opposition is so fierce and denunciatory.

FORD'S GUARANTY.

The Senator from Nebraska said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for December 7, 1922, p. 175) in referring to Henry Ford:

He is going to organize a corporation with a capital stock of $10,000,000. It is that corporation and not Henry Ford with which the Government deals. He binds himself, his heirs and executors, to what he has agreed to do in the contract, and that is to organize that corporation. When he organizes it with a capital of $10,000,000 he has complied with his proposition. He is not liable any further.

I must confess that I can not, however hard I try, construe the language in the Ford offer to mean what the Senator from Nebraska has interpreted it to be. In the first place, Mr. Ford is to organize a corporation "with a capital stock of $10,000,000 or more, of which at least $10,000,000 shall be paid in in cash," and it is to be controlled by himself. (Par. 1.)

In the next place, and this is what seems to most concern some of the Ford opponents, Mr. Ford has not "complied with his proposition" when he organizes the company. His liability does not cease there, but his estate—his heirs, representatives, and assigns—is obligated to the terms of his proposhi throughout the lease period. Let me direct the attention of the Senate to the language employed in paragraph 20 of the Ford proposal:

Upon acceptance the promises, undertakings, and obligations shall be binding upon the United States, and jointly and severally upon the undersigned, his heirs, representatives, and assigns, and the company, its successors and assigns.

I do not see how more definite language could be employed. This language plainly obligates the estate of Henry Ford just so long as the contract is in existence. It could not let him out upon the organization of the company, as asserted by the Senator from Nebraska; the language expressly states that Ford, his heirs, representatives, and assigns are "jointly and severally" bound. To whom else could the words "jointly and severally" apply? It could not apply to that period of time before the organization of the company, because the company will not have had any legal existence prior to its organization. There would have been no person, no legal entity, with whom he could have been "jointly and severally" obligated. No other construction can be placed upon the language than that Henry Ford and his estate is obligated to the terms of the contract just so long as the lease is in existence. Should Ford not be a man of sufficient business judgment to provide for this liability to the satisfaction of the Government in his will, then his whole estate will be held in abeyance until a proper adjustment is made; unless, of course, the Government should sleep on its rights. Mr. President, the Senator's argument falls.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROOKHART in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LADD. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has correctly quoted me when I gave my construction of the contract. I have so often heard the assertion made that the Senator has made now, and I have so often had other people criticize me for making the assertion that the Senator has just quoted, that I have looked into it as carefully as I am capable of examining any instrument; and while I have perfect respect for the Senator's opinion, I am just as confident that my construction is right as I am that I stand here on the floor of the Senate.

The proposition of Ford is, toward the end of it, which the Senator has read, that the signers are bound, and they bind their heirs and assigns. To what does it bind them? To comply with the conditions of the offer. In the offer the only thing that Henry Ford is bound by is that he will organize that corporation; and my contention is that when he has organized it in accordance with the offer he is relieved from personal liability.

I have never advocated that as any great objection to Ford's proposition. Personally, I do not think it is much of an objection. I would not expect Henry Ford to bind his heirs and assigns. If the Senator's construction is right, let me tell him what would follow as a matter of law. It would follow that if, after that contract was made and had been in force for 10 years, Henry Ford should die, his entire estate, every piece of real estate and property that he owns anywhere on earth, would be held in abeyance for 90 years, until the expiration of that entire contract. Do you suppose Ford wants to make that kind of a contract?

I will say frankly to the Senator that I do not think the Government is in danger of losing any money on this proposition, so that I think it is quite immaterial from my viewpoint; but

I do insist that any lawyer who will examine that contract and give the Senator an opinion will agree with me that when Henry Ford organizes the corporation with the paid-in capital required he has complied with the part of that contract that he is personally obligated to perform. Personally, as to what will happen down there, I do not care, because, according to my theory, he is going to get something and his corporation is going to get something that will be so big and so profitable that I do not expect that there will ever be any danger but that the Government could recover in case the contract was violated as it went over the 100 years, because the corporation would be sufficient security.

I will say to the Senator that I do not offer that now, and I never have offered it, as any particular objection to the plan. I have mentioned it because so many people have said, "Why, Ford has bound himself and his estate that he will do so-and-so with fertilizer," when he has not done anything of the kind, if my viewpoint is right. It is the corporation that has done it. He has complied fully with his contract when he has organized it, and if he is a sane man we could not expect him to and he certainly would not bind his estate over a period of a hundred years, much of which must elapse after he is dead, and prevent the settlement of his estate.

Mr. LADD. The Senator may be right or wrong. I am a layman. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that I do not offer it as anything of importance.

Mr. LADD. Two lawyers have told me that my interpretation is correct, but I will make no contention on that particular point.

Mr. President, under his proposal Mr. Ford will lease from the Government—

> Dam No. 2, its power house, and all of its hydroelectric and operating appurtenances, except the locks, together with all lands and buildings owned or to be acquired by the United States connected with or adjacent to either end of said dam. (Par. 3 of Ford offer.)

According to the letter of the Secretary of War transmitting the Henry Ford Muscle Shoals offer, dated February 1, 1922—

> The total expenditures on Dam No. 2 have been $16,251,038.14 (p. 3). This dam will be leased by Mr. Ford and will remain the property of the Government. Mr. Ford's company will "pay to the United States during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2, $35,000 annually in installments quarterly in advance for repairs, maintenance, and operation of Dam No. 2, its gates and locks." (Par. 4 of the Ford offer.)
> At all times during the period of the lease of Dam No. 2 the company will furnish to the United States, free of charge, to be delivered at any point on the lock grounds designated by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, electric power to an amount necessary for the operation of the locks, but not in excess of 200 horsepower. (Par. 5 of the Ford offer.)

The same conditions apply to Dam No. 3, and the company will pay $20,000 annually, in installments, quarterly in advance, for repairs, maintenance, and operation, and will furnish free power for the operation of the locks. (Pars. 7, 8, and 9 of the Ford offer.) This is yet to be constructed.

Paragraphs 11 and 12 of the Ford offer, which I will insert in the RECORD, set forth the property to be purchased by Mr. Ford. It is difficult to get any accurate estimate of the actual expenditure of the Government on these properties, as they are so interwoven with the properties that will be retained by the Government that it is hard to say with any certainty just what exact portion of the expense went for the property to be leased and just what exact portion went for the property to be purchased. The Secretary of War in his letter transmitting the Ford offer, dated February 1, 1922, gives quite a discussion of this matter.

It seems to be pretty generally admitted, however, that the relative cost of these properties is not fundamental. The other principles involved are the things about which the country is interested. The supreme question is, What is the best thing to do with this property? In what manner will the American people get the most out of it? To date there seems to have been nothing that offers in any way as much as does the Ford offer. I think I have illustrated how the savings Henry Ford could effect in fertilizer alone would soon more than pay for all of the property. These unreasonable profits in fertilizer, which are after all an indirect subsidy, have already cost the American farmer many times the cost of all the Muscle Shoals property.

As I have before stated, the only plant that has been successful in the manufacture of nitrates at Muscle Shoals has been plant No. 2, the cyanamid process. The Haber process at plant No. 1 was not successful, but it is entirely probable that by a reinstallation of machinery there plant No. 1 will be made ready for the manufacture of fertilizers also. However, Mr. Ford is not compelled to follow either the Haber or the cyanamid processes; he may have a method of his own and one that will prove superior to either of the others. We all acknowledge his genius along the lines of development. If he installs his own method and is enabled to produce cheaper than the present processes then there is that very great possibility that the cost of fertilizer will be cut in two, notwithstanding the fact that there are those who now hoot at the idea. Regardless of the hooting, however, Mr. Ford's representative, Mr. Mayo, expressed the belief that Mr. Ford could produce fertilizer so that "it will not cost more than half." (House hearings, p. 284.) He also stated that Mr. Ford hoped to start producing within a year. (House hearings, p. 257.) I think I have shown that under the Norris plan it is doubtful if there would be any real activity within two years, if then.

The Senator is apparently honestly concerned over the granting of anything that might be a monopoly to a private corporation. In looking over the record, Mr. President, I was astonished to find that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was one of the two Republicans that voted for the greatest private monopoly that has ever been granted by any legislative body—that was when he voted for the Federal reserve act, which gave to private banking institutions a complete monopoly over the issuance and control of the money and credits in this great Nation.

Mr. NORRIS. I plead guilty to that charge, and I am not sorry that I voted as I did. I plead guilty to it, and am willing to stay guilty. I did vote for the Federal reserve act, and I think it will result in good if it is administered properly. But the Senator is condemning me now, in his argument on the Ford question, because I voted for the Federal reserve act. I hope he will apply that argument to the Senator from Alabama, and the other Ford supporters in the Senate, and see where he comes out. If I am to be condemned on the Ford proposition because I voted for the Federal reserve act, just let the Senator apply that argument to his colleagues who were in the Senate at that time, and you are aching now to give Ford this great monopoly, and see where he comes out.

Mr. LADD. There has never before been seen such a monopoly. The farmers of this country know the curse that it has proved to them. Since the Federal reserve act was passed in 1914 the farm indebtedness in the United States has increased over 25 per cent, and the farmers are less able to pay off a debt to-day than they were in 1914. Oh, yes; the farmers of this country know what drastic deflation meant to them, when there was wrung from their toil and labor five billions of dollars in value out of a single crop. Oh, yes; the farmers of this great land who have witnessed the foreclosure on their property and the loss of a life's savings know what that has meant to them. I earnestly hope that the Senator will not be deceived about this great Muscle Shoals measure that so vitally affects the farmer.

Mr. President, if we are to save this great project for the people of this land the only plan that has been offered us that promises any hopes of doing it is the Ford offer. Let not the Members of this body be deceived. If we are to do our duty by the great farming interests of this country we must support the Ford offer until such time, if that ever be, that a better proposition for the people is offered us. When that time comes I will most gladly support it. This is not the time to be victimized by "jokers."

Mr. President, I expect in the near future from another angle to present a different view of this great problem and with special reference to the use of fertilizers indicate the direct importance in relation to a successful agriculture and to point out how vital it is that cheap fertilizers be furnished our farmers if we hope to continue to develop our own food supply, to meet the needs of the people of our country even for the present century.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I want to ask him another question. I interrupted the Senator at the beginning of his remarks and asked him to point out where it was in the Ford offer that Mr. Ford proposed to build reservoir dams and storage dams up the Tennessee River, and he said he would take that up later. He has not taken it up, and before he yields the floor I would like to have him read from the Ford offer anything that directly or indirectly binds either Ford or Ford's corporation to build reservoir dams or storage dams up the Tennessee River.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, when I said I would take that up later, I did not mean to-day. I expect to speak several times on this proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator another question before he takes his seat. Is there anything in the Ford offer which provides for such storage and reservoir dams?

Mr. LADD. So far as I am aware, there is not anything that binds them; on the other hand——

Mr. NORRIS. Is there anything that does not bind them?

Mr. LADD. Just wait until I am through. On the other hand, he can not develop the industries which he proposes to develop down there, utilize the water power, and get the maximum primary power without so developing it.

Mr. NORRIS. What are those industries? There is nothing in the Ford offer to the effect that he is going to develop any industry. If the Senator's statement is accurate, the Senator has some private information which is not in the contract.

Mr. LADD. I said that if he develops any great industry down there, not any particular industry.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator can not point out where Ford has made, either directly or indirectly, any proposition that he will ever build a storage dam, or even make a survey to see whether the water can be stored up on the Tennessee River to equalize the flow over the dams that are in question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the contribution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD] with reference to this important question. I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate to debate the question now. I wish the Senate had been afforded an opportunity to vote directly on Mr. Ford's offer. I do not think it has been fair to Mr. Ford or to the people of the country in that a direct vote has not been taken on Mr. Ford's offer.

It must be borne in mind that the question of the utilization of the Muscle Shoals Dam now rests with the party in power. Two years ago the Senate passed a bill providing that that dam should be operated by the Government, and that proposition was rejected in the other House by the party in power. Then, realizing that something had to be done and that millions should not be wasted by allowing that water to go over the dam with no utilization made of it, the Secretary of War proposed that the matter should be open for those people in the United States who desired to make bids on it. That did not come from the Congress, it did not come from Mr. Ford, it did not come from the men who are supporting Mr. Ford's offer, but it came from the administration itself, and bids were called for from those who would come and finish the dam and operate the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals.

Not on his own initiative, but in compliance with that request of the Government, Mr. Ford made a proposal. The Secretary of War might have rejected it then if he had wanted to do so, and that would have been the end of it so far as Mr. Ford was concerned, because he could not have gone any further; but the Secretary of War submitted the matter to the Congress.

Congress has no right to amend or alter Mr. Ford's proposition. It is his proposition. Congress is entitled to do only one thing about it—accept it or reject it.

Of course, the proposal Mr. Ford has made has cost him some money. He had to have engineers in order to make his estimates; he had to know what he was going to do; and he made a proposal to the Government, which has been submitted and which has been lying before the Senate for more than a year.

I am in favor of accepting it. Other gentlemen may be in favor of rejecting it and think that some other plan is better, but I do not think that under these circumstances the Senate of the United States has a right to ignore the offer; and that is the situation in which the matter rests to-day.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to add just a word to what my colleague has said regarding the timely and very able address of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LADD].

He has shown the necessity of accepting the Ford offer. He has shown how advantageous it would be to the farmers of America. He has shown that Ford has undertaken to take up a project which had been junked upon the recommendation of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives which visited Muscle Shoals some time ago. He has shown that the Ford offer is now pending, and that Mr. Ford is entitled to have his offer acted upon.

He has made it plain that Henry Ford should not be criticized for offering to do something with Muscle Shoals, because when he found it it had been abandoned, the work had been stopped, the Government property was deteriorating; and when Ford brought the matter back to public attention he rendered a great service to the whole country, whether he ever gets the project or not.

He has pointed out that the Government, by accepting Ford's offer, can do more good with that project for more people than could be done through any other utilization of it. He has shifted the burden to those who support makeshift legislation, to those who stand behind stalking-horses, which are simply being used for the purpose of preventing an acceptance of Ford's offer.

There are a good many people in this country who are opposed to Ford's offer who would lend encouragement to those who favor the Norris or some other bill, who really would not want to see the Norris bill ever become a law; but when they have a proposition like that pending, they get behind it for the purpose of defeating something which is about to be accepted, and then, when that project is out of the way, they turn their guns upon the other proposition and proceed to shoot it out of the way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in that connection I wish to say that I have received letters from men in Tennessee saying that large numbers of the speeches of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] are being circulated in Tennessee and neighboring States. Of course, I am sure that they are not being circulated by the junior Senator from Nebraska, but they are being circulated by the interests, those particular companies to whose interest it would be to keep Mr. Ford out of this property.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is correct, I think. I was about to say that when these interests succeed in getting the Ford offer rejected and in then defeating the project which they pretended to support while the Ford offer was pending, they will wait a little while and go to the Government and say, "There is Muscle Shoals idle. It ought to be taken and disposed of in some way; and while it is not worth very much, we would pay you something for it." They would do that in the hope of getting it for nothing. They would strangely influence some engineer to go down and make an inspection of it, and come back and report that it ought to be disposed of, and that a certain figure would be reasonable. The Government in the past has been beaten out of millions of dollars in just that way. This is one project that is not going to be disposed of in that fashion.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Alabama Power Co. is using Plant No. 2 now in just the way the Senator has pointed out. It does not have to wait for the future; it is being done right now. They are renting the plant at a nominal figure and using it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that is true. I have no objection to Plant No. 2 being used by the Alabama Power Co. while the matter is pending. Of course, I would rather it would be used and the Government get a little something for it than to have it stand idle. But the aim and end of those who are opposing the Ford offer is to defeat the Ford offer and then to put the Norris bill to sleep, and then come to the Government and get the project at Muscle Shoals for a song. I repeat they are not going to do that with this project. The Government has been imposed on many times in the past in that way, but the people are getting wise to it.

Now, with reference to the suggestion of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] that the speech of the Senator from Nebraska has been broadly circulated, I raised that question in the presence of the Senator from Nebraska the other day, and said that it was being circulated by the thousands and that I did not know who was circulating it, but that the Senator knew. The Senator was sitting here, and he did not say who was circulating it. The Senator from Tennessee suggested that probably some of the interested parties are circulating it. That appears to be the situation. I know something about a situation of that sort. The Federal reserve banks, under the direction of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, sent out 140,000 copies of a speech against my position on deflation. That cost them between $7,000 and $10,000. When outside interests that are being favored by a policy of a governmental institution will circulate the speech of a Senator in that way, it is unfair to the Senator who has made a speech attacking the proposition, because he is not supposed to be able to circulate his speeches on such a large scale, and it does raise a very nice question as to who is circulating this speech attacking the Ford offer.

Mr. President, I merely rose to compliment the Senator from North Dakota upon the splendid presentation he has made to the Senate and the country regarding the Ford offer. He has offered a statesmanlike solution of the problem. I repeat, in conclusion, that he was right when he said that the Ford offer will do things that will bless and benefit more people than in any other way in which Muscle Shoals could be disposed of.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. FLETCHER. I submit several amendments to the pending bill, and in order to save printing them separately I have arranged them as one amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bayard	Glass	McLean	Reed, Pa.
Brandegee	Harris	McNary	Sheppard
Brookhart	Harrison	Moses	Shortridge
Broussard	Heflin	Nelson	Simmons
Bursum	Johnson	New	Smith
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Smoot
Cameron	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Spencer
Capper	Kellogg	Norris	Sterling
Caraway	Kendrick	Oddie	Sutherland
Culberson	King	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Ladd	Page	Trammell
Dial	La Follette	Pepper	Underwood
Dillingham	Lenroot	Pittman	Wadsworth
Ernst	Lodge	Pomerene	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	McKellar	Ransdell	Warren
George	McKinley	Reed, Mo.	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to present a unanimous-consent request. I understand we are going to adjourn from Friday until Tuesday. If the program of the Banking and Currency Committee is carried out as stated by the chairman of that committee on the floor yesterday, they will probably make their report the first of next week. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on the Norris motion at not later than 4 o'clock on Wednesday of next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to have it understood, if the request is agreed to, that the Senate will go right on considering the shipping bill. I think it has a right to do it, and to dispose of any amendments to the bill until the bill is displaced, if the motion of the Senator from Nebraska should prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand the Senator to say that if a majority of the Senate should vote to take up the Norris bill he would then want to lay aside that bill or any substitute that might be proposed for it and proceed with the ship subsidy bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; the Senator misunderstands me. It was suggested this morning that we could not take up amendments to the shipping bill until the motion of the Senator from Nebraska had been disposed of. This morning when I asked unanimous consent that we fix a time to vote on the Norris motion I suggested that if we did fix a time we could go on dealing with amendments to the shipping bill in the meantime. I think we have a perfect right to do that. I think it is entirely in order. I believe we have a right to consider and dispose of amendments to the shipping bill until it is displaced, if it ever should be, and I wanted to have that clearly understood. I have no objection to fixing a time to vote on the Norris motion, even next Wednesday, but I want the Senate to understand that we are not going to sit still in the meantime, but we are going to proceed with the consideration of the shipping bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought perhaps there would be an appropriation bill brought before the Senate to-morrow or the next day, which would take up some of the time of the Senate, and in the meanwhile there would probably be discussion of the Norris motion or the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As long as there is discussion or any other business coming before the Senate, that is all right; but if discussion runs out and there is an opportunity to vote on an amendment to the shipping bill, I expect to have the Senate do that. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator did not understand that if his request were granted that would halt all proceedings on the shipping bill, did he?

Mr. HARRISON. I thought, perhaps, we should go ahead and discuss the ship subsidy bill and also discuss the agricultural relief measure, which is known as the Norris bill, as well as other bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood that that probably would be so, but I did not wish to be foreclosed, if debate stopped, from voting upon amendments to the shipping bill.

Mr. HARRISON. The amendments are so important that I imagine there will be a good deal of discussion on them, but the motion to set aside the ship subsidy bill and to take up the agricultural relief bill is more important than are the amendments, I imagine.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is very true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is to be deferred for a week and is then fixed for a particular hour, in order that Senators may know when to be here and when the motion is to be voted on, would it not be wise to include in the unanimous-consent agreement the statement that any other motion made between now and that time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of another measure should not be in order? In other words, there is a motion pending, made by the Senator from Nebraska, to proceed to the consideration of the agricultural relief bill, if that be its name. If we should agree by unanimous consent to vote on the pending motion at a particular hour it would not follow that the Senator would be precluded from rising in his place to-morrow and moving to proceed to the consideration of some other bill, which would leave the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in exactly as bad a position, so far as deciding the real merits of the question at issue is concerned, as that in which he is left by the motion of the Senator from Nebraska. I think the Senator will understand what I mean.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has stated that that committee will not be able to report out the rural credits bill until the first part of next week.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand; but suppose we agree to vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska on next Wednesday, a week from now, which motion, if agreed to, would displace the ship subsidy bill, and suppose that to-morrow the Senator from Mississippi should arise and move to proceed to the consideration of some other important measure and a vote should be taken on that motion.

Senators wish to be here when the vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska or on any motion to displace the pending measure. That is the object of Senators. Those who are in favor of the shipping bill do not wish it displaced, while those who are in favor of some other measure wish to displace the shipping bill, and it is immaterial to them whether it shall be done by the prevalence of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska or that of any other Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Connecticut is not stating our position in its entirety.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON. Some of us are in favor of the agricultural credits legislation, and believe it is a great deal more important than is the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, there may be several bills presented for the relief of agriculture. My point is that the reason for fixing a time for voting on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is in order that Senators may be here when it is decided whether the Senate will continue to hold the ship subsidy bill before the Senate or not.

Mr. HARRISON. What change would the Senator from Connecticut suggest in the request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was simply asking the Senator if we are to have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska on next Wednesday at a particular hour that it be coupled with a unanimous-consent agreement that pending the arrival of that time no other motion shall be in order to displace the shipping bill.

Mr. HARRISON. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, then no amendment may be offered to the shipping bill until after next Wednesday at 4 o'clock.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, yes; it may be.

Mr. SMOOT. No; because the motion will be the pending question. We may discuss the bill until next Wednesday, and we may vote upon the motion at 4 o'clock next Wednesday, but if any Senator should desire to offer an amendment to the bill in the meantime it would be out of order, because there is a motion pending.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, while I do not agree with the position of the Senator from Utah in that respect, I am not going to get into any controversy over that. I object to the request.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, of course we are very sorry that we can not reach a unanimous-consent agreement on this question. I thought that, perhaps, the Senator from Washington would be the last Senator to object to entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the motion. I based that supposition on an item which I read in a newspaper this morning, not stating specifically that the Senator from Washington, who is in charge of the pending legislation, had charged the Democrats with filibustering but hinting in that direction. I presume he was laying a predicate upon which to make that charge later on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that there is nothing that I said to anybody that could be construed as suggesting that the Democrats were filibustering, and if any statement of that kind was made in the newspapers it was made without any foundation whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear that, because it was so stated in the official organ of the Republican Party published in Washington. I refer to the Washington Post.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I hope the Senator will not charge to me what may be published in any "official organ" of any administration.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very glad to hear that statement. I knew that the Senator knew that it could not be charged that there was any filibuster against the ship subsidy bill, because the Congress has only been in session for some 10 days, and during that time there has been more speed displayed in passing appropriation bills, I dare say, than has been evidenced in the history of the Senate.

Mr. President, I think—and if I am not correct I ask the Senator from Utah to correct me, as he is a member of the powerful Appropriations Committee—we have passed through the Senate at this early stage, during the short session of Congress, three great appropriation bills which ordinarily take months to pass. We have shown so much cooperation, such a spirit of speeding up legislation, that those three great appropriation bills already are out of the way and much wholesome discussion has been had on the floor touching the ship subsidy and agricultural relief bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know the figures carried in those three great appropriation bills, but they approximate $180,000,000. The Senator from Washington, being one of the members of that committee, I wish he would tell me what was the sum total of those three appropriation bills which we have passed through the Senate at this early stage of the session?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I rose to say that I indorse heartily what the Senator from Mississippi has said; there is no issue between him and me about that question at all; and I was going to express the hope that we might continue the speed referred to by him by voting right away on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Answering the Senator's question, I will say that the bill for the Department of Commerce carried, in round numbers, $25,000,000. As to the other two appropriation bills, I am not a member of the subcommittee which considered them, and I do not remember their totals.

Mr. HARRISON. I presume the sum total would be more than $175,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I confirm absolutely what the Senator has said, that there has been no filibuster developed on the pending bill on the Democratic side at all; but, with reference to that measure, we have had the heartiest cooperation of the other side, as we have had on the appropriation bills; and I had hoped that cooperation might be continued so that we might be able to get a vote in a very short time on the pending motion.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure we are going to have that high degree of cooperation to the end. I hope the consideration of the appropriation bills will be speeded up. No doubt there will be another appropriation bill reported out to-morrow, if the Committee on Appropriations shows its usual degree of energy; and if it is reported out, no doubt we can also pass that measure quickly.

The discussion which has proceeded has been wholesome, Mr. President, because it has given to the country a picture of what is presented here as to whether this Congress wants to take up agricultural credit legislation for the farmers or whether it wants to take up a ship subsidy measure for the benefit of the Shipping Trust. The issue is clear; it is well defined. Of course, there are those who are in sympathy with the idea of affording the shipping interests some relief, because, perhaps, those interests did not charge sufficient freight rates during previous years, and perhaps their profit was not great enough, so that it is necessary that immediate legislation be passed to take care of them; and that in the face of the fact that the pending ship subsidy bill was submitted to Congress some eight months ago. As I recall, the Lasker plan was given to the committee about 10 months——

Mr. SMOOT rose.

Mr. HARRISON. And, may I ask the Senator from Utah—inasmuch as he is on his feet, and he can give me the answer—in view of the fact that Mr. Lasker presented this plan 8 or 10 months ago and the bill was introduced that long ago, why so much speed is insisted upon now upon the part of the Senator from Utah and other leaders on his side to force the passage of the ship subsidy bill immediately following the election when his party was repudiated?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not rise to discuss that question, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the question which I should like to have answered.

Mr. SMOOT. I can answer the Senator by saying that, so far as I am concerned—and I speak for no one except myself—I am in favor of the shipping bill. I know that it can not pass unless it is kept before the Senate continuously; and I may say to the Senator that I do not know whether it can be passed even in that way; but by pursuing that course is the only way, probably, in which it can be passed. If I had the bill in charge—which I have not—I would keep it before the Senate, just as the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is undertaking to do, if I could.

Mr. HARRISON. There is not any fault to be found in that respect.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator, however, whether he favors the so-called Norris agricultural bill?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will abide his time in patience, I am going to analyze the Norris bill and express myself fully about it, as I am on other pending agricultural measures. I am not in favor of that bill, I will say to the Senator, but I am in favor of the farmers of the country having a day in court, and I am not in favor of the Shipping Trust having a monopoly all the time of the few days that the present Congress is to remain in session.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no difference between the Senator and me on that question at all.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear the Senator say that; we have a convert.

Mr. SMOOT. But I am opposed to the Norris bill just as strongly as is the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think I will make a statement that may bring some consolation to the Senator from Mississippi. I want to keep the shipping bill before the Senate just as much as possible. I think there is ample time at the present session to pass that measure and also rural credit legislation. The Senator and I have disagreed and do disagree as to the shipping legislation; he may be right and I may be wrong; but I am just as sincere in my view, I think, as is the Senator in his view. I think I am just as anxious also for legislation for the farmer as is the Senator from Mississippi; and I am going to say to the Senator right now that as soon as the rural credit legislation shall come before the Senate the shipping bill will be laid aside for the consideration of the rural credit measure. So the farmers will be taken care of; and, if we have the cooperation which the Senator has indicated we will have, that legislation ought to be passed in three or four days or a week; and then we will resume the consideration of the shipping bill.

Mr. HARRISON. That was exactly why I made the request for unanimous consent. Relying on the statement of the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee that his committee would report out next Tuesday a rural credit measure, I thought if a majority of the Senate would agree to substitute that measure for the Norris bill there would be no question raised and we would all join hands. If amendments are needed, then we can provide them and make such changes as are necessary. The Senator, however, objected to my request; so we must proceed in this lopsided kind of a way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator understands, of course, why I objected. The Senator knows that I would be very glad to vote right now on the Norris motion; but there seemed to be a controversy, if I agreed to what the Senator from Mississippi suggested, whether that would stop all proceedings on the shipping bill and we would have a week wasted. I am not willing to be put in that position. I should be perfectly willing to agree to the Senator's proposition if then, as I think we have a right to do, we could go on considering the shipping bill, or any other matter that might be brought up, so far as that is concerned; but if there is going to be a long controversy over a question of procedure I thought we could save time by just going along, and if the vote upon the Norris proposition is kept off until next Tuesday or Wednesday, very well; we are no worse off then than we would be if we should make the agreement.

Mr. HARRISON. I must say that I have a little selfish interest in making the unanimous-consent request. I want to help, so far as I can, the other side of the Chamber out of a very difficult and boggy hole. Here is what some of the Senator's own party say about this proposition. Here we are discussing whether we ought to pass a ship subsidy bill or an agricultural credits bill. I asked the Senator from Utah a question while he was on his feet, but, unlike his ordinary deportment, he evaded it; he did not answer it; so I will ask the question and read from the RECORD an answer.

Here is what a distinguished member of the Republican Party said in a speech on the floor of the House about the ship subsidy proposition and the policy of passing it during this Congress, when the American people have repudiated practically all Senators and Representatives who even hinted that they were for a ship subsidy bill. I do not know whether or not my friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], expressed himself in his State as to whether he was for this ship subsidy bill. If he, as a part of the leadership of this body, would come back so soon after the election and try to force through here a bill that taxes the American people anywhere from $700,000,000 to $875,000,000, I imagine that the Senator did not press it in his State in Utah, because he was in every hamlet and on the stump from one end of Utah to the other appealing to the people of Utah to send here a colleague to grace the other side of the Chamber.

If he made that statement to the people of Utah and took them into his confidence, then they repudiated that statement; and if he did not mention it to the people out there he was not quite frank and open with them, because he knew that the President was going to call this extra session of Congress and try to force this bill at this session through the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I never heard it mentioned in the campaign.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator should have taken them into his confidence. He should have given them his views on this question.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator thinks so.

Mr. HARRISON. Was the Senator afraid that the vote for the Democratic candidate might have been larger if he had taken them into his confidence?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. There is not a voter in the State of Utah who does not know where the Senator from Utah stands upon the ship subsidy bill or any other question.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator did not tell them on the stump that he was for it.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not a question in the campaign.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator think that if the President was going to force it through here in so short a time following the election, those Republicans as well as Democrats who ran in that election should have been candid with the people and told them how they stood on it, so that the American people might have passed on it?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that the people of Utah knew where the Senator from Utah stood.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator said he did not take them into his confidence.

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was not a question in the campaign at all.

Mr. HARRISON. But they did not know until after the election that the Senator was for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes, they did, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. It will be hard on the Senator the next time he comes up, then.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to take my chances on that. I have not asked anybody to make any excuse for any position that I have ever taken in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, what applies to the Senator applies to other Senators; but this colloquy is not personal. It just shows that you are trying to put over something here when you failed to take the people into your confidence before the election; and it shows that this matter should wait until the new Congress comes in, and let the proposition be handled by those Senators and Representatives who are fresh from the people. That so objectionable a piece of legislation should be foisted upon them by a repudiated and defeated Congress——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I am prompted to ask the Senator a question. In what State or States, or in what congressional districts, was the ship subsidy bill an issue during the recent campaign?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I am going to read here in a moment the testimony of some witnesses from the Senator's own party to show that a great many of the members of the House Merchant Marine Committee who voted to report out the bill were defeated and left at home. I will say further to the Senator that I do not know just how many States some of us spoke in. I spoke in a good many, and I never made a single speech in which I did not denounce the ship subsidy bill, and I dare say that the Senator never indorsed the ship subsidy bill in any speech that he made in that campaign. If Senators and representatives of the Senators failed to take a position on this question in the campaign, knowing that it would come up, then they deserve the condemnation of their constituents.

Mr. STERLING. That may be; but the fact that the Senator from Mississippi denounced it does not necessarily show that it was an issue in that State in that campaign.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, Mr. President, that is the great trouble about the Republican Party. They repudiate promises; they betray the trust reposed in them, and they do not take the American people into their confidence as they should. The statement of the Senator from South Dakota and the statement of the Senator from Utah bear me out in that assertion.

Here is what a distinguished Republican Congressman said in talking about this procedure on the floor of the House:

My friends, I am a Republican—

He was proud of that, ordinarily. I imagine he was sorry at this time.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a minute?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was the gentleman bragging or confessing?

Mr. HARRISON. He was confessing, and very properly so. I read further from him—and I have seen all I wish to see of a Democratic administration. I should like to see the good old ship of state steered by Republicans. But when as now my party leaders—and I believe many of them against their own best judgment—steer the ship of state in a wrongful course, when my heart and convictions and conscience rebel against some such legislative measure, as this subsidy bill before us now, then, as frequently in the past, I can not go with them. I must resort for a time to a lifeboat or a plank. Self-preservation is the first law of life. You watch Republicans jump for the planks. You watch the Republican whip jump.

He was not talking about the Republican whip here. He was speaking of the Republican whip of the House.

Further, he says:

You watch the chairman of the conference jump. You watch many a Republican save himself before we get through with this bill.

That was pretty good advice.

I have had to go through this experience very often. I happen to be one of the older Members of this House. I remember when these subsidy bills were up before, when Hanna and Gallinger had started them, and when "Uncle Joe," in his prime and vigor, backed by leaders like Payne and Dalzell, together with my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], were pushing this subsidy privilege.

And he said they defeated it by a vote of 172 to 175. Then he said:

Let me say to my good Republican associates here—

And he was talking about you, just the same as his Republican associates over in the House—

Let me say to my good Republican associates here who would vote right, the rank and file of the Republicans are out on the farms and in the factories. They are not these leaders nor these shipowners.

Listen to this wise sage:

If we are going to hold our party, we have got to go to the masses and not look to the ship profiteers. Every man knows it. If you will look out and see the angry waves of discontent, you know that I am speaking the truth.

That speech was made by a Republican, and I am glad we are getting some more Senators in here so that they can hear it. I wish every Republican seat were now occupied, because I want to save you from your own iniquities.

Have you read the election returns?

You know that is an interesting question that he propounded to you.

Did you see the men elected who ran on antiship subsidy platforms? I ran on one. It was a platform denouncing this bill, and I won overwhelmingly. Those who did favor it went down to defeat. Have you noticed the fatalities? Thirty-five per cent of the vacancies on the Republican side of this Merchant Marine Committee!

Thirty-five per cent went down in that catastrophe.

They prepared this bill; I presume they told their constituents all about their arduous labors for a subsidized merchant marine. Five out of fourteen defeated.

I have not looked over the figures to see how many of the Commerce Committee of the Senate went down in defeat. I know that a pretty large percentage of the Republican members of the Finance Committee were defeated because they reported out and advocated the tariff bill and the revenue measure.

That is not all. That is one distinguished Republican that I read from. Here is another:

Let me say before I go further that I believe that Pennsylvania, the old Keystone State, would have failed to return my good friend—

Talking about Mr. EDMONDS—of whom I think so much, if this proposal had occurred before election—

This is a Republican speaking—because we lost New York, we lost Maryland, we lost New Jersey, we lost so many States of the country, just due to bills of this character, and this is worse than anything I have ever seen in all my experience here as a Member.

He could have gone further. He could have said, "We lost Delaware"; he could have said, "We lost Rhode Island"; he could have said, "We lost Senator Moses's State of New Hampshire"; he could have said, "We lost Ohio; we lost Michigan"; he could have said, "We lost Indiana"; he could have said, "We lost Kansas, the Republican whip's State"; he could have said, "We lost Colorado"; he could have said, "We lost the leader of the Republican Party in the House of Representatives, FRANK MONDELL"; and the people of Wyoming reelected that splendid Senator, the former governor of that State, to the Senate. He could have said, "We lost Montana; we lost Nebraska; we lost Oregon; we lost Washington; we lost Nevada; we lost Arizona; we lost New Mexico; we lost Oklahoma." Oh, well, they lost about everything in that election; and yet, because of that fact, the President comes here and tells the Republican leadership to drive through this infamous measure that will add to the burdens of the American taxpayer before the new Congress can come into control.

I do not blame you for looking sad. I do not blame you because your morale is broken. I do not blame you for your lines being divided. It is a sad picture you present to us who are your friends, and God knows how you look to the American people.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Mississippi said he did not know what the effect had been on the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. There were only two Senators on the Republican side of the Commerce Committee who were up for reelection, and neither of them will be with us in the next Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. See there! Yet you persist in driving this legislative monstrosity through the Senate, neglecting the farmers of the country, and there was talk yesterday about filing a motion to table the Norris motion to proceed with the consideration of a bill for agricultural relief. You want to go so far even as to shut off discussion of the matter, strangle debate, close our mouths.

But I have not finished reading all that this distinguished Republican Congressman said. I want to proceed further. He said:

I realize that you are putting these hundreds of millions of dollars into the pockets of a few favored monopolies and that you could not go before the country for a moment with your proposition, and you dare not let it go for three months until the new Congress meets.

That is what is in the heart of some Republican. Yet you are trying to drive through this Congress this bill in a kind of strangle-hold fashion. Said this Republican:

You know it and so do I, and I do not believe it will stand the ghost of a chance of getting through the Senate.

I hope he is right.

But I do not want my good friends here, on the Republican side, whom I have tried to persuade to stay in the straight and narrow path in the past—I do not want them to fall down at this time, because I want them, all of them, to be here two years from now.

They will not be there if they vote for such propositions as this. He said further:

Why was the bill not brought up before election?

I put the same question to my friend the Senator from Utah while he was on his feet and he has not answered me yet, and to show that it is a fair question a Republican Congressman puts the same question to him and puts it to other Republican Senators. He said:

It is an indictment of the whole proposition to try to jam it through this expiring Congress when a certainty exists it would be overwhelmingly defeated if presented four months hence to the new Congress coming fresh from the people.

There is the indictment. A few years ago, when the Senate considered for quite a while—and certainly most carefully—the Jones bill, we thought that would surely result in the maintenance of our merchant marine. At that time we believed that the distinguished Senator from Washington, now in charge of this bill, had evolved a plan and constructed a bill which would make the merchant marine a success in the future. That is why we supported the Jones bill; and at that time, sitting in the Chamber, was a very distinguished Republican. Those were his views. He sealed the fact by a vote for the bill, and that distinguished Republican is now none other than the President of the United States, who admits, by coming to the Congress and pressing forward this legislation, that he was not so wise, that he was mistaken, when, two years or more ago, he championed the Jones bill and voted for it and helped to enact it into law.

What changes have come about that should change the situation? One is that we have Lasker as the head of the Shipping Board, the wise man of shipping, who knows everything about advertising but before he took charge of this board knew nothing about shipping.

I notice he has taken my good friend from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] to taw because the junior Senator from Kansas saw fit to write some editorials in his papers out in the Middle West against the ship subsidy bill and told the truth about it, namely, that it would allow the Shipping Board to lend to these men and these interests, be they the Standard Oil, the United Fruit Co., or the Steel Corporation, money to buy these ships at low interest rates. He said it would enable the board to lend to them $125,000,000 at 2 per cent interest. Simply because the Senator from Kansas said that this would cost the Government approximately $750,000,000 for the next 10 years Lasker has a nightmare, goes into the press, and gives out a statement criticizing the Senator from Kansas, saying, "Oh, the information he got is from Democratic sources and therefore it can not be correct."

Lasker himself said in the testimony that it would cost the Government $52,000,000 a year in subsidies to operate this proposition. He admits and the Senator from Washington admits that it will enable the board to lend $125,000,000 at a low rate of interest to the men who purchase the ships, and in his testimony before the committee Lasker stated that the merchant marine was worthless, that you could not get anything for it, that although it cost three billion dollars or more they would hardly be able to get $200,000,000 for it. Yet he takes the Senator from Kansas to task. The Senator from Kansas is performing a great service to the American people in exposing the iniquities of this bill; and I dare say that, big and powerful and influential as Lasker is, he can not browbeat the distinguished Senator from Kansas and cause him to close his mouth or cease his writing in condemnation of this nefarious measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In that connection I call attention to the fact that this bill sets apart 10 per cent of all the customs duties, which, according to the statements made by those in charge of the recently passed tariff bill, will amount to $45,000,000 a year, and, in addition, the tonnage dues, amounting to $4,000,000 a year, making $49,000,000 which they actually set apart to pay these subsidies.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will have to concede that the Commerce Committee has recommended an amendment to this bill limiting the amount which can be spent in any year as compensation for these ships to $30,000,000. It is plain language. Senators may argue as they see fit, but that is what the committee recommends.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is not what the House passed, and, of course, it can be stricken out very easily in conference. What you do is to set apart $49,000,000 of the people's money to pay this subsidy.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Washington recognizes the fact that I was merely answering Lasker's statement in condemning my friend, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. When some Republican goes out to condemn another Republican, it looks as if no Republican dares open his mouth in defense of the other Republican. So I have found that about half of my time on the floor is spent in defending Republicans.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington certainly does not mean to say that $30,000,000 is all that might be expended under this bill. That amendment has been offered merely to provide some people a life line to climb down on. There is no amendment providing that a contract shall be declared void if the expense runs to $50,000,000, if they simply thought it would not be more than $30,000,000.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to be mistaken about this measure, and I do not want to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I do not want the Senator from Washington to think, when I propound a question to him, that I am just trying to consume time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That never entered my mind.

Mr. HARRISON. I am trying to get information. I say that because I am going to ask the Senator some questions now. As I understand it, the Standard Oil Co., with its tankers, or any ships they may own, will come under the provisions of this bill, just the same as any person who might buy ships from the Shipping Board or might operate ships.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The companies operating ships for the carrying of their own products get no subsidy, according to the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I want the Senator to explain to me one thing, briefly, if he will. The original bill, the one presented by Lasker, which the President asked the Congress to pass, and which was submitted to the House of Representatives, did it not include the provision for pay to the Standard Oil Co. if it had tankers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did.

Mr. HARRISON. Or the United States Steel Corporation if it operated ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did.

Mr. HARRISON. Or the United Fruit Co. if it operated ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It did.

Mr. HARRISON. They would not only get the advantages of the indirect subsidy, but would get the direct subsidy, would they not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They were put on the basis of any person owning ships.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Standard Oil Co. was bringing some oil from Mexico to New York in its own tankers, the ships loaded exclusively with its own products, under the original draft of the bill what benefit would they receive? In other words, I would like to have the Senator illustrate the difference between the original bill and the bill as it is before the Senate, so far as the Standard Oil Co. in bringing its own products in its own tankers from Mexico to New York is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not seek to conceal anything with reference to this.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator never does conceal facts with reference to a measure of which he is in charge.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is just as the Senator has suggested; under the original bill, as it was first introduced, Standard Oil ships, or United Fruit Co. ships, in fact, all ships under the American flag, would be on the same basis. The House excluded from the benefits of the subsidy features of the bill ships carrying products of the owners of those ships.

Mr. HARRISON. What position was taken by the committee of which the Senator is chairman?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We did not interfere with that provision of the House.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee did not accept Lasker's proposal, in other words, to that extent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we did not. We went further, and in that part of the bill authorizing a loan fund of $125,000,000 we inserted an amendment providing that none of that money should be loaned to companies for the construction of ships to carry their own products.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the committee raise the rate of interest, or was it raised in the House, from 2 per cent to 4½ or 4¾ per cent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was raised in the House.

Mr. HARRISON. The original draft carried only 2 per cent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It provided not less than 2 per cent.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator. I did not know why the chairman of the Shipping Board, an expert in advertising, wanted to give all those favors to the Standard Oil Co., the United Fruit Co., or the Steel Corporation. This may sound hard to some of you, but we are trying to let everything out and keep no secret. Far be it from me to suggest that Mr. Lasker's recommendation was because in the recent campaign Mr. Rockefeller—a poor fellow, of course, who needs the sympathy of everybody—in the last report filed by the chairman of the Republican National Campaign Committee was shown to be one of the largest contributors to the Republican Party, having given $25,000. His son, John D., jr., was quite lavish in his donation. I think he gave $25,000. Of course that was the amount the chairman stated that these gentlemen had given. He did not say how much more they had given that was not shown in the report. Consequently we must accept the statement that only $50,000 was given by father and son Rockefeller to the Republican campaign fund in the last election. And here Mr. Lasker, head of the Shipping Board, writes a bill, in frequent conference with the President, which receives the indorsement of the President, which is sought to be passed through the Congress under whip and spur of Executive influence, that gives to the Standard Oil Co. greater privileges than would be enjoyed by any other person and few other corporations under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Inasmuch as the bill as it was then written and reported out in the House contained this benefit to them, does not the Senator think the Republican Party ought to pay back their campaign contributions if they are going to amend the bill and cut out those benefits?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; they should be fair with them, because the Rockefellers, John D., jr., and John D., sr., had every reason to believe when they made the donation of $50,000 that they were going to be taken care of.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. I wish simply to correct the Senator in regard to the elder Rockefeller. In testimony submitted to the Committee on Manufactures recently, it was called to my attention this morning that it had been stated that the elder Rockefeller is not now a stockholder in the Standard Oil Co. So that he ought not to get his money back.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator believe that?

Mr. CALDER. The statement was made by the president of the company, and he is a truthful man. He said that the younger Rockefeller was a large stockholder and the elder Rockefeller was not a stockholder, and I believe that the gentleman who made the statement told the truth.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator believe that John D., sr., has no interest in the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. CALDER. I repeat merely what the president of the company said.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not mean financial interest alone. I mean sympathy for the poor little thing.

Mr. CALDER. I repeat that the gentleman testified that young Rockefeller was a large stockholder, but his father had no interest in the company. I believe that is true, because the man who stated it is a truthful man.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator does not believe that it is fair, after John D., jr.—I will leave out John D., sr.—the man who owns the largest interest in the Standard Oil Co., gave this $25,000, and the House had passed this liberal provision that would treat him fairly, indeed, that now the Senate, through the Senator from New York and his friends, should go back on any promise made?

Mr. CALDER. The Senator again is misstating the fact; unwittingly, I am sure.

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. CALDER. The House did not pass the bill with a provision in it to take care of the Standard Oil Co.

Mr. HARRISON. The House committee reported it out containing that provision.

Mr. CALDER. The House refused to keep that provision in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I know the Senator does not want to be technical.

Mr. CALDER. But the point I want to make is——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not answered my question.

Mr. CALDER. The point I make is that Mr. Rockefeller, sr., at least, is not entitled to have his money back if, as the Senator intimates, he may have contributed, because the Standard Oil Co. was being taken care of in the shipping bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I have eliminated John D., sr.; I am talking about John D., jr., now.

Mr. CALDER. I am quite sure that John D. Rockefeller, jr., who is a great philanthropist and is also a good Republican, contributed his part of the fund with no expectation of any help or assistance from anybody. He is too high type of man for that, and the Senator ought to know it.

Mr. HARRISON. He is a constituent of the Senator?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; he lives in my State, and is a very distinguished citizen, a splendid man, a very high-minded Christian gentleman, and when he contributes to the funds of the Republican Party he contributes like he does to many other good purposes, for the good of the country.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not think that favoritism by legislation should be shown to John D. Rockefeller, jr., does he?

Mr. CALDER. Of course not.

Mr. HARRISON. Merely because he has these exceptional qualities?

Mr. CALDER. Of course not.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator was not in sympathy with what the House committee did when it reported out the bill containing that special provision?

Mr. CALDER. Of course not. I am entirely in sympathy with that provision of the bill which eliminates from any benefits all companies which carry their own goods exclusively.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator, then, was not in sympathy with Lasker's suggestion that it should be done?

Mr. CALDER. I do not know who made the suggestion or if he prepared the bill. I am not in sympathy with that particular provision.

Mr. HARRISON. If the President indorsed it, the Senator is then out of sympathy with the President on that proposition?

Mr. CALDER. I doubt very much if the President knew it would affect that particular interest. I am sure that he did not know it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely he read the bill before he recommended it to the Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. The best excuse the Senator can offer is ignorance on the subject, and we will all accept that excuse.

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no; I do not offer that reason at all.

Mr. HARRISON. Did the gentleman who appeared before the committee this morning say when John D., sr., got out of the Standard Oil Co?

Mr. CALDER. I was not present at the committee meeting. I was informed by a Senator who was present, and a newspaper carried the story. His testimony was given about a week ago.

Mr. HARRISON. But he did not say when John D., sr., got out?

Mr. CALDER. I did not see that statement made.

Mr. HARRISON. He may have gotten out after he learned that the Committee on Commerce had repudiated what the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries had endeavored to do for him—in other words, had taken away from him the favoring provisions that had been granted to him or his company in the original draft and by the action of the House committee?

Mr. CALDER. My recollection is that the statement was made that he had had no interest in the company for the past two years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York, with the permission of the Senator having the floor, if he means to state that John D. Rockefeller, sr., has no interest either in the Standard Oil Co. or any of its multitude of subsidiary organizations?

Mr. CALDER. I simply repeated the statement made by the president of the Standard Oil Co. before the Committee on Manufactures. In that statement it was set forth that for the past two years—I think I am correct in the time—the elder Rockefeller had had no financial interest in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the parent organization, has a multitude of subsidiary organizations, and that the parent organization now is of less consequence than many of the children which have sprung from it.

Mr. CALDER. My information is that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey is by far the most important, the most wealthy, and the most influential of them all.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the parent company, owns the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and a multitude of other companies, pipe-line companies, prospecting companies, and other organizations engaged in the development of the oil industry. Does the Senator mean to state that John D. Rockefeller, sr., is not interested in any of those great organizations?

Mr. CALDER. Of course, I have no knowledge of that. I have no knowledge of the ramifications of Mr. Rockefeller's interests. I simply repeated the statement made by the president of the company before the Senate Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator will discover that Mr. Rockefeller's holdings in oil companies—I do not care by what name they may be labeled—exceed $350,000,000, according to the par value of the stock.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand the Senator from New York, he had some friend who appeared before the committee who said that John D., sr., had no interest in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Mississippi is putting words in my mouth. I did not say I had a friend who appeared before the committee. I said that the president of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey had appeared before the committee and made the statement.

Mr. HARRISON. He made the statement that John D., sr., had no interest in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; but that his son, John D., jr., was a large stockholder.

Mr. HARRISON. And, of course, we assume and the Senator, I imagine, assumes that John D. Rockefeller, sr., still has a holding in the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, the Standard Oil Co. of Ohio, and the many other subsidiary companies?

Mr. CALDER. I assume nothing of the sort. I know nothing about it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator does not know? The only assurance he has is that some person has stated before a committee that John D., sr., has no interest now in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey.

Mr. CALDER. No. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Standard Oil Co. of Ohio or of Indiana or of some other State may have tankers and operate tankers in the trade. The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey is not the only Standard Oil Co. that owns and operates tankers carrying their product to and fro over the seas, is it?

Mr. CALDER. I am not sure of that, of course, but I am under the impression, from information I have obtained from time to time, that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey are by far the largest owners of oil tankers. I have not exact information, but that is the information that comes to me in a general way. There may be other oil companies that own tankers.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, what I thought when the Senator first rose was that he had some information that John D., sr., did not give the $25,000 contribution which the Republican chairman reported in his statement; but the Senator, of course, I imagine, will agree that the chairman of the Republican committee would tell the truth about it, or about anything, and that that was all right.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I understood the Senator from New York correctly, he said that the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey had been operating most of the tankers. I presume that was suggested to him because they recently declared a 400 per cent stock dividend, and that might also suggest to him that they were the owners of the ships.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, coming back to the proposition that the ship subsidy bill should await the new Congress recently elected by the people, I want to read what the Republican campaign textbook, in the Republican platform, said with respect to the merchant marine. At no place in it does it hint or suggest subsidy. On the contrary it indorses the Jones Act which was passed here by a Republican Congress to maintain the merchant marine and to which the President of the United States gave his earnest support and for which he voted and which carried no subsidy. Here is what the platform said:

> We indorse the sound legislation recently enacted by the Republican Congress that will insure the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine.

There is an indorsement of the Jones Act. The American people in that election had a right to rely on the fact that you were through with legislation affecting the merchant marine, and they had no thought that you would come here and want to place additional taxes on the American people to the extent of $875,000,000 to give to the Shipping Trust. Yet that is what is sought in the pending bill.

Mr. President, getting back to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to take up the agricultural credits legislation and sidetrack, so to speak, the ship subsidy bill, presenting an issue to this body whether the Shipping Trust needs our help more and to a greater extent than the farmers of the country, I want to refresh the memories of Senators that a year and a half or more ago this body and the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution providing for an agricultural inquiry and a commission was appointed to look into agricultural conditions, in an endeavor to solve the problem, and to make their recommendations touching legislation and otherwise, that might promote the interests of the agricultural classes. That commission worked faithfully for months. It made many suggestions. It made, in my opinion, many wise recommendations.

Up until this good hour, although those recommendations were made six or eight months ago, this Congress has dilly-dallied with the tariff and dillydallied with revenue legislation and talked about the ship subsidy and the antilynching bill and the Liberian loan until we have wasted the time, and we have passed none of the legislation that might have benefited the farmers of the country. And yet when the proposal is made and the sentiment of the country is crystallized for agricultural credits legislation we have it thrown at us that there is a filibuster on. Filibuster! Why? Because we are trying to point out to you that the next Congress is the Congress to take up and solve the ship subsidy question, and that this Congress is the one to take up agricultural credits legislation and enact it speedily, so that if relief is to come to the farmers of the country it may be given to them at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. President, in the summary of the recommendations of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry we find the following:

(1) That the Federal Government affirmatively legalize the cooperative combination of farmers for the purpose of marketing, grading, sorting, processing, or distributing their products.

* * * * * * *

(3) That there should be a warehousing system which will provide a uniform liability on the part of the warehousemen and in which the moral and financial hazards are fully insured.

* * * * * * *

(4) The commission believes that an immediate reduction of freight rates on farm products is absolutely necessary to a renewal of normal agricultural operations and prosperity, and recommends prompt action by the railroads and constituted public authority to that end.

Is there anything that is burdening the farmers of the Middle West and the far western sections more than the high freight rates which are charged by railroads? Is it not a question of such moment and importance that this Congress should turn its attention to it and let the ship subsidy bill, which will cost the American people so much, slide away until the next Congress begins its session? Which does the American people believe more important—subsidy legislation or a reduction of freight rates by the railroads, especially on agricultural products? Which legislation would be more welcome to the farmers of the West and South? To ask the question is to answer it; and yet this Congress, under its wise leadership, allows itself to waste precious moments in talking about subsidizing the Shipping Trust and permits the farmers of the great Middle West, of the South, and every other part of the country to continue to pay high and unreasonable freight rates in order that they may ship their products from the farm to the consumer.

The commission made other recommendations. It recommended furthermore—

(5) That there should be an extension of the statistical divisions of the Department of Agriculture, particularly along the line of procurement of live-stock statistics.

I hope that the Agricultural Department is working toward that end; but I do not know.

(6) That provision should be made by Congress for agricultural attachés in the principal foreign countries producing and consuming agricultural products.

We passed a bill the other day carrying an appropriation of over $100,000 for consular agents and commercial attachés in foreign countries to study trade conditions, to study commerce, and to report back to the Department of Commerce. We have recommended that agricultural attachés should be appointed in those countries in order that they might study agricultural conditions there and report them back and let the farmers learn by first-hand information the condition of crops and of markets throughout those countries and throughout the world.

The commission also recommends—

(7) The development by trade associations and by State and Federal sanction of more accurate, uniform, and practical grades of agricultural products and standards of containers for the same.

Nothing has been done along that line.

(8) That adequate Federal appropriations should be made for the promotion of better book and record keeping of the cost of production of farm products on the basis of the farm-plant unit as a basis for the development of more efficient methods of farm management.

It is to be hoped that in the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill at this session some of these recommendations, at least, will be taken up and acted upon, and that some law may be enacted to carry out the recommendations of this commission.

(10) More adequate wholesale terminal facilities, particularly for handling perishables at primary markets, and a more thorough organization of the agencies and facilities of distribution of the large consuming centers of the country.

(11) The development of better roads to local markets, joint facilities at terminals connecting rail, water, and motor transport systems, and more adequate facilities at shipping points, with a view to reducing the cost of marketing and distribution.

(12) That greater effort be directed to the improvement of community life.

Here is a recommendation which is more important than all the others; one that cries out from every farm home throughout the country; one to which no Senator can turn a deaf ear. It is:

(2) That the farmer's requirements for credit corresponding to his turnover and having maturity of from six months to three years, which will enable payment to be made from the proceeds of the farm, be met by an adaptation of the present banking system of the country which will enable it to furnish credit of this character. It is expected that a concrete proposal to carry out this recommendation will be made in part 2 of this report.

That was one of the recommendations which the commission, after weeks and months of earnest work and endeavor, unanimously agreed upon; that the agricultural credit system as to-day constituted does not meet the demands nor the needs of the farmers of the country. So we drafted a bill to cover the matter. That bill did not meet my ideas in every particular; I suppose it met the ideas of no member of the commission in every particular; but we agreed to it because it was the best plan upon which all parties to the commission could agree. I am for that bill, with amendments, until a better plan can be suggested by some one else. But after the commission, following weeks of labor, recommended this important legislation for the farmers, who are to-day more distressed than ever before in their history, we are confronted by a situation which is most glaringly and correctly illustrated by one statement made by the expert of the commission. He was a splendid expert; I dare say that if we had combed the whole country we could not have procured one more faithful to the trust imposed than Doctor King. He found and the commission found, according to all the statistics they gathered, that—

Measured in terms of purchasing power, the farmer's dollar in 1920 was worth only 89 cents.

We might consider the purchasing power at that time of the banker's dollar, the purchasing power of the dollar of the owners of the great steamship lines of the country, the purchasing power of the United Fruit Co., of the United States Steel Corporation, of the Standard Oil Co., of commercial houses, mercantile establishments, and manufacturing plants, and find that the purchasing power of their dollar at that time was much greater than that of the farmer; in fact, was so much greater that it could hardly be compared to the purchasing power of 89 cents on the dollar, as shown for the farmer in that year.

In May, 1921, the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar—which amounted to 89 cents in 1920—had depreciated until it was only 77 cents; and during the months since then the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar has gone still lower, as my good friend the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] will attest, because at the time when the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar was but 77 cents his corn was selling at a higher price than that for which it sold a few months ago or for which it sells to-day. The same statement applies to wheat and other commodities which he raises. Why, sirs, the average income received by a farmer for his labor in 1909 was only $311. In 1918 it was $1,278, and in 1920 it was only $219, and to-day in many sections it is less. The average income of a person in every other business or trade is greatly in excess of the farmer. In many sections of the country distress, discontent, and unhappiness are staring the American farmer in the face; privation and starvation hover over many an humble American farm home. The farmer is suffering because of high railroad rates, lack of marketing facilities, and an inadequate and ancient credit system which does not respond to his needs; yet we sit here as representatives of the American people and try to press through Congress a ship subsidy bill that will add to their burdens instead of relieving them in the slightest degree.

Although, Mr. President, I realize these facts, yet when I suggest that a time be fixed to vote on a motion to give to the farmer a day, so to speak, in court, a day when his case may be presented, a day when his case may be called on the calendar, a day when we may get away for a short time from the consideration of a ship subsidy measure and consider the wants and needs of the American farmer, I have hurled at me the insinuation that I am in part helping in a filibuster. Ah, my friends, this question presents the issue of whether the shipping interests in this country can utilize and monopolize the time of the Senate or whether we will be fair in a small degree at least to the agricultural interests of the country and say to them, "We are going to give you a few days so that we may consider some legislation for your benefit."

I am going to vote for the motion submitted by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I shall not vote for that motion because I favor the Norris bill; I am not in favor of the Norris bill; but I am in favor of the farmers having a day here in order that Senators may agree upon an agricultural credit bill and upon other legislation for his benefit and relief, and the best way is by adopting this motion. I know that if we procrastinate, as we sometimes do on this side and as the Republican majority always does on their side, we will never get anywhere to relieve the distressed conditions of agriculture as they are presented to us to-day.

I said I was not for the Norris bill. I have shown my opposition to it already. I happen to be a member of the Agricultural Committee, and I was one Senator in that committee—and I am not divulging any secrets when I say it—who made two motions and called for a record vote trying to eliminate the two objectionable features of the bill as I saw them. I am not for my Government going into the junk-shop business—no! I am not for my Government purchasing and operating and holding elevators and warehouses—no! I filed a motion, and on the roll call I voted to eliminate that provision from the bill, and I am not for the other provision. I am not for section 2 of the Norris bill, which seeks to buy agricultural products from any person. I do not want to see my Government go into the mercantile business. I do not want to see it go out and as among and between farmers compete in the purchase of their products. I am against the Government selling such products to any person within the United States or to any person or to any government or subdivision of government without the United States. To me those provisions are not only socialistic but they are bolshevistic, and I shall vote against them in the consideration of this bill; and if they are not eliminated, and the vote comes on the passage of the bill, I shall vote against the bill. But I voted to report it out, reserving the right to offer amendments and vote as I saw fit on the floor of the Senate. I did it because I knew it was the only way for us to agree on a measure as a substitute that would guarantee some relief.

I know, however, what is going to happen, and you know what is going to happen. We can not fool ourselves. Unless the adherents of ship subsidy legislation continue to occupy the time of the Senate to the exclusion of the consideration of an agricultural credits bill, we will take up the Norris bill for consideration. It will be discussed. Every line of it, every suggestion in it, will receive arguments for it and against it, and in the end we will agree upon a substitute for the Norris bill that will meet the needs, at least in part, of the agricultural interests of the country in the form of an agricultural credits bill.

I hope that when we shall have begun the consideration of the bill we can agree upon the bill that was recommended by the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, that was known as the Lenroot bill and that is known in the House as the Anderson bill, and which received the indorsement—of course, with reservations to improve it—of the Commission on Agricultural Inquiry. I want to see that bill substituted, with some amendments to it. I want to see the amount of $1,000,000 that is to be appropriated to each of the 12 Federal land banks increased in amount to $10,000,000 for each one, making possible a capitalization of $120,000,000, with power vested in the bank to issue bonds and obligate itself to the amount of $1,200,000,000.

Is that giving the farmers a little mess of pottage? Is that a piece of popgun legislation, when you present an opportunity to the farmers of the country to borrow $1,200,000,000, provided they can meet the terms of the bill? They are modern. They are well drawn. It will render great benefit to the agricultural class, who need the credit; and I want to see that bill amended further so that it will compel the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, which is to control this credit, to establish in every agricultural or live-stock State where it has no offices now a branch office or an agency. I want to carry the plan to the farmers, and I want to see it amended—although I know without hope of success—so that the institution need not go through the banks to loan the money to the farmers or go directly to the associations. I would have it read that this concern can loan the money directly to the farmer if he can produce the security, freeing him from the interest charges imposed by the banks or the necessity of organization in an association in order to obtain the credit.

That proposition has been tried out in this body on an amendment that I offered a year ago, I believe, when we were considering the amendment to the War Finance Corporation bill. It has been tried out in the committees. I know that I am but a part of a small minority on that proposition, and so I am willing to take the very next best thing, which, I think, is incorporated in what is known as the Lenroot-Anderson bill. We can get together on that proposition, and I hope that the Banking and Currency Committee of this body will not take up too much time, although the matter should be carefully considered; that they will eventually report out that bill, with such amendments as they think are wise, so that we can all get together on it or some other proposition that may be better and sounder, offer it as a substitute for the Norris bill, and pass it, so that we can at least say to the farmers, "We have redeemed in part the pledges and promises we made to you."

I would not stop there. That is not all. If I should write the policy of agricultural credit legislation at this time, I would incorporate in it a provision such as is embodied in the Norris bill, such as is embodied in the Norbeck bill, such as has been suggested in other pieces of legislation here, that the life of the War Finance Corporation shall be extended another year or more, or that some corporation shall be created as its successor, and it can loan money to interests in other countries to buy our surplus agricultural products here, provided the money is spent in this country and provided those interests put up adequate security before they borrow. That is what will help in this country.

When I look at you I remember how you have isolated America, how you have destroyed to our farmers as well as manufacturers the markets of foreign countries, how you have dammed up the stream of commerce so that agricultural products, of which we had a surplus in prior years and of which we have a surplus now, can not flow, and consequently a surplus hoarded here drives down the price of the farmers' products. If it had not been for that policy, if you had shown a little more wisdom, if you had not halted in your steps so much, if you had not been fearful of certain men in the Republican Party who would cry out, "Foreign entanglements!" we would have gone over there to try to help—yes; to try to help Germany in the reparations imposed upon her, to help Poland, to help other countries, through our counsel and our advice and our influence, to be rehabilitated; to help their industries start up anew and to restore prosperity to those countries, because when we do that we open up markets for our agricultural products and insure to America prosperity not only on farm, in factory, but to all our people.

Then, too, you have added to the farmer's burden by trying to build a tariff wall around this country, so that we can not trade with other countries, thinking we could just live here among ourselves and eat up or use our own products, destroy our exports, and diminish our balance of trade; and it is all felt in reduced prices to the American farmer.

Why, I saw my friend from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and my friend from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] exhibit on the floor of this body a little doll, made, no doubt, by some little German girl. It took her, perhaps, days and even months to make that little toy. She thought, perhaps, that by her efforts she could gladden some little heart in America at Christmastide. She thought, perhaps, she could sell it for enough to buy her a little Christmas present, or a little Christmas toy; yet I heard the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Indiana say that a tariff wall should be constructed so high as to prevent that little German girl from making and selling here that little, simple toy to gladden the heart of a little American girl!

That is your policy; that is your record in this body and in the other body. I appeal to you, let us join hands and vote for the motion to take up the Norris bill, not especially because we are for the Norris bill but because it presents a foundation on which we can construct some agricultural credits legislation that will give immediate relief, if necessary, to the great farming classes of the country.

Oh, you need not worry; you will not lose the support of the great Shipping Trust of the country. You will not lose the support and the future campaign contributions of Rockefeller, even though John D., sr., has gone out of business in New Jersey. You will not lose the support of the United States Steel Corporation and the United Fruit Co. Let them wait a little while. Let the farmers have a day in court. Let us deal fairly with them. Let us meet the conditions as they arise. Let us stop making this charge of filibustering. Let us discuss these matters in an open way, and try to arrive at a quick conclusion.

When I cast my vote for this motion I am not fearful of the finger of scorn being pointed at me on the ground that I am for the socialistic doctrine of the Government buying and operating elevators and warehouses and buying and selling agricultural products. I am merely voting for it to open up the opportunity so that we can get together here and frame legislation to take care of this agricultural situation.

I want to see on this program, also, the Federal reserve law amended so that agricultural paper can be discounted for a longer time than is given to it under the present law. I want to see it extended to nine months, so that the paper which can be discounted can carry some benefit to the farmers of the country.

Mr. President, I have said about all I desire to say. I hope we can speed along. I hope that we can pass the appropriation bills and that we can all get together.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator from Mississippi has very kindly yielded to me that I may give notice that to-morrow, at the convening of the Senate, I shall address the Senate on the shipping bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not like to interrupt the Senator from Mississippi, but I desire to have action on two amendments of the House to amendments of the Senate to the State and Justice Departments appropriation bill. There will be no debate over it.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well. I yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not take any time to answer in detail the statements made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but I desire to refer to one in particular at this time, because I think perhaps the country ought to know facts about the statement made by the Senator in relation to the imports and exports of our Government.

From the speech of the Senator from Mississippi we were led to believe that no imports of any amount were coming into this country and that the tariff law had dried up all sources of exportations, and that our export trade had been virtually destroyed.

What are the facts? Only this morning there appeared in the Washington Post an editorial which read as follows:

> The overseas trade statistics, made public on Monday by the Department of Commerce, contain the gratifying intelligence that exports in November reached the highest point of the current year. The total value of the commodities sent abroad was $383,000,000, which is $12,000,000 more than the figure for October, $90,000,000 more than that for November, 1921, and $138,000,000 more than that for November, 1913. It is evident that in this important department of trade the trend is steadily upward. A large volume of exports generally denotes national prosperity, and in the present instance that is undoubtedly its meaning.

That does not look as if our exports are declining to a minimum. That does not look as if in the near future there will be no outlet at all for the products of the farm or the products of the factory; $383,000,000 worth of goods were exported during the month of November.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Would the Senator mind placing in the RECORD in this connection a statement of the exports and imports, by months, for the past 36 months?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not that information here, but I will be glad to insert it if I can secure it by to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. SMOOT. For the last three years?

Mr. HARRISON. For the last 36 months, by months.

Mr. SMOOT. That would take it into the war period, and that, of course, would be of little value.

Mr. HARRISON. Thirty-six months would take it into the war period?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is three years.

Mr. HARRISON. That does not take us back to the war period.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that right after the war the business of this country was even greater than it was the year before.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let the Senator take it for the last 24 months.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to put it in for the last 24 months.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator always watches those things. The exports have gone down constantly in the last 24 months, have they not?

Mr. SMOOT. In some months they did, and in some months they did not.

Mr. HARRISON. In most of the months they went down; gradually declined.

Mr. SMOOT. Not since the passage of the tariff bill, however, and it was the claim of the Senator that because of the passage of the tariff bill, that "iniquitous measure," as he designated it, our imports had decreased, and our exports had gone down to almost a minimum.

Mr. HARRISON. They have been so very, very small during the Republican administration that they amounted to practically nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. In the month of November of this year, 1922, our exports were $138,000,000 more than they were in November, 1913, when the Democratic Party was in power, when there was no war, and just before the breaking out of the war in Europe.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator read what they were in 1916?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures here as to that, but I will say to the Senator that I am perfectly willing to put into the RECORD a statement of our exports for every month and every year since 1913, if it will do any good.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it will do a lot of good.

Mr. SMOOT. In that connection I want to say that there is no question but that during the war period we exported everything that could possibly be gathered together. There is no need comparing those years with ordinary times, when there is no war. But I am citing last month's figures, a time when the Senator from Mississippi wants the people of this country to understand there was a stagnation in all our exports, and I call attention to the fact that they were $138,000,000 more in November, 1922, than in November, 1913, the month of November before the declaration of war in 1914. I only hope, as an American citizen, that our exports will continue to grow, and I see no reason why they should not, at least if European countries can get upon their feet again.

Mr. President, that $138,000,000 increase was notwithstanding the fact that the purchasing power of the people in Europe has been brought so low that in some countries the people can not even get food enough to eat. Yet, with all that, our exports, as I have stated, are $138,000,000 more for the month of November of 1922 than they were for the month of November, 1913.

Again, I think the figures will show that for the last three months our exports have been more than in any other three months outside of the war period. There is no one on either side of the Chamber who is not interested in legislation that would help the agriculturists of this country. I have no doubt but that the recommendations of President Harding in his last message, wherein he calls specific attention to the need for legislation by Congress, which the Senator from Mississippi has stated he is in favor of, will be carried out, and, as far as I am personally concerned, I want them carried out just as soon as it is possible to do it. The Senator from Mississippi can not denounce the Norris bill in any stronger terms than I do. He does not denounce its principles any more than I do. It is wrong in principle. I have not the least fear of its ever passing this body.

I simply rose to put into the RECORD at this time a statement of our exports. I am also happy to say that our imports have increased. The Senator from North Carolina knows that my estimate of the amount we would receive per annum after the passage of the tariff bill was $400,000,000 at the most. From what has occurred since the passage of the bill I think it will be more than $400,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. What does the Senator estimate the import duties will produce?

Mr. SMOOT. If our import duties continue on the same basis that they have since the passage of the bill, I will say to the Senator that I think the revenue will be about $450,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the amount I quoted to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I heard the Senator this afternoon state that he thought there would be 10 per cent of $450,000,000, and I say frankly now if the increase continues as it has in the last few months there is no doubt but what the sum realized from the importation of goods into this country will amount to $450,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had in view the Senator's statement when I made the suggestion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was boasting of our export trade for last month as compared with the same month of 1913. The fact that the foreign countries are buying from us, as export figures indicate, contradicts the gloomy statement made recently by the Republican ambassador to Great Britain. Just at the time when the cotton crop is moving to market, and knowing that Great Britain is one of the greatest consumers of the raw cotton of America, and that the farmer is trying to get a price that will yield a profit, this Republican ambassador gives out a statement that Europe is about to fail financially and that conditions can not go on much longer as they are now going.

I submit that the figures which have been called to our attention by the Senator from Utah flatly contradict the statement given out by the ambassador to Great Britain, Mr. Harvey. There are a great many people here who believe that he made the statement for the purpose of injuriously affecting the cotton market and the wheat market of the United States. It did seriously affect both. All sorts of things are resorted to in order to affect the markets here to aid the speculator in robbing the farmers of the United States.

This same man Harvey, who made the statement just referred to, not long ago rose on a solemn occasion in London and expressed serious doubt as to whether a woman has a soul. This man is representing a Christian nation——

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; misrepresenting it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Misrepresenting it, as my friend from Arkansas suggests. I submit that, acting as ambassador of the greatest Government on the globe, he cast a reflection upon every woman in the United States and in the world. Paul said to Timothy—

> The faith that is within thee was first in thy grandmother, Lois, and then in thy mother, Eunice.

Woman has been and is to-day the keeper of the faith.

If there is one or the other who has not a soul, it must be George Harvey and not the American woman. If I had been President of these United States when this ambassador made that speech in London, I would have recalled him by cable.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why not dismiss him and leave him there, and not bring him back?

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree that that would have been better. I would have employed whatever method would have humiliated and punished him most. The President of the United States owed it to the Christian Nation which he represents to call that man away as representative of our country to Great Britain. But this man who misrepresents our country, strange to say, has not been removed. He has done half a dozen things that have warranted his removal, but it is strange that certain influences here seem to get a man of this type in position and hold him there and it is impossible to get him out. It is strange indeed.

This man gave out the statement to which I referred, that Europe was just about on the edge of financial collapse, when it is not so. When Europe can buy more stuff from us and pay for it in the month just passed in 1922 than she could prior to the war it presents a situation that flatly contradicts the statement of George Harvey. His statement, in my judgment, was made for the purpose of affecting the grain market and the cotton market in the United States. I have seen letters to the effect that his statement broke the cotton market several dollars a bale. That means a good deal on a crop of nine or ten million bales. That means a great deal to the farmers who are struggling and are in dire distress to-day. But this man is permitted to get away with that sort of thing.

While Harvey stands in London telling us of the deplorable financial situation in Europe, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], one of the leaders on the other side of the Chamber, stands here and boasts of the purchasing power of Europe and how it has increased, how it has grown by leaps and bounds until to-day they are buying a great deal more, nearly $200,000,000 in one month, more than they did prior to the war, before its terrible devastation struck and cursed that country.

I submit that these are very remarkable contradictions. Either George Harvey is mistaken or the Senator from Utah is mistaken. I am satisfied the Senator from Utah is not mistaken, because I am sure he has given the figures correctly.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah complains that we are delaying the passage of the ship subsidy bill. I want to call attention to what happened in connection with the tariff bill—the most obnoxious and oppressive tariff bill ever written. It was kept hanging here for one year, and it was held back by the Republican Party and was not permitted to be put on the statute books until it was too late for the American people to know the evil effects of it before the election.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to be fair. I have never before stated on the floor of the Senate, during all of the discussions, that the Democratic Party held that bill back until just before election so the American people would not get the benefit of it. I am surprised to hear the Senator from Alabama now make the statement that the Republican Party held it back. The Senator knows that the Republican Party would have passed it months and months before it was finally passed. The Senator from Alabama was one among the Senators on his side of the Chamber who prevented its passage. If we had had that bill in operation six months before election, every argument that was made by Democratic speakers in the campaign would have been swept away from under the feet of my Democratic friends, because it would have demonstrated then, just as it is demonstrated to-day, what we said would take place.

I do not like to have the Senator say that it was the Republican Party that held it up until just before election. If anything could have defeated the party on account of the passage of the legislation, that very thing would have defeated it, because the Senator knows the result of a change of tariff law, when it has not had time to demonstrate its——

Mr. HEFLIN. Time to get in its awful work?

Mr. SMOOT. When it has not had time to demonstrate what it will accomplish, no matter whether we call it good or evil. Let it demonstrate itself. Of course, all sorts of charges could be made against it and it may be called anything. The sponsors of the bill could only say, "We do not believe it;" but if it had demonstrated itself as it is doing to-day and as it will do in the future, all we would have to do would be to point to the results, just as I have pointed to them this afternoon.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to have this confession from the Senator from Utah. It is a fact that they wanted to pass the bill the first week they brought it in here without discussing it. Senator SIMMONS insisted that its provisions be discussed. I remember that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] got up and asked that the first item be explained. He asked why that rate was fixed and why that item was put in the bill. The very intelligent and frank answer made was that it was put in there for the same reason that all the other items were put in there. That was the amazing and only information that was given on the subject. We commenced then to take up the bill, item by item, and call the attention of the American people to what was going to happen through that legislation. Some of the Republican newspapers commenced to arraign Republican Senators who sponsored the measure, and it was the exposures made by the Democratic Party in this body that got out to the people that turned the Republican majorities into Democratic majorities and changed the political complexion of both bodies in the recent election.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator can say that and claim it, but that does not necessarily prove it. I do not know which Senator we are to believe—the Democratic Senator who just preceded the Senator from Alabama or the Senator who is now addressing us. The distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said it was the shipping bill that did it. In the House discussions I notice there were other things said to have brought it about. Now, we are told by the Senator from Alabama that it was the tariff bill that brought it about.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am just referring to one of the things on which you have filibustered, or rather on which you have taken a great deal of time. That is the reason why I am commenting on that. I am showing that you had it under consideration for more than a year, and you will probably have the ship subsidy bill under consideration for more than two years. You do not think so, but you may.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how long it will take. It all depends upon whether the filibuster develops or not. I know just as well as I know I am standing upon this floor now that a filibuster can stop the passage of the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think a filibuster that would defeat it would be justified?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; I do not. That is a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself. I will admit frankly that four days were taken in the discussion of the tariff bill to settle the question of the rate on vinegar. I know that, and the Senator remembers it very well. I was not deceived as to why it took four days to pass the one item of vinegar. It was for the very purpose of holding up the passage of the bill until just before election.

Mr. HEFLIN. I hope the Senator will not consume the time of the Senate in discussing one item now, especially when the subject matter is so sour a thing as is vinegar. [Laughter.] We want to get along with business, and the Senator wants to take up my time discussing vinegar.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator said if the tariff bill could have been passed six months earlier and could have gone to the country the situation would have been different; that it would have worked miracles. Mr. President, I sincerely believe if it had been passed six months earlier, and we could have had the same discussion up to that time which we had before the bill was passed, there would not have been enough Republicans left on the other side to count. Look how it trimmed the Republicans out in the other House. Republican editors when they read the able speeches of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and of other Senators who discussed the tariff question, turned right around and said, "This thing ought to be defeated." I submit to the Senator from Utah and to the Senate and to the country when Democrats with a few grains of truth and a few flashes of light can so convince a Republican, can so enlighten him that he changes his position completely and fights the thing which he formerly supported, that is "going some"; yet we saw that happen right here in this country.

I am not going to make a speech. I merely wish to comment briefly upon an article which appears in the Washington Post this morning in reference to the leadership on the other side of the Chamber. It reads:

Senator JONES made a faint gesture in the direction of the only drastic step which the Republican leadership can take to put a stop to the wasting of time now going on in the Senate. This would be by making a motion to lay the Norris motion on the table. Such a motion is not debatable.

That is a gruesome confession to be made by the Republicans who talked to the newspaper man; that we are wasting time when we stand here and demand legislation for the farmers of America. Those farmers are part and parcel of this Government; they contribute to its support, to its strength, and its glory; they are patriotic people. Their boys went to the World War and fought under the flag. Some of them died and others of them came back, having been wounded in the cause of their country; but when we stand here and undertake to plead for legislation, not giving special privilege to the farmer but legislation that will put him on the same business basis as other classes of people, this article refers to our efforts as a waste of time.

Here is another paragraph to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate:

What the leadership is afraid of is that even if the Norris motion were tabled or defeated, the discussion on farm relief would go on just the same.

* * * * * * *

It is now clear the Norris motion can not prevail, but the tactics being employed to defeat the administration's program might easily throw the final test over into the new year, thus still further jeopardizing the chances of the subsidy bill.

Oh, Mr. President, that presents an awful picture to my mind. Here is a newspaper supporting the administration, the mouthpiece of the Republican side, criticizing those of us over here who demand legislation in the interest of agriculture that is very much needed by the farmers of the country. That newspaper states that we are continuing the discussion and we might continue it over into the new year. On the other side, it is suggested that that would jeopardize the President's program and would defeat the President's measure, which is aid for the shipping trust of the United States. I call the attention of the Republican Party here assembled and the country over and the attention of the people of the Republic at large to the fact that the Republicans are striving, with whip and spur, to force through a subsidy measure in the interest of the shipping trust, but are holding back all legislation looking to the benefit and relief of millions of people in the agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. President, I have been sitting in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry listening to the hearings and participating in them. I wish every man and woman in the country could have heard farmers and country bankers from the West testify, for their testimony was of such a character as to bring tears to the eyes of anyone who really had a heart. I heard those farmers testify that their land was mortgaged. I asked "And how did you get money or credit then?" They said, "We got it on our cattle, our horses and mules." I asked, "After you had mortgaged your stock, how did you get it then?" They replied, "We mortgaged our growing crops."

That is the condition which confronts us in the agricultural regions of the land. The farm lands are mortgaged; the rooftree that shelters the family is plastered over with mortgages; the live stock about the premises are covered over with mortgages; the crop which is growing in the fields is covered with a mortgage. That is the class of people who come to Congress and ask us to create a rural credits system that will enable them to break the chains of the bondage that binds them; yet this newspaper says that the fear on the part of the Republican leaders is that the Democrats will continue this discussion of relief for the farmers over into the new year and that the danger is that we shall defeat the President's pet scheme of a ship subsidy bill.

Oh, Mr. President, one can not serve two masters. A man must either be for God or mammon. He has got to choose in this Chamber whether he will be for the ship subsidy, with all its iniquities, or will be for the farmers of the country, their wives and their children who are clamoring and crying out for fair treatment at the hands of Congress.

I wonder why it is that the special interests can always get the ear of the Republican Party? Why is it that they are so powerful that they can get the President to come to Congress and deliver a message specifically naming a certain measure and urge immediate action? When the Republican leaders refer to other measures they do so in glittering generalities; they merely say, "We ought to have some sort of a rural credits system"—just shooting at the moon, and with little bird shot at that. However, when it comes to a ship subsidy they get a big Winchester with a steel bullet and they shoot right at the spot, and there is no time lost then; they go right to the issue.

Mr. President, in another place in this article it is said that—

This week's filibuster has already cost them $400,000.

Think of that, Mr. President! Whoever it is who is writing these inspired articles is employing new tactics against us. He states that we are costing the Government $400,000—doing what? Demanding of a stubborn Republican majority legislation in the interest of the agricultural classes of the United States. Are we wasting time? Is that a waste of time? Mr. President, time spent in demanding justice for the agricultural class is time well spent; and when we can not secure action by coaxing and appealing to the other side, if we can employ tactics which will force action to give relief to the farmers before the shipping trust is served, I say we are performing a patriotic duty; it is not a waste of time, but is time well spent.

I quote another statement from the article in the Washington Post:

The statement by Chairman JONES late in the evening that he had received information which led to more optimistic conclusions was most reassuring.

I wonder what sort of information that was; I wonder who gave such information.

What this information concerned was not disclosed.

Oh, Mr. President, how mysterious the workings of the ship-subsidy crowd! They are receiving information, but we do not know whence it came. It did not come over any particular wire running into this Chamber, I presume, but probably it came by wireless from somewhere out yonder. However, it is stated that the chairman of the committee did not disclose the character of the information he received. The article continues:

What this information concerned was not disclosed. It indicated the terrific Progressive counterattack of the last few days had failed and that the administration forces had been strengthened.

I want to know who it is that has gone back on the people; I want to know who it is that is ready to sheathe his sword; I want to know who it is that is ready to crawl and truckle to those who stand beyond the walls of this Capitol and demand that the ship subsidy bill be driven through? Who is it that is giving information that those who are opposed to ship subsidy are weakening? Where are they? Where is a single one of them who stood out against this thing who has now gone around and whispered to somebody somewhere in some mysterious fashion that he is about ready to go with the other side?

No, Mr. President, the ship subsidy bill ought not to be here at all; it ought to be considered, if it is to be considered at all, by the Congress which is coming in on the 4th of next March. Lame ducks ought not to settle this question.

Now, I desire to draw a picture of a defeated candidate repudiated at the polls. I may say first, however, that the people voted against some of them because they were not clear as to whether they were against the ship subsidy bill or not, and I dare say there is not a Republican who was elected at the recent election who would have stood up before his constituency three days before the election and told them if re-elected he would vote for the ship subsidy bill. Why should we act in that way with the rights and interests of the American people? They are entitled to be taken into our confidence.

Referring to the picture of the lame ducks, Mr. President, there he is at home submitting his case to the people. They say, "No; we do not indorse your record; we do not want to keep you there any longer." So they defeat him; he is repudiated by them, by the sovereign power of his district or State. Then he comes back to Washington, although his term ends on the 4th of March. The White House looms in the distance, and the President stands beckoning and smiling; the lame duck goes "laming" on up in that direction and the President whispers to him, "I will take thee into my bosom. You have been beaten at the polls, repudiated by your people; but you still have a vote, and I have an official plum tree."

Mr. President, of course I do not charge that the President would do a thing like that, but I am just wondering if he did; whether that fellow—remembering back yonder the expressed judgment of the people—hearing this beckoning call and seeing this winsome smile, with this tree full of plums just ready to shake and fall, would not think how nice it would be to sit up under it and pick out a nice, luscious, ripe plum and ask the President to knock it loose and let it fall into his tender care and keeping. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, in the House there were sixty-odd Members who had been defeated, and they put over this ship subsidy bill. But for their votes it would have been defeated in the House. Nobody can deny that. This is a serious thing we are talking about here to-day—the undertaking to give away, for a song, ships that cost this Government in cold coin $3,000,000,000—three thousand million dollars. We have a man at the head of the Shipping Board, a Mr. Lasker, who told the world that we could not sell the ships, and that there was no market for them, and threw off on them in various ways, and then said: "What will you give me for them?" Did you ever see a discreet, intelligent, worthy agent do anything like that? Then he comes along and says: "Now, we can only get about $200,000,000 for this three thousand million dollars' worth of ships, a fleet of the finest steel merchant ships that sail the sea. It is proposed to give them to the ship trust for $200,000,000, and loan them money at 2 per cent, and give them out of the pockets of the people a subsidy of $52,000,000 a year."

Mr. President, I am going to make a prediction now. The man who votes for this bill will be defeated two years from now if he is a candidate at that time. The people are not going to stand for this sort of a steal. I do not know how to characterize it in any other way. Anybody that would recommend the selling of this Government's property that cost three thousand million dollars for two hundred million dollars has something wrong with him. He ought to have his head examined, or his heart, one or the other, and maybe both. There is something wrong somewhere.

What would you do, as an individual, if you owned those ships and general business conditions were bad, as they say they are now? Why, you would say, "I will just throw my arms around them and sit quietly down and hold them until times get better." Why should the Government of the United States have this action taken by the administration that stood on every housetop in the Nation saying that it was going to take the Government out of business and put business into Government? This is business with a vengeance, is it not—selling three thousand million dollars' worth of ships for two hundred millions? And then, if you have not money enough for their upkeep, why, bow and smile to them and say, "We are going to make a special exception in your case. We are going to let you have money out of the Public Treasury at 2 per cent. We do not show that consideration to anybody else under the sun. You are a trust. You are going to get the benefit of these ships that the Government has built. We are going to make special pets of you and give you a subsidy of $52,000,000 a year, and on top of that we are going to loan you money at 2 per cent." There is no man living who can defend such a deal before the American people.

You can talk about wasting time all you please. You can talk about a filibuster. Some of you two years from now, after the election is past, will wish that this filibuster had lasted beyond your terms, so that you would not have had to go on record. I remember, when the Newberry case was up, standing here myself in nine different speeches upon the subject, and I warned my friends on the other side that when they voted to give Newberry a seat they were voting to give up their own seats; and the people trimmed every one but one of them, I believe, that voted for him.

Mr. President, I make the prediction again that Senators who vote for this ship subsidy will be defeated. That is the only way the people can get agents out of here that serve other interests and not their interests. They have a right to get them out. They ought to get them out. Whose Government is it, as I frequently ask? It is the Government of the people; and if Congress undertakes to ram something like this down the throats of the people, and does it with a lot of lame ducks, it adds to the outrageous aspects of the case, and it ought not to be tolerated.

Mr. President, there are some of us here who are interested in legislation for the farmer. We simply want a fair deal given to the farmers of the country. We want a rural credits system established that is suitable to the farmer's business, and we intend to see that that is done. I, for one, am not in favor of sidetracking for one hour legislation looking to the interest of the farmer and the relief of the farmer to consider any bill in favor of the special interests of America, especially such a measure as this ship subsidy bill. There ought not to be a man in this Chamber who would urge its consideration over these measures looking to the relief of the farmers of the country. As I have shown, the farmers' land is mortgaged; their homes are mortgaged; their cattle and horses and mules are mortgaged; their crops are mortgaged; all that they have is tied up; they are in a state of bondage, and we are undertaking to stretch forth the healing hand to give to them deliverance.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate closes its business to-day it recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have such high regard for the honesty and for the zeal of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that I regret to oppose almost any legislation that he proposes; but, Mr. President, to my mind the bill involved in the pending motion is so revolutionary and is so much out of order, there is so much to be condemned in it, that I could not think for one moment of supporting the bill. It is paternalism run mad, and I never could bring myself to vote for any bill that would put the Government deeper into business. In fact, I wish that the Government were out of all kinds of business that it is in. We have had a sad experience in the past by reason of the Government dipping into business, and this bill goes much further than we did, even in war times. It is thoroughly unconstitutional. It is thoroughly out of keeping with the times. Therefore I could not even vote to lay aside temporarily the shipping bill and take up the Norris bill, notwithstanding I confess that I have a good deal of difficulty in deciding which one is the more objectionable. I am almost in the position of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. However, I will not do as he did, and fail to vote. I will stand my ground, and vote for the lesser evil, I hope, with a view of having them both defeated.

Mr. President, I presume that there is but little divergence of opinion in the Senate about trying to enact some legislation beneficial to the agricultural interests of our country. I am certainly heartily in favor of passing a proper bill at the earliest possible moment. I am deeply concerned in agriculture, and certainly for the last several years the producers have not received anything like they should have received. In my part of the country, in addition to financial troubles, we have had the pest of the boll weevil, which has infected pretty much the whole cotton-growing country; and my State, particularly this year, has suffered more in proportion than any other State in the Union. Where year before last we raised in that State about 1,600,000 bales of cotton, last year we made a little less than 800,000 bales, and this year we will not raise over 500,000 or 530,000 bales; so that is a great slump. Our sister State of Georgia is about in the same condition. The situation in North Carolina is not quite so bad, but the boll weevil is going in that direction, and no doubt next year will have enveloped the whole cotton area. Therefore we should do something to aid the farmers in a proper way.

I am not one of those who believe that all ills can be cured by loaning people money. In fact, I am not much in sympathy with the propaganda of the times, encouraging people to get deeper in debt. My training has been to borrow as little as possible. It is not so hard to borrow, but the time for payment is the time when we encounter great difficulty. However, there are times when people of all occupations should be accommodated by credit in the proper way for a reasonable time at the lowest possible interest. I hope the Banking and Currency Committee will expedite their deliberations and will soon report a bill, and if we can not agree upon it at once we can soon whip it into shape, and I hope it will be passed in a few days.

In the meantime, I do not think that any efforts should be spared to expose the iniquities of the shipping bill. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce, and I confess with some humiliation that my education in regard to ships is limited. I have had very little experience along that line, but with the desire to become better posted, I attended most diligently the meetings of our committee, held some time ago, with Mr. Lasker before us, and those meetings extended to late hours at night; so that at physical inconvenience I attended those meetings in order to get better posted and to see if I could aid in any way in solving the problem of disposing of the Government's ships.

We find that the Government has this large tonnage on hand, built during the war, and built at enormous cost. I am not one to complain about that, however, and to find fault. It was necessary to build them at the time, regardless of cost, and there was no one to blame. It was thought to be necessary. I am only sorry that there was so much profiteering in their construction.

However that may be, that should be counted as a cost of the war, and we should now make the best disposition possible of those ships. I hesitated a good deal about supporting the American merchant marine act of 1920, but I was young on the committee, had been on it only a short time, and that was thought the best solution of the problem at that time. I have watched the disposition of those ships since that time.

This is a large problem which we have to dispose of. It is one which requires the very best thought in the country, and I was in hopes that the Government would be able to dispose of those ships at a reasonable per cent of the cost, at least; but it seems that for the last few years the demand for shipping has declined greatly, and those ships, which were built at a cost of something like $200 a ton, could not be disposed of for more than $30 a ton, even the steel ships. That was a great disappointment to the taxpayers of this country.

I confess I have been greatly disturbed as to the best disposition we could make of the ships. I am very much interested in the subject, and I attended the hearings to which I have already referred with a great deal of interest and an open mind, to see if I could get some information; but I must say that I was greatly disappointed at those hearings, and I had reluctantly to come to the conclusion that a proper effort had not been made to dispose of the ships.

I am opposed to Government ownership of railroads, ships, or any other so-called public utility, and I would take great delight in seeing those ships disposed of to private owners at the earliest possible moment, so that the Government could retire completely from the shipping business, but I am totally at variance with the methods which have been pursued by the Shipping Board. I do not like to say harsh things against people; I prefer to think well of everybody. I know most of the members of that board, or a great many of them, at least, very pleasantly, and I was in hopes they would make a success of the operation and disposition of the ships, but after listening to Mr. Lasker—who, I am sorry to say, in my opinion is about the whole show, he having been selected apparently for a purpose, which he has about performed—I was surprised to find that the efforts of this board had not been to make money by operating our ships. In fact, if they had tried to make a failure they could not have succeeded better than they have, notwithstanding the tonnage of the world is no larger than it was just preceding the war. Yet we have something like a thousand steel ships tied up.

When Congress donated $20,000,000 to buy corn for the Russians, it was publicly stated that the ships of the Shipping Board were not in condition to convey that corn across the ocean. At that time I made some remarks on the subject and criticized the board, stating that that was a very poor advertisement in a campaign to sell the ships when we had over 900 tied up, decrepit, lame, and halt, ships which could not carry the grain we were donating to relieve the suffering in Russia. A few days after that public talk we were notified in the Senate that they could carry the grain across. I guess that woke them up. That is a demonstration of the incompetency of that board, and of their methods of advertising our ships.

To my great astonishment Mr. Lasker said—and I do not want to misquote him—that if there were cargoes to be had, and if there were individual shippers who would take those cargoes, he would not allow the Government ships to come in competition with them. In other words, they did not go after business, but tied the ships up, and would not let them get business. He further stated, to my astonishment, that he was spending a large part of his time in trying to organize companies to buy those ships from this board.

I do not like to criticize the administration, notwithstanding I am not a member of the majority party; it is our Government, Mr. President, and I like to accord to all Government agencies the thought that they are doing the very best they can. But after listening to Mr. Lasker for a long time on different evenings, and seeing the performance of his experts, I reluctantly arrived at the conclusion that his effort was to belittle the ships, instead of trying to give them their proper standing in the world. It seemed that his main thought was to cast reflections upon the former administration on account of the cost of the ships and the mistakes they had made. It may be true that ships did cost too much, and I think they did, and it may be true that there were too many built; but the former administration were not trying to build ships for the sake of building them; they were building them for the purpose of winning the war. It seemed to give Mr. Lasker great satisfaction to cast all the slurs he could about mistakes which had been made. I have never thought it was very profitable to go back and complain about the past, or find fault with somebody. It seems to me the way to build up a country, particularly with the taxpayers' money, is to try to avoid duplicating the mistakes which have been made in the past.

So I am not surprised at the financial failure of the Shipping Board. It seems that Mr. Lasker had no experience with ships; in fact, he admitted so, and made light of his own knowledge. He hardly would have known a ship from a two-horse wagon, said he had no experience with shipping, and that he took the position reluctantly. My understanding about it is that he is an advertising agent, and I think he has advertised the inefficiency of our ships most liberally.

It seems to me a peculiar thing to hire a man to sell something, and then for him to go out and malign it, and blackguard it, and belittle it. That is about the best course he could take to give them away. If I had a kicking mule, I would not advertise that he was a kicking mule. I might reluctantly have to answer the question if I were asked, but I would not tell that he was a balking mule, and that sort of thing, all at one time. I would not misrepresent him but I would not want to magnify his faults. It seems to me they have done that in the case of these ships.

The board seems to be incompetent to run the ships, and they had to go out and hire some men at salaries of $35,000 a year each. I am one who believes that a laborer is worthy of his hire, and I do not blame a man for asking as much as he wants for his services, and if the other man is willing to pay that is his lookout; but it seemed to me that, with the great number of people in the shipping business in the United States, men who were experts in operating ships could have been employed at much lower salaries than that. When we think about the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States being not more than half of what one of these men is getting, and when a hard-working Senator comes here and works day and night, with all the vicissitudes of being reelected, and draws only about one-fourth of that salary, it seems that the Shipping Board are trying to find a way to dispose of money instead of trying to save it. So no one need be surprised at the result. In fact, it would have been most remarkable if that board, operating about 400 steel ships, I believe, with something like a thousand tied up, could have made ends meet.

I am firmly of the opinion that the right way to dispose of those ships would have been to put them in active business and to have competed with the ships of this country and the ships of the world, and wherever there were cargoes to have sent after them, and tried to help build up new routes, and tried to let the people who owned ships know that the Government was in the business and that the Government could operate ships. Then those private owners would have gone in and bought a large number of those ships at reasonable prices.

Now we have to dispose of them in some way. I would dislike very much to see the Government in the shipping business permanently. But there are worse things than that. If we could not get rid of them at a reasonable price, and if we could not get rid of them without paying people big bonuses and subsidies to operate them hereafter, I would favor the Government operating them itself until shipping in the world becomes more normal. Then possibly we could dispose of them.

I do not think that it is commendable for a legislator or anyone else to "knock" a plan unless he has something better to propose. The slight degree of success I have attained in the world has not been by knocking down the other fellow's propositions or destroying something, but it has been by trying to construct and build up. It is much more agreeable to me to take that course than it is the course of "knocking." So we either have to pass the subsidy bill, it seems, or do something that is better. If I had it in my power, the line of action I would pursue would be to see if we could not get Congress to take a sane view of the situation. This is a serious matter. The taxpayers of the country have something like $3,000,000,000 invested in these ships. Considering the distressing times, the scarcity of funds, the shortness of crops, and the great distress that is in the country, the rising cost of living and the increasing taxes, we should do something to see if we can not put the people of the country in a better condition.

So it seems to me that it is a good time now for Congress just sanely to take a new stock of our situation and of our laws and of what we are going to do in the future. World conditions have changed in the last few years. We are now a creditor Nation instead of a debtor Nation. Therefore, we have to look to different ways of doing business. The time has arrived when we might have to adopt revolutionary laws. In fact, I think we should take a new start and revise our conditions generally. Every Member of Congress should approach these subjects in a calm, honest, fair way, with a view to the best interests of the taxpayers of the country. The mere fact that a measure has been introduced by one side or the other or is advocated by one side or the other, should not justify other people in opposing it. They ought to advocate something of real merit, of real constructive quality, something that would help our people permanently. If we do not do that, we are going to encourage the voters of the country to become more discouraged and more demoralized than ever before. I am glad that I live in a conservative section of the country. Our section has a greater proportion of original citizens and of pure-blooded Americans than any section of the country. I noticed the other day what the Vice President had to say with respect to that, that we were the balance wheel of the whole country; that we were the conservative element of the country. It is time that we get that principle inculcated all over the United States.

It pains me to hear Senators make speeches like they sometimes do here. I noticed the other day that the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], for whom I have great respect and in whom I have great confidence, admitted that we could not pass any railroad legislation at this session of Congress. Whatever is for the good of the people ought to be passed at any time, and nothing could be done that would help out more than to revise our railroad legislation. It ought to condemn and damn any man forever who stands in the way of constructive legislation. Yet we are told that we can not at this session enact any railroad legislation. I do not care whether this session ends the 4th of March or whether it ends the 1st of February, we ought to sit down and get together and pass laws that would help the country, without even a week's debate. If we do not do it we are bringing about our own destruction.

Now, in the matter of the shipping bill, while I feel that I am not an expert at all, yet I have studied the subject somewhat, and I would suggest that we take a comprehensive view of all the laws on shipping and see what are injurious and what are beneficial. If there is anything injurious, we ought to be men enough to repeal it even if it might make us unpopular with certain people in the country. I am told that there is a good deal in the seamen's act that militates against the successful operation of our ships. Instead of trying to wink at a proposition or trying to evade it, we ought to meet it and every proposition squarely. We ought to be men enough to legislate for the people as a whole in the country and for no class and no section. If I had it in my power I would repeal, before 6 o'clock to-night, every law that gives special privileges to any class of people in the country.

I received the other day a copy of American Industries, a magazine published in this country, from which it appears that they have submitted the ship subsidy question to a large number of prominent business men throughout the United States. It seems to be almost the unanimous conclusion of a great number of the big business men who replied to the questionnaires that there is something wrong with the shipping laws of the country. We ought to know what is the matter. If we do not know, we ought to get experts to tell us. We ought to study what is right and what is wrong in those laws.

In the first place, I will state that the whole shipping bill, to my mind, is on the wrong basis. It is a kind of hothouse proposition. We may just as well get rid of the idea that the Government can make people rich by taking from one class and giving to another class. The bill is wrong at the bottom and it is wrong at the top. It starts out with a subsidy on the theory that here is an infant industry, "sucking the bottle," and we have to support it. That is a wrong proposition. What we need is that the people of the country go to work. Any enterprise that needs special nursing and special hothouse attention is not worthy of help.

On the other hand, we put in the bill a provision that if a man makes over a very small per cent that surplus is to be taken away from him and put in the Treasury. That is a wrong proposition. That is against the principles that have made this country great. We should not expect people to invest their money in an enterprise, to develop the resources of the country, whether it be in the field or in the mine or in the factory or on the sea or anywhere else, asking the owner of capital to take all the hazards of the business, when he has worked a little bit harder than somebody else and taken care of his money and invested it, and then have the Government come along and say, "I will take all that you earn above a very small percentage." That is a wrong principle. We never would have built up this country if we had had any such principle prevailing. It is wrong in business. It is wrong in every way.

I know something in a personal way of water-power companies, for instance. After a man takes all the chance of developing, all the risk that he runs by combating the elements and all the uncertainties of the business and the customers, it is wrong, then, for the Government to come along and say, "If you were exceedingly fortunate one year, if you sat up all night and worked hard and lived scantily, so that you made more than a certain little per cent, we are going to take it away from you." We will not be able to get people to go into enterprises of that sort if we adopt that principle. I do not wonder that people will not buy ships under those circumstances.

I can not understand how it is expected that we should give a subsidy with these ships. They are practically given to the operators. They have the oceans to run upon, with no tracks to lay, no grass to cut, no weeds to keep down, and with very little expense of operation. Why they can not make money I do not understand. If we can not compete with the ships of the other nations of the world, it is time that we learn how to do it.

As to the seamen's act, to which I have referred, I notice in the magazine, American Industries, an editorial on page 6, in which, speaking of what we will have to do to make a merchant marine, it said:

> Restrictive labor laws must be repealed; without their repeal no intelligent shipping company will take over Government ships at any price commensurate with this present cost in the expectation of making them profitable or of maintaining an efficient and loyal organization.

On page 7, in an article by Mr. Frederick J. Koster, it is said that—

> In many ways foreign ships can be operated much more economically than American ships, primarily because wages and living conditions of foreign ships' officers and crews are very much lower. It is generally accepted as an axiom that where the overhead of an American manufacturer is higher than his foreign competitor, the former must either sell his goods at less or must sell better goods to offset the difference, or else go out of the foreign-trade business.

I was interested the other day in hearing the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] read from the opinion of Robert Dollar. Robert Dollar is a shipping man, and must be a man of great experience, who knows what he is talking about. On page 20 of the same magazine he said:

> As Congress will not change or modify the laws that drove the American merchant marine off the ocean before the late European war, I am in favor of a subsidy. I claim, however, that if our laws and regulations were the same as our competitors', we would not require any assistance from our Government. This applies only to cargo ships engaged in the foreign trade. No foreign government gives subsidy or aid to their cargo steamers, and they are able to operate successfully; for this reason I say that under the same conditions American shipowners could successfully operate American ships.
> It may surprise your readers to know that until my company put three American 10,000-ton cargo steamers in the foreign trade of the Pacific Ocean, running from the Pacific coast ports to the Orient and around the world, there was not one privately owned American steamer engaged in this great Pacific Ocean trade. All the American ships engaged in this trade were owned by the Shipping Board.
> I write on the question of subsidies without any bias, as, with the restrictions proposed in the subsidy bill, I could not take advantage of it.

So it seems he could not take advantage of it even if it has become a law. Mr. Dollar continues:

> A sharp distinction must be made, however, between cargo and fast mail steamers. They can not and are not operated by any nationality unless either subsidized or paid a large compensation for carrying the mails. Every nation assists their fast mail steamers in one way or another, and as all American steamers cost 20 to 30 per cent more to operate than those of other nationalities, it goes without saying that it would be impossible for them to compete without being subsidized.
> The "seamen's act," or "La Follette bill," as it is called, was so vicious and bad that several sections of it have never been enforced. The latest legislation is the joker put on the tail end of the tariff bill, which provides that all repairs made to American ships in foreign countries shall pay 50 per cent duty. As American prices are more than 50 per cent higher, it goes without saying that American ships are penalized 50 per cent over and above what their competitors have to pay. I only mention these two bills, as they are the very latest. There are many more, but too numerous for this article.

I have the kindliest feeling in the world for people who work; I want them to realize everything they possibly can from their labor, all that it is worth, and all they can reasonably get, whatever is fair and honest and equitable; they ought to be paid good wages and be encouraged to work harder; but if there is anything in our laws which would restrict the operation of our ships, we ought to repeal it. Therefore, Mr. President, what I would undertake to do would be to amend existing law.

Our shipping is encumbered in its operation by the tariff. I hope it will soon be demonstrated that we will have to amend the tariff act in some respects so that we may encourage our shipping. Then, I would encourage railroad connection with the ships; I would aid in that way.

Then I would turn the Lasker propaganda for the sale of our ships into a propaganda to induce the people of the United States to patronize our ships. I am ashamed to note that Government employees—even officials of the United States—when they are compelled to go abroad on business of the Government frequently travel in ships of other nations. That should not be the case; and prevention of that is one thing in this bill that I must say deserves a little commendation, although it is about the only good thing in the bill. I am glad, however, that it has some good in it.

Mr. President, I understand an executive session is desired. I have not quite finished my remarks.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Would the Senator like to conclude his remarks to-night?

Mr. DIAL. No; I have no objection to deferring them until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With a view of determining my own conduct, because I have a slight notion of making a short speech of from three and one-half to five hours—I am not certain which—I should like to inquire of the manager of the bill whether it is contemplated to adjourn very soon or whether it is contemplated to hold a night session?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We do not contemplate a night session to-night, unless the Senator desires to proceed to-night.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; then I will postpone my infliction. I do not desire any particular time for the infliction, because I shall not enjoy it myself, and I shall not take any pleasure in the suffering of the Senate; but I thought that if it were necessary I would impose the infliction to-night, and if it were not necessary I would do so at some time hereafter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We will not require the Senator to do that to-night.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; then I am perfectly satisfied.

CREDENTIALS OF SENATOR KING.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the Governor of Utah certifying to the election of WILLIAM H. KING as a Senator from the State of Utah for the term beginning March 4, 1923, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

STATE OF UTAH,

KING was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Utah a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1923.

Witness: His excellency, Gov. Charles R. Mabey, and the great seal of the State of Utah hereto affixed at Salt Lake City, Utah, this 29th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.] CHAS R. MABEY.

By the governor:

H. E. CROCKETT, Secretary of State.

REPORTS ON RUSSIAN RELIEF (S. DOC. NO. 277).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers and documents, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by the act of Congress for the relief of the distressed and starving people of Russia, approved December 22, 1921, I transmit herewith reports from the American Relief Administration, the United States Grain Corporation as fiscal agent for the Purchasing Commission for Russian Relief, and the comptroller of the American Relief Administration, which organizations were designated to carry out the provisions of the said act.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 20, 1922.

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTORS OF CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the provisions of law governing the choice of directors on the part of the Senate, the Chair hereby appoints the Senator from Michigan, Mr. COUZENS, as a director of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, and the Senator from Vermont, Mr. DILLINGHAM, as a director of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, both for the term of a single Congress, beginning March 4, 1923.

CLAIMS SETTLED BY THE SHIPPING BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 278).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, made pursuant to law, of claims arbitrated or settled by agreement from October 16, 1921, to October 15, 1922, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REINTERMENT OF SOLDIER DEAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Quartermaster General of the Army, transmitting a list of American soldier dead returned from overseas, consisting of the remains of six enlisted men to be reinterred in the Arlington National Cemetery December 28, 1922, at 2.30 p. m., which was ordered to lie on the table for the information of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR DEPARTMENTS OF STATE AND JUSTICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 2, 5, 19, 24, and 25 to the bill (H. R. 13282) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and concurring therein; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 and concurring therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: "Undersecretary of State and the 'counselor for the department' shall hereafter be designated 'Undersecretary of State'"; receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 14 and concurring therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That the automobile purchased from the appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes for the fiscal year 1923 shall hereafter be for the exclusive use of the Bureau of Investigation under the control of the Attorney General."

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. Last year, when the Attorney General got his $500,000, he promised us he was going to have the jails so full of profiteers that their legs would be sticking out of the windows. I see that another $500,000 is asked for. Has he made any report of that first $500,000?

Mr. CURTIS. The first $500,000 resulted in the examination of 472 cases by the board, and recommendations for prosecution in over 240 cases. Settlements have been made in two cases, the Government getting back $1,100,000, and in two others checks have been received, one for $250,000 and another for $170,000, in these two cases, and settlement in two or three other cases which will run the amount up to about $1,700,000.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who has been indicted?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know who have been. I am not acquainted with the facts.

I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF ALIENS UNDER BOND.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Immigration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 279) to permit to remain within the United States certain aliens admitted temporarily under bond in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the immigration act of May 19, 1921, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That aliens who entered the United States before March 7, 1922, in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921, and were temporarily admitted under bond, may, if otherwise admissible, and if not subject to deportation for other causes, be permitted by the Secretary of Labor to remain in the United States without regard to the provisions of such act of May 19, 1921. In the case of any alien so permitted to remain the bond shall be canceled.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator if it will lead to any discussion.

Mr. COLT. It will not. If it does, I will have it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 20, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy revelations are so merciful and gracious that we are unequal to the task of definition, but read our hearts and accept their offerings. The Lord bestow upon our country blessings of peace, plenty, and prosperity. Make these days for all the gladdest days in all the year, and may we have the spirit of Him who sees what others see and feels what others feel. Oh, may a great wave of good will sweep over our land and let the converting, controlling, and restoring Spirit of God come to the world and make it new and fresh and clean. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I presented a conference report upon the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican wars, and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, for printing under the rule. I find that there is a mistake in the printed report, and I now ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report printed in the RECORD of yesterday, and to resubmit the corrected report and have it printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the first report will be withdrawn, and the gentleman submits a new report to be printed under the rule.

There was no objection.

SCRAPPING OF NAVAL VESSELS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the reply of the Secretary of the Navy to House Resolution 457, in respect to compliance with the agreement reached upon the scrapping of naval vessels.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein the statement of the Secretary of the Navy referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

(No. 188.)

REQUESTING THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, IF NOT INCOMPATIBLE WITH THE PUBLIC INTEREST, TO COMMUNICATE TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FULL INFORMATION TOUCHING THE NUMBER OF VESSELS OF WAR THAT HAVE BEEN SCRAPPED OR DISPOSED OF BY THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER POWERS WHO WERE PARTICIPANTS IN THE CONFERENCE ON THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT SINCE THE ADJOURNMENT OF THAT CONFERENCE.

(H. Res. 457.)

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, December 14, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. BUTLER: Referring to information requested in House Resolution 457 of December 1, 1922, requesting the Secretary of the Navy, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives full information touching the number of vessels of war that have been scrapped or disposed of by the United States and other powers who were participants in the Conference on the Limitation of Armament since the adjournment of that conference, and including vessels of war, whether defined by any treaty signed at that conference or not, I am sending you such information as I possess for transmittal to the House of Representatives. The information follows:

UNITED STATES.

Ships required to be scrapped under terms of treaty:

The Maine and Missouri have been sold and are being broken up by the purchaser.

All completed battleships required to be scrapped are out of commission except the Connecticut, which will soon be placed out of commission.

The Delaware and North Dakota are not required to be scrapped until the Colorado and West Virginia are completed.

No steps have been taken to comply with Article III, part 2 (b) of the treaty in the case of the Oregon and Illinois.

Work has been suspended on vessels under construction.

SHIPS NOT DEFINED BY THE TREATY.

Since February 6, 1922, the following ships have been sold or otherwise disposed of: One destroyer, 2 monitors, 1 dynamite gun vessel, 25 submarines, 1 gunboat.

The above list does not include vessels stricken from the Navy list since February 6, 1922, but not yet sold.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Ships required to be scrapped under terms of the treaty:

Broken up: St. Vincent, battleship; Indefatigable, battle cruiser; Temeraire, battleship.

Sold (to be broken up or rendered unfit for warlike purposes under terms of treaty): Bellerophon, battleship; Commonwealth, battleship; Hercules, battleship; Dreadnought, battleship; Indomitable, battle cruiser; Neptune, battleship; Collingwood, battleship

Sold (not yet completely dismantled): Superb, battleship.

Ready for sale (mutilations completed at dockyard): Orion, battleship; New Zealand, battle cruiser.

Being prepared for sale (mutilations being carried out at dockyards), with estimated date of completion of mutilations: Monarch, battleship, October 14, 1922; Conqueror, battleship, November, 1922; Princess Royal, battle cruiser, November, 1922; Agincourt, battleship, November, 1922; Erin, battleship, December, 1922; Lion, battle cruiser, end of December, 1922.

The status of the Colossus and Agamemnon is unknown, except that the Agamemnon is being used as a target ship.

The Australian Government has decided to scrap the battle cruiser Australia.

Following ships have been sunk: One cruiser, 1 destroyer, 1 submarine.

Following ships not affected by the treaty have been sold since February 6, 1922: Two cruisers, 4 light cruisers, 6 destroyers, 2 torpedo boats, 24 submarines.

This does not include ships on the disposal list but not sold.

JAPAN.

Ships required to be scrapped under terms of treaty:

Certain preliminary work of removal of guns and turrets, and in some cases removal of armor and engines, is being done on the battleships Hizen, Ikoma, Ibuki, Mikasa, Kashima, Katori, and Kurama.

The battleships Satsuma, Aki, and Settsu have been placed in the fourth reserve.

Work has been suspended on the battleships Kaga and Tosa and the battle cruisers Amagi, Akagi, Atago, and Takao. No work had been done on the last two except to lay the keels. Work on the machinery of the battle cruisers Amagi and Akagi is proceeding with the evident intention of completing these ships as aircraft carriers as permitted under the treaty

The Japanese ministry of marine has stated that while work preliminary to scrapping will be done the hulls will not be broken up or sunk until the treaties have been ratified by all the powers.

SHIPS NOT DEFINED BY TREATY.

The following were removed from the effective list on March 29, 1922: One battleship, 1 mine layer, 3 coast defense ships, 1 cruiser, 1 gunboat, 9 small destroyers, 5 submarines, 13 torpedo boats.

Of the above only the battleship is definitely known to have been disposed of.

The following has been wrecked: One light cruiser.

FRANCE.

Ships required to be scrapped under terms of the treaty: France is not required to scrap any completed ships. One of the ships she was permitted to retain, the France, has been wrecked. France had five battleships under construction at the beginning of the war that have not been completed. It is proposed to complete one of these, the Bearn, as an aircraft carrier. Under the treaty another could be completed to replace the France. No steps, so far as known, have been taken to dispose of these ships.

SHIPS NOT DEFINED BY TREATY.

Since February 6, 1922, the following have been disposed of: One battleship, 2 armored cruisers, 2 light cruisers, second line, and 9 torpedo boats.

ITALY.

Ships required to be scrapped under terms of treaty:

Italy is not required to scrap any completed ships under the treaty.

The battleship Caracciolo, under construction, has been disposed of, and the contracts for the battleships Colombo, Colonna, and Morosini annulled.

The battleship Leonardi da Vinci, which Italy may retain under the treaty and which was salvaged after sinking, will not be reconstructed.

SHIPS NOT DEFINED BY THE TREATY.

Italy has not disposed of any vessels of war since the adjournment of the conference.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY.

House Resolution 472 (Rept. No. 1303).

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Jane Rome, widow of John Rome, late an employee of the House of Representatives on the soldiers' roll, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as said employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said John Rome.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, John Rome was the oldest employee on the soldiers' roll of the House, having served continuously from the 1st of August, 1878, until November 6 of this year. This is the usual resolution, and I move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes on the matter of procedure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] called up the resolution submitting a constitutional amendment touching tax-exempt securities yesterday, it was with the understanding that the matter would be disposed of during the day. It was not possible to so dispose of it, and I do not believe we are justified in giving further time to the subject at this time, and thus delay the program of the appropriation bills. Having talked the matter over with gentlemen interested, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] will this morning ask for recognition to call up the Agricultural appropriation bill. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that we hope to dispose of the Agricultural appropriation bill, the Interior Department appropriation bill, and the Post Office appropriation bill before the new year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman did not confer with me about dispensing with further consideration at this time of the constitutional amendment, but it is satisfactory.

Mr. MONDELL. I felt confident it would be, Mr. Speaker. I do, however, apologize, because I ordinarily do confer with the gentleman from Tennessee. He is always kindly disposed.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman tell us about when the resolution will be called up, if at all?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, my present thought is that it would probably be called up about the second week in January, providing that in the meantime the gentleman from Texas prints his speech of yesterday in order that we may know what his arguments are before we take the resolution up again. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARNER. I want to say, if the gentleman will permit, if the withholding of the speech will withhold the consideration of the resolution, I shall withhold it.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we are all anxious and pining to know what the gentleman's arguments were. Unfortunately, I was unable to be present in the Chamber when his speech was delivered, and I am anxious to read his arguments.

Mr. GARNER. I want to say to the gentleman if the calling up of this resolution is conditioned on printing the speech in the RECORD, it will not be called up the balance of this Congress, and I doubt if it will be.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman desire further time in which to change his speech before inserting it in the RECORD?

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481), the Agricultural appropriation bill; and, pending that, I should like to have some agreement with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] in regard to general debate. How much time does the gentleman from Texas want on that side?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire, so far as requests have been filed with me, an hour and a half.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the Agricultural appropriation bill be limited to three hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the other by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that general debate on the Agricultural bill be limited to three hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] and one-half by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish the Chair would notify me when I have used 20 minutes, if I use that much.

Mr. Chairman, the total annual appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the current fiscal year amounted to $46,929,173. Of this amount $10,000,000 was appropriated for road construction. The amount recommended in this bill is $68,781,553, and of this amount $29,300,000 is appropriated for road construction. That resulted in the following situation with respect to the regular estimates. Eliminating the appropriation for the construction of roads under authorizations previously made by Congress the pending bill carries appropriations amounting to $442,940 in excess of the estimates made by the Bureau of the Budget. It carries $440,620 less than the current appropriation bill. That situation results largely from the policy adopted by the committee with respect to a small number of items under which work has been and is being carried on by the Agricultural Department toward a very definite end. For example, since about 1918 the Department of Agriculture has been engaged in the program of eradicating the barberry bush as a means of stopping epidemics of black rust which affects not only wheat but a large number of other grain crops. Last year we increased the amount of appropriation from approximately $150,000 to $350,000. The Budget Bureau reduced the amount from $350,000 to $200,000 in the current estimates. The committee felt that, inasmuch as this work was proceeding toward the definite end of the eradication of the barberry and hence of black rust, and in view of the fact that appropriations in aggregate to accomplish the work will depend somewhat upon the length of time that it takes to complete the job, it would be real economy to place it on a basis of the appropriation of last year. It is estimated that with an appropriation of $200,000 it will take six and a half years to complete the work with a total appropriation of $1,375,000. At the rate of $350,000 a year it will take two and a half years with an approximate expenditure of $1,025,000, while at $500,000 it will take approximately a year and a half with an appropriation of $900,000 in the aggregate. The committee felt therefore it would be real economy to continue the appropriations on the basis of the current fiscal year. We did not feel justified in increasing the amount beyond the amount carried in the current appropriation bill. And in that same way the committee restored the item for the eradication of cattle ticks to the figure of this year which was reduced in the Budget estimate by $160,000.

In that work the Bureau of Animal Industry has now eradicated the cattle tick from about 70 per cent of the territory originally infested. That work is proceeding along the line of a definite program of eradicating the tick altogether from this country. There will be no economy whatever, in the view of the committee, in reducing the appropriation for this purpose, because of the longer time it will take to complete the job, and the possibility, and perhaps the probability, of reinfestations of territory already cleaned, which are always a menace so long as the cattle tick remains in the country at all.

Much the same policy was followed in the case of the appropriations for the soil survey and for farmers' cooperative demonstrations.

The bill carries provision for the completion of the program of reorganization of the department, which was begun last year. The work of the Department of Agriculture falls into substantially three classes—research, regulation, and extension. Last year we created in this bill a director of research and a director of regulatory work, and under these two directors the work of research and the work of regulation have been coordinated. We complete that reorganization this year by creating a director of extension. Under this director the work which is of the character of extension work will all be concentrated. This will result in taking from the Division of Publications the office of exhibits and the office of motion pictures and making these offices a part of the extension service. The office of home economics is taken out of the States Relations Service and made a separate bureau under the title of Bureau of Home Economics.

I want to refer to just one other matter, and then I shall be through, unless some one wants to ask me questions about some items in the bill. That is the appropriation for road construction. Under the act of November 9, 1921, Congress authorized an appropriation of $65,000,000 this year for the construction of roads. The pending bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to allot the full amount of the authorization of $65,000,000 to the States and to enter into contractual obligations with the States for the highway construction contemplated under that authorization. The bill, however, does not carry a total appropriation of $65,000,000. It carries an appropriation of $29,300,000, that being the sum which it is estimated will be withdrawn from the Treasury during the next fiscal year on account of this authorization.

Gentlemen will understand, of course, that there is a lag of from 6 to 18 months between the time when the sums authorized to be expended by Congress are allotted to the States and the time when the withdrawal of the sums from the Treasury becomes necessary. Consequently, it is not necessary now to provide an appropriation of the total $65,000,000 authorized under this act for the fiscal year.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Looking at the hearings, on page 374, it would seem that the statement of the gentleman is not consistent with the statement made by Mr. MacDonald, of the Highway Bureau. The latter appears to think that it is necessary to make a larger appropriation in order to meet the needs of the States in the coming fiscal year.

Mr. ANDERSON. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand the statement I made. I dealt only with the authorization of $65,000,000 for the next fiscal year. I did not deal at all either with the allotment which had been made under prior authorizations or the authorization of $50,000,000 for this fiscal year. It will be necessary unquestionably to make an additional appropriation to cover the obligations which will be incurred and which will mature in the next fiscal year under the authorization of 1923. That is what Mr. MacDonald referred to in his statement. He makes the statement that it will be necessary to make an appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Of course the gentleman is more familiar with the matter than I. I have only seen the report of the hearings within the last few minutes. But in making his statement these are the concluding words of Mr. MacDonald:

> This program, however, will not enable the States to proceed on so extensive a road-building program as they have been carrying during the last three fiscal years.
> Mr. ANDERSON. Even with the $30,000,000 appropriated?
> Mr. MACDONALD. With the entire $65,000,000 appropriated there would not be a sufficient amount to pay the States the sums that we paid them during the past fiscal year. That is, there is no question but what a number of States, proceeding as in the past, will need to draw their proportion of the entire $65,000,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is unquestionably true, but that arises primarily not from the fact that the appropriations have not been made, but on account of the fact that the authorizations contained in the act of November, 1921, were relatively less than the appropriations that we had previously made.

This is the situation that arises also: It has been the custom of the Bureau of Public Roads, under a decision made by the solicitor or by the comptroller—I do not now recall which—to segregate the sums allotted to each State, so that instead of having one sum out of which payments could be made to meet any maturing obligation we had 48 accounts, and if one State's program of road construction advanced more rapidly than others it exhausted its allotment of the fund before other States exhausted theirs. In consequence they have always had a very large balance in the roads fund, although some of the States have actually been confronted with the slowing up of their program because their particular allotment had been exhausted.

Now, I think that can be reached, and I understand it will be reached in a deficiency bill soon to be reported by a provision which makes all of the sums appropriated under all of the acts available as one fund, so that the States which are progressing on their road program can withdraw the total amount alloted to them up to the current period without reference to what may be done by other States which are lagging behind in their programs.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Surely.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand, the last road act authorized the appropriation of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. Is that correct?

Mr. ANDERSON. For the year 1924.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Do I understand that $65,000,000 will be actually available for expenditure by the States during the year 1924?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; the allotments of that sum will be made and the Government will enter into contractual obligations with the States for the full amount. Now, only a portion of those obligations will mature, so as to require actual withdrawals from the Treasury during the next fiscal year. So we are only providing in this bill for the amount which will mature and require actual withdrawals during the fiscal year; but any State that wants to go ahead with its program up to the amount of its allotment during the fiscal year will be entirely able to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the chairman anticipate that it will be necessary to make actual appropriations during the fiscal year 1923-24 larger than the amount carried in this bill? If so, will that be done by a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think a deficiency appropriation will have to be made to cover withdrawals which will take place as a result of the authorizations for the current fiscal year. The $29,300,000 which we are appropriating here will, I think, cover all withdrawals which will result from the authorization of $65,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But if authorizations should be made for the full amount of $65,000,000 there will be no question that ample provision will be made to take care of it out of the Federal Treasury when the allotments become due?

Mr. ANDERSON. No question whatever.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman kindly state the reason why we have changed from 48 State funds to one?

Mr. ANDERSON. The reason is this: With 48 State funds there is always a large sum in the Treasury which remains idle, because the programs of the States do not progress at the same rate. The idea was to put them all in one fund, both to minimize the amount of bookkeeping necessary and to avoid keeping in the Treasury a considerable balance from year to year which was not used.

Mr. LAZARO. And then, too, it punishes the States that are a little slow in coming forward, does it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it will not do that at all, because as soon as a State comes forward the money will be there for it.

Mr. LAZARO. Provided we appropriate enough as we go forward.

Mr. ANDERSON. We will do that.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman explain the appropriation of $3,000,000 for forest roads and trails, and will the gentleman state why that appropriation is made $3,000,000 instead of $6,500,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is exactly in the same situation, as I understand it. We undertake to cover here only the actual withdrawals of funds which will arise during the fiscal year under the authorizations, without in any way interfering with the right of the States to the total amount of the authorization.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. On page 79 of the bill is an appropriation of $103,600 to carry into effect the provisions of the grain futures act. On page 505 of the hearings the chairman of the committee [Mr. ANDERSON] asked if that act were yet in force. The statement was made that it was inoperative just now. I should like to ask the chairman will that act become operative before a decision has been handed down by the Supreme Court? Is that what is holding it up?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is what is holding it up.

Mr. HILL. And this appropriation is for the administrative end of it, but it will not become effective until the constitutionality of the act is decided.

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is that during the current year they are using a small amount of the appropriation simply on the administrative end pending the decision as to the constitutionality of the act. That will continue to be the situation until the constitutionality of the act is determined.

Mr. HILL. It is not contemplated then to put the full administrative machinery into effect until the constitutionality of the act is decided?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. HILL. Does this appropriation include any expenditures for testing the constitutionality of the act or for the legal enforcement of the penalties and that sort of thing?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. What is the policy set forth in this bill in regard to agricultural extension work through the agricultural colleges? Is it enlarged or diminished or not changed?

Mr. ANDERSON. We continue the appropriation upon exactly the same basis as that for the current fiscal year, neither increasing nor diminishing the amount. The Bureau of the Budget recommended reducing the appropriation by $50,000, but we did not agree to that reduction.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Does the gentleman feel that the amount of $3,000,000 carried in the appropriation bill will permit construction work to proceed as outlined in the various national forest programs?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think so. That is as near as the Office of Public Roads and the rest of us could get at the probable withdrawals. If the amount should be larger than that under the authorizations it will be taken care of promptly in deficiency appropriations.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. It will not need any curtailment, then?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not at all. It is not contemplated at all.

Mr. ARENTZ. The people of the West, of course, are very much interested in this appropriation and in the program of road building that has been placed before the heads of the proper departments. I understand the gentleman to say it is his opinion that this will not be curtailed, but that the program will be carried out, and if not the money will be still available?

Mr. ANDERSON. The plan is to go ahead with the program on the basis of the total authorization of $6,500,000. We withdraw from the Treasury only the amount which will probably be required for the next fiscal year. However, if additional amounts should be required the obligations will have been created and they can be taken care of as deficiencies.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The bill contains an item of $200,000 to provide means for the control and prevention of the spread of the European corn borer?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman make a brief statement as to the success with which the department is meeting in that work, or as to the spread of the pest?

Mr. ANDERSON. There are three major infestations, one in the territory around Boston, one in eastern New York, and one in northern Ohio and southern Michigan and western New York around Lake Erie. It has not been possible to prevent the spread of the corn borer in the Massachusetts and New England area owing to the fact that it infests all sorts of hollow-stemmed plants. It gets into the weeds alongside the garden plots and it has been impossible to eradicate it except by burning with gas flame or with chemicals of some sort. It has not been possible to control it entirely in the New England area, and probably will not be. In the area around Lake Erie there has been a very small spread of the insect in the United States but a considerable spread northeastward into Canada. The infestation is very light, indeed. The probabilities are that it will be held in control in that territory for many years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has occupied 20 minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. There was authorized in the last Post Office appropriation bill for good roads an appropriation of $50,000,000 for 1923 and $65,000,000 for 1924. If I understand in looking over the bill, you make no appropriation of any part of the $50,000,000 for 1923?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; we will have to take care of that by a deficiency.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. MacDonald, the head of the good roads improvement, insists that it is very important that this work should go on.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think I can give the gentleman assurance that a deficiency bill will be brought in in a few days covering the withdrawals under the $50,000,000 authorization.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman differ with Mr. McDonald that it is needed immediately?

Mr. ANDERSON. His statement was predicated upon the continuance of the present policy of allotting the appropriations to the States as 48 separate funds.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman says that he will bring in this appropriation in a deficiency bill as needed, but I can not understand how Mr. MacDonald, the head of the road department, can close up the various contracts with the States when he does not know whether the money will be available when the money is really needed.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the Congress of the United States authorizes Mr. MacDonald to enter into a contract with the several States, the Congress of the United States will make the appropriation.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But you are not doing it in this bill. Suppose we adjourn on March 4 and contracts are made during the summer and we do not meet until December?

Mr. ANDERSON. We will not adjourn on the 4th of March without taking care of it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. On page 80 there is appropriated for forest roads and trails under provisions of section 23 of the Federal highway act $3,000,000. How did the committee arrive at that $3,000,000 necessary for the purpose during the next fiscal year?

Mr. ANDERSON. The committee took the word of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads for the amount of the withdrawals.

Mr. HAYDEN. I was unable to find anything in the hearings as to that, and I supposed it was merely an arbitrary guess on the part of the Director of the Budget.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think not.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman thinks that not more than $3,000,000 will be withdrawn?

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, we can not be absolutely accurate, but on the basis of what we know have been the requirements this amount would seem to be sufficient; but if it is not, it will certainly run until next December, when a deficiency can be brought in.

Mr. HAYDEN. The proviso gives the Secretary the right to enter into contractual obligations of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost of the project?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will, although I have consumed the time I had allotted to myself and am now speaking in the time of other gentlemen.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question about the corn-borer appropriation. As I understand it, it is quite prevalent in Canada. The gentleman has stated the different localities on our northern border where it is prevalent. It is my understanding that in that locality this particular pest only lives one generation.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true in northern Michigan and Ohio, but it is not true in New England.

Mr. McKENZIE. If it gets into the Corn Belt of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa there will be two generations, and it will be absolutely impossible to control it, and therefore it is the purpose, as I understand, of the committee to make every effort to hold this pest in the locality where it is now.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is the policy of the committee to give them every dollar they said was necessary to put into effect every measure for the control of this pest.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the chairman state what, if any, active cooperation there is between the Federal authorities and the State as regards the eradication and control of the corn borer.

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not give the gentleman offhand the amount actually appropriated by the States. If the gentleman will remember, last year a proviso was agreed to that made $75,000 of the appropriation contingent on the subscription of an equal amount by the States.

Mr. TREADWAY. That does not appear in this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it does.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the item of $200,000 depend on the cooperation of the States?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; not the full sum, but $75,000 of it does.

Mr. TREADWAY. Just one other reference along that same line. To what extent does the department feel that the spread is under any fair amount of control, particularly in Massachusetts or in New England?

Mr. ANDERSON. It has not been possible to control completely the spread of the insect in New England, and probably will not be.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I realize, of course, that the gentleman's committee is an appropriating committee and not a legislative committee. But what has the committee done with regard to effecting a better marketing system? I notice, with regard to the radio distribution of market news, there are only five cities that broadcast this radio information—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Chicago. The gentleman is very much interested in enlarging that, is he not?

Mr. ANDERSON. There is no restriction upon the number of cities which can take advantage of the broadcasting of market news. I think the gentleman probably has reference to the leased-wire service rather than to the radio service.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am referring to page 442 of the hearings. The farmers in my country say that they want one thing particularly from Congress, and that is a better marketing system. I know the gentleman is considered to be one of the best friends that agriculture has in the House. What is being done, constructively, to effect a better marketing system?

Mr. ANDERSON. We are carrying a very considerably increased appropriation in this bill for work along marketing lines, through appropriations for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which has direct charge of that work—a larger increase than in any other bureau in the department.

Mr. BLANTON. And eventually the whole country will get the benefit of this radio broadcasting system?

Mr. ANDERSON. I see no reason why not.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HILL. In reference to the item of enforcement of the food and drug act, which is increased from $671,401 to $704,401, I notice that on page 202 of the hearings the statement was made that we now have less than 40 inspectors where we formerly had a staff of 51 inspectors. Is the increase of $33,000 provided for the purpose of putting back the 51 inspectors they formerly had?

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course the $33,000 would not put back 51 inspectors.

Mr. HILL. But it would put back the difference, would it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; the idea is to restore the item to its previous basis.

Mr. HILL. The testimony was that the enforcement of the drug act was more difficult than formerly.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is.

Mr. HILL. And they wanted the same number that they formerly had, and this puts it back to 51?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. That is the expectation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I am not in full accord with my associates on the Appropriation Committee. Usually we are harmonious upon this subcommittee and generally I can see no reason why men who are sincere and intelligent can not agree on any proposition for the interest of our common country. Such has been my course whenever and wherever it is possible to cooperate with my colleagues. I can say that so far as I am concerned no partisan action has ever divided the committee. But I find myself not in accord with its action in respect to the cooperative fund for the construction of public roads throughout the Nation, and I have been requested by some of my colleagues to state the facts, that the House may understand clearly the actual condition that exists. The proposal in this bill to remedy those conditions and to suggest what is left to be remedied or corrected hereafter which is an urgent and indispensable duty.

The Post Office appropriation bill last year authorized three sums for the construction of public roads. The first was the sum of $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. This bill before us does not carry one cent in fulfillment of that authorization.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The last appropriation did not, as I understand.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That was not an appropriation. It was merely an authorization in the Post Office bill, and no legislation of any character has been passed making available one cent of the $50,000,000, and this bill fails to do so. The second authorization in the Post Office appropriation bill last year was the sum of $65,000,000 authorized for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924. This bill carries an appropriation of $29,300,000 of the $65,000,000 for the next fiscal year. To save my soul I can not appreciate the reason for skipping the authorization of 1923 and appropriated under the authorization of 1924.

This same act, the Post Office appropriation act, last year authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to apportion among the several States the $50,000,000. Forty-eight million nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the $50,000,000 has been apportioned to the respective States by the Secretary in accordance with the good roads act. More than $16,000,000 of the $50,000,000 has been actually obligated to the States, and when I say "obligated" I mean actually contracted to the States, upon projects submitted by them for the improvement of their public roads. Yet we carry not one cent of appropriation in this bill to fulfill those obligations by the Federal Government to the State governments. It would have been far better had this bill carried the appropriation of $50,000,000 authorized for the fiscal year 1923 and not carried one cent for the fiscal year 1924. We should merely have confirmed the authority to the Secretary of Agriculture to apportion and obligate the appropriation of $65,000,000 for the fiscal year 1924.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. If we continue this policy, what will happen to the States that have contracted with parties to build roads?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was advised yesterday over the phone by the Bureau of Good Roads that they expected some of these obligations to fall due and payment to be demanded within a few weeks; and practically every month until next December, or until we pass the next appropriation bill, some of these obligations will fall due, and the States will have to wait for the money, and the Federal Government will have failed to fulfill its obligations.

Mr. LAZARO. Will not that stop road building?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; the Secretary of Agriculture has been authorized by Congress in the same act to apportion this money and enter into contract.

Mr. LAZARO. But will not those obligations fall due and the Federal Government be unprepared to pay, and will not that discourage the States in building the roads?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It might have a discouraging influence upon some States and retard them from entering into these obligations. It might be used in some counties throughout the States in bond elections in States, where in a special instance a certain State has completed its contract and where the Federal Government has not fulfilled its contract.

It might be used by politicians to that effect; I do not know. The plan I advocate is that whenever and wherever this Government gives its plighted word in an act of Congress to perform certain obligations to a State, it ought to be ready to perform that obligation according to the letter of the law and the latter of the agreement.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. What practical objection could there be to carrying the $50,000,000 appropriation for the current fiscal year on this bill rather than postponing it for the uncertain enactment of some deficiency bill in the future?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The only objection I have heard is that the various States do not use promptly their proportion of the allotment of this $50,000,000, and therefore some of it will remain unused but segregated in the Treasury.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But it will be in the Treasury.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will be in the Treasury and will not be lost, of course; but it may remain there one year or it may remain there two years or it may remain there for three years under the good roads act.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will propose an amendment increasing the appropriation of $50,000,000 so as to cover the item which Congress authorized for the current fiscal year.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am informed this morning by one of my colleagues on this committee that the deficiency committee was going to take care of any obligation under this $50,000,000 authorization. Maybe they can and maybe they can not. In order to do so they will have to carry legislation upon an appropriation bill. They can not do it without running the risk of the good roads fund losing a portion of this $50,000,000 by Congress losing the authority to appropriate it. Let us analyze it for a minute.

This Post Office act authorized an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the year 1923, and if you permit that year to elapse before we make that appropriation then we have lost authority to appropriate under that act. The only way the $50,000,000 authorization under the act can be preserved beyond the fiscal year is to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to contract it during the fiscal year, and in order to do so in a deficiency bill we will have to carry legislation to that effect which is contrary to the rules of the House. Secondly, you can not always contract promptly. Many of the States are not ready to contract within the year. They have to hold elections for the issuance of bonds, and sometimes an election is defeated and another is ordered; and many of the States delay a long time, and the attorneys of the legal department have to approve the bonds, and before they can be sold many of the States have difficulty in selling and are thus tied up. Some States take one year, some take two years, and some take three years before they get ready to assume the obligation. Suppose a portion of this money is not obligated during the fiscal year at all? I do not care what the character of legislation, the deficiency bill must carry an authorization for the Secretary to obligate it. Suppose as a matter of fact it does not obligate a portion of it. Then Congress loses its power to appropriate the money and the good roads funds loses the portion of it that is unobligated. How much is obligated now? It has been stated that in six months only $16,000,000 have been obligated, and it is reasonable to suppose that in the next six months we would obligate no more than $16,000,000 even if we had the authority. Therefore, if we do not make this appropriation and depend upon some deficiency bill to make it, the good roads fund and the good roads movement stand in imminent danger of losing all that portion of its unobligated funds at the expiration of this fiscal year ending June 30 next.

Now, then, gentlemen, let me discuss another feature, the necessity for the appropriation of this $50,000,000. Does the necessity exist? Where do we go to get the information? We can only go to the good roads department and to those States that have entered into obligations and which will soon demand payment. Now, let me read you a few lines from the testimony of Mr. MacDonald, chief of that bureau. Speaking of the $50,000,000, he says:

Contractual obligations of the sort referred to in the preceding paragraph have already been entered into with many of the States, and with the exhaustion of the appropriated funds apportioned to these States there will be no funds to pay vouchers rendered by them on account of construction work done under the terms of these contractual obligations.

Then a little later on, now mind you, the mutual obligations of one State can not be paid out of the portion that has been allotted another State. The Comptroller General has so held and the department recognizes that ruling.

We need an immediate appropriation for all the States of the $50,000,000 authorized for 1923.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me read this statement. Here is the conclusion of Mr. MacDonald:

Our conclusions, as stated above, are that there should be an immediate appropriation of the $50,000,000 authorized for 1923, an immediate authorization to apportion the $65,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1924, and an immediate appropriation of $30,000,000 from the $65,000,000 authorization, to be followed by an appropriation of the balance of the authorization by January 1, 1924.

That is the statement of Mr. MacDonald, in a prepared statement delivered to the subcommittee, showing that we will need an appropriation of $50,000,000 for 1923, $30,000,000 appropriation for 1924, and an appropriation of the balance of $65,000,000 for 1924 by January 1, 1924.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it the only reason that the gentleman has ever heard for not appropriating the total of $50,000,000 for 1923—that there might remain at the end of the fiscal year an unexpended balance to some of the States that had not been taken advantage of?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is absolutely the only reason.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is there not an additional reason on the part of those opposing this? Heretofore we have always appropriated for the whole year.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; you have always appropriated for the whole year.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What reason do they who are opposing the $50,000,000 give for skipping that for 1923 and appropriating $29,000,000 for 1924?

Mr. BUCHANAN. You know they want to make the appropriations come within the amounts fixed by the Budget.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Roads or no roads?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; roads or no roads, or anything else. Now, that is about all on that question. I have tried to state to you the plain and simple facts; and if we pass this bill in its present condition, without the amendment, we shall have to depend upon the deficiency committee not only to bring in an appropriation to cover a matter that is not a deficiency—because it has not yet matured—and perhaps depend on that committee to bring in legislation to preserve the balance of that appropriation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I understand, then, the States that have made contracts for the building of roads will be taken care of under this bill, while those States like Texas, for example, that have not made contracts, will not be taken care of?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir; no State, whether it has made contracts or not, will be taken care of under the $50,000,000 authorization for 1923. There is not one iota of money in the Treasury or in this bill that will meet the obligations under the authorization of 1923.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am glad my colleague has explained that, because some of my colleagues on this side had the impression that the States that had made contracts will be taken care of, but that those States that had not made contracts will not be taken care of.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They will, we presume, be taken care of ultimately, but there is no provision in this bill, nor in any other statute, to take care of them; and if they are taken care of it must be by legislation.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence before the Budget Bureau or any evidence taken by the Budget Bureau to show the situation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know as to that.

Mr. KING. You do not know of any evidence being taken by them or any inquiry being made by them?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No. All I know is that the Secretary of Agriculture sent to the Budget Bureau a message recommending and requesting that this $50,000,000 for 1923 be included in the estimate, as well as the $65,000,000 under the estimate for 1924.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. What will be done now under the bill unless the amendment of the gentleman is adopted?

Mr. BUCHANAN. What will happen will be that obligations maturing will have to be taken care of by deficiency bills.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman understand that Congress will not be in session after March 4?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. I think one of the greatest curses that could afflict the American people would be an extra session of Congress. The country needs a rest. It needs to find out what the laws are that are now on the statute books, and it needs a rest from the disturbing conditions that now exist and from the discussion of many false nostrums that are urged as a remedy for imaginary evils that are now suffered by the people. That is why I am pressing this measure, to help to avoid the necessity of an extra session. We should not leave one item in any appropriation bill unattended to, that could be used as an excuse for calling an extra session.

Mr. BRIGGS. Unless the appropriation is made to meet this situation, either the road building will have to stop or we will have to have a special session to meet the deficiency?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I think the road building will go on, but I think the States would have to wait for the money after the money is due.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not approve of that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The States can only raise their money by bond issues. Suppose they have not sufficient funds to take care of this matter. Then would not the road building stop?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The contracts would have to stop. Now, so much, gentlemen, for the road proposition. All this situation, this condition, in the road matter is absolutely brought about by the Budget Bureau, and it seems to be the desire of Members of Congress and of the Committee on Appropriations to pass bills within the limit of the amount fixed by the Budget, and not to exceed the Budget in the totals carried by the bills. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept the recommendations of the Budget as recommendations, but as recommendations only.

I believe in economy, but I believe in intelligent economy. There are two kinds of economists in this House, and there are two kinds of economists in the country. One is the intelligent economist; the other is the "damn-fool economist." [Laughter.] The intelligent economist cuts an appropriation where the results obtained from that appropriation do not justify the expenditure. The intelligent economist will not hesitate to increase an appropriation where the results obtained from that appropriation will redound to the benefit of the American people, and will be large enough to justify the expenditure. Such is my position.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Is it not true that there is a car shortage in the country now and freight rates are prohibitive? Would it be good economy to stop the building of good roads?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not think so. I believe it would be the reverse.

Now, to illustrate: We had the people from the Agricultural Department before our committee. What did we find? We found that in the estimates, before they were passed by the Budget Bureau, large sums were asked for, and that those sums were cut. Regardless of whether it was justifiable or not, they were cut. What else do we find? We find that to stamp out the "black-stem rust" in wheat $350,000 was estimated. That sum was estimated to stamp out that injurious fungus. It was a large appropriation. They cut it to $200,000 or $150,000. The Budget Committee cut it, though the Department of Agriculture had conducted an extensive campaign in the 13 States which raised spring wheat.

What the department did has aroused the sentiment of the people of those States and convinced them that black-stem rust could be stamped out by the extermination of the barberry bush. They have State organizations, and never in the history of this country has public sentiment been in a better condition to secure the eradication of black-stem rust than it is to-day. Yet the Bureau of the Budget cut the appropriation $150,000, which would cripple the work and allow the fungus or insect, or whatever it is, to breed and increase and spread. I was a member of the subcommittee which considered this matter. The stamping out of black-stem rust does not concern my State. Wheat is grown in my section of the country, but in that southern climate there are many perennial grasses, upon which the black-stem rust can feed, and for that reason we have no hope of its eradication. None of the eradication work has been done down there, but I did not hesitate one minute to make a motion to override the Budget and to increase the amount back to $350,000. And I stand here willing to vote $500,000, if necessary, because by expending that amount now when the hour is timely and while the iron is hot we can completely eradicate it—a fact which has been conclusively demonstrated.

Again, for the stamping out of the cattle tick there was another large appropriation. The Budget Bureau cut that appropriation. The Budget Bureau cut that appropriation largely at a time when the same conditions exist which are favorable to the destruction of the cattle tick as those which existed with reference to destroying the black rust of wheat. We increased that appropriation.

The same condition applied to rodents and animals that injuriously affect agriculture and live stock. We increased that appropriation. Therefore, gentlemen, I say I have absolutely no respect for the intelligence of the Bureau of the Budget on propositions like this. I am forced to believe that for some reason they are not acquainted with the agricultural affairs of this Nation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HUDSPETH. In view of the great importance of stamping out the cattle tick, and in view of the fact that it is estimated by competent men that in stamping it out in Texas the value of all clean cattle is increased from $3 to $5 per head, does the gentleman think his committee has appropriated a sufficient amount for the carrying on of that important work?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is the same appropriation that we had last year. We put it back to that. I would not object to increasing it further, because the department is well organized with an effective force; and if you can act promptly and stamp out these things, it is an economy to do it, because by allowing these pests to continue from year to year you permit them to multiply and increase. Therefore I believe in taking effective measures promptly.

Let me tell you something. Of all the activities of the Agricultural Department, I care not what branch you may select, the branch that deals with injurious insects and animals and other pests that affect and destroy agricultural production is the most important in the whole department, and we should not make stinted and miserly appropriations to destroy those pests that inflict such great damage upon the yearly production of our agriculture. I will not hesitate to support all appropriations that the department can economically expend in its fight against these pests.

I have here in my hand a statement covering the past 14 years of the activities of the Agricultural Department in its fight against insects and other pests that are committing ravages upon the agricultural production of the Nation. It is astounding to see the damage that has been inflicted upon the American people through the ravages of these pests. We have made considerable appropriations to fight them, and every appropriation to conduct that fight has redounded to our benefit far more than the amount of the appropriations. So long as I am on this Agricultural Committee I am going to continue to fight for liberal appropriations to stamp out these pests, of whatever character and description, and in whatever section of the country they may be found. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice on page 65 of the bill that provision is made for the maintenance of the department which handles the collection, publishing, and distributing of market information by wire and otherwise. I observe that the amount carried for that purpose has been reduced below the amount of last year's appropriation. Does the gentleman think this amount is sufficient to provide for the proper distribution of this market information that has been so much in demand throughout the country?

Mr. BUCHANAN. We think so. The radio is in its infancy, and being tested out. There is no doubt in my mind that it will be a success. We think the amount appropriated is sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There was provision made last year, and then the amount was increased a little later, to provide for the dissemination of market information by wire or otherwise throughout the eastern part of the United States, and to practically all of the States east of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We are getting it in Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They increased it a little and have carried it to one or two points beyond, and there seems to be quite a demand for it. As I understand they can distribute this information by radio at less than they can by wire. Is it so arranged that they can distribute it all over the country by radio or just to certain sections?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They can distribute it all over the country by radio wherever you find a radio station that will take it. Of course, the Federal Government does not own the radio stations in Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. According to the hearings they have established stations for that purpose at Boston, Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They did not establish the station at Austin. They use the station there to transmit the information.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Those are not the only stations that they can use?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; there is no limitation on the stations that can be used, and if the gentleman will take it up with the Secretary of Agriculture I have no doubt he can make arrangements to have the service extended.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I wondered if the appropriation was sufficient to enable that to be done.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not know. We can not anticipate every imaginable demand to be made for the establishment of new radio stations or any other new establishment. Perhaps if the gentleman had taken it up with the Secretary of Agriculture before the estimates came in, he might have included that in his estimates. I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is very great demand for it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me say to the gentleman that while there appears to be a reduction in this item there is an actual increase, owing to the fact that a considerable amount, $18,000, has been transferred to another item. That is the statutory roll. So that while there is an apparent decrease there is really an increase.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is that sum to be paid for the officers who do this work?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. This is where we carried certain clerical employees. These employees have been transferred to the statutory roll so that that amount can be used for other purposes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask if this appropriation provides for all the services that are now being maintained?

Mr. ANDERSON. Absolutely.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; it does. But these important matters are not so serious as some that frown upon our individual prosperity and menace our governmental life. These various and vicious pests, which are so troublesome to our agriculture, must be controlled or exterminated; for their activity means suffering and their scourge is the plague of dire distress.

Our food crops, by which we live, and the apparel by which we are kept in healthful comfort and working condition depend upon successful agriculture. And our richest soils are in vain if their products are subject to the ravages of these devastating insect drives.

Of course, the sections more interested in the food cereals, essential to our living, have their singular experiences; and their crops are subject to the peculiar parasites that prey upon field and crib, and the growing plant life and the harvested grain are alike subjected to the destruction of their voracious hunger.

Of these trials the great wheat-growing sections have their day, and at times their wails monopolize the columns of our news journals. The black-stem rust destroyed 200,000,000 bushels of wheat in one year. Our sympathies go out to the grain grower wherever adversity depletes his purse or whenever his dependent loved ones are cramped by remorseless failure and he can not provide the comforts and necessities of life.

I am confident, Mr. Chairman, that these field vermin, which have been scientifically classified under the sonorous term of entomology, and luxuriate on the life blood of trade and commerce, have no friend in the human race. And what means are needed for the protection and salvage of our living interest would be generously forthcoming if every legislator were posted by an intimate knowledge of the facts.

Let an intelligent observer behold the splendid spectacle of great fields of wheat or corn as they roll in billows of golden glory, ripening under the alchemy of the harvest sunshine, or standing in serried ranks of living green, aflame with banners of silk and tassel! When he sees that scene of matchless beauty and promise stripped of its hope and dead and shriveled by the remorseless sweep of the tempest or the scourage of devouring swarms he is ready and anxious to come to the rescue of the grain grower by any means in his power.

Or, Mr. Chairman, the vision of what has been so common in our fields of the South is equally appalling in the realm of king cotton. That uncrowned monarch, so often the theme of the gifted pen, wields the scepter of command wherever the human body must be clothed, wherever fashion holds sway and knows the potential dominion of the fleecy staple.

No more consummate tragedy is enacted than in the periodic disaster of the cotton industry. When the planting crisis is past and the critical "chopping out" process has presented the stand of tender plants, the grower contemplates the prospects in hope and in fear, for great expectations may be realized and great disasters may befall. The torrent and the lurking leaf worm has often blasted the young stem and leaf and driven to distraction the anxious cotton planter who knows the furtive genius of the crawling enemy; and his heart quakes as he remembers the storm cloud and the sudden descent of the resistless cyclone.

I think there can be nothing more attractive to the agriculturist than the maturing and developing field of luxuriant cotton. The rich dark green of its foliage over an abounding acreage is indeed an emerald sea; and when its "squares" burst into snow white and change, in turn, to blooming red flowers and the swelling boll opens its casket to reveal its tuft of immaculate fleecy fiber, it presents a unique and variegated beauty, characteristic of no other bush or plant.

And when, on some fine day, as he inspects the developing crop and sniffs an aromatic odor his heart sinks, for he recognizes the telltale scent of ruin. In the interval of a single day his luxuriant field may be swept of every leaf, for the caterpillar in countless myriads is no laggard, and its ravages leave no verdant bud or leaf. The instant duty and only recourse are the arsenical supply and application, discovered after years of trial and experiment to be the fulfillment of his dreams and the realization of his successful weapon of defense.

Again at another time as the same picture of apparent prosperity delights his soul, he sees nor smells a warning; not a sign of danger is apparent as he looks over his splendid prospects, but something is lacking. On looking closely he finds in all that field of a thousand acres, more or less, that not a single fully developed square or incipient boll can be found. Then he knows that the deadliest enemy of the maturing cotton has done and is doing its fatal work. The Mexican boll weevil, the most deadly and destructive pest known to the cotton field and its most indestructible enemy, has stung and blasted every swelling and immature cotton square and boll, and the loss of the crop is complete.

It is not correct to think that the American people and our economic forces have been oblivious or designedly neglectful in resisting these ruinous encroachments upon the products of our soil. The proper indictment is that our efforts have been feeble; our fighting strength has been inadequate and crippled because of insufficient appropriation. Let us look into this for a moment.

We have the figures covering the fiscal years 1910 to 1923, inclusive, "showing the appropriations for fighting insects and diseases affecting plants and animals available to the Agricultural Department." These amounts can easily be quoted in detail, but a summary serves our purpose and saves time.

These appropriations and disbursements of governmental expenses are solely for operations against the predatory insects that destroy so largely our agricultural wealth. They are not extravagant in truth when we weigh and measure our great Commonwealth and realize how infinite and various is our resourceful country. It dawns on our consciousness that for such a stupendous task as a successful war with our countless infinitesimal and aggressive foe, against which we are pitted for God and humanity, our provided equipment has been illiberal and even contemptible.

The billions and billions of wealth we enjoy by the agricultural pursuits of our people constitute a class—aye, a veritable guild—consecrated and entitled to the worship of mankind. As a people we should give precedence to what might be appropriately favored as the one class for which legislation can not be invidious, for it is the class on which humanity has depended, and which supplies our living necessities, and it is assuredly the class to which we are indebted always and to the limit. The pagans of antiquity were by every count and consideration justified in their ascription of divinity to Ceres, their goddess of husbandry.

Mr. Chairman, our people should be commended for the most drastic warfare we have been able to wage against these predatory enemies of our agricultural products. The swarms that infest our crops, and which are as noisome and injurious as the plagues of Egypt, are by no means an insignificant barrier to progressive life, but are a menace to life itself.

If we could obliterate them, the grain and textile producers of our race would gratefully erect a monument in honor of our achievement. It would be a wonderful blessing to the planting and hungry world. And yet these creeping myriads but follow their instinctive law of existence, and beyond the demands of hunger they ask nothing. Their depredations, however ravaging and deplorable, are the visitations of a periodic scourge which we may successfully resist and finally defeat.

But the sectional and partisan game of politics seems to be based on an unfathomable spirit of lurking malice, selfishness in design and ruthless in application. This animus to which I allude is born and lives in the atmosphere of the most malignant of our human exhalations. It thrives on the unholy schemes of expediency. It is easily traced. An individual trained in profit and loss until obsessed by the venom of selfish greed is irresistibly the tool of personal passion and, by partisan bias, political expediency is easily confounded and confused with political principle. It is the motive thought of every agent with an "ax to grind."

That these insinuations and accusations are true, there is undeniably abundant evidence, by common repute and by the testimony of fact.

On Saturday, December 16th instant, a notable exposure of disgraceful conditions was aired on the Senate floor by Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, as he pointed out the outrageous discrimination by which agriculture is compelled to suffer at the hands of political partisanship.

In that disclosure the discussion centered around the quotation from President Harding's message before Congress, in which the President took occasion to stress the deplorable condition of the farming interest throughout the country and recommended remedial legislation. How monstrous the fact that in behalf of the class that feeds and clothes us remedial legislation is deemed necessary. Since then the Committee on Agriculture has been holding hearings looking for some way to return to normalcy. But normalcy seems a mythical term except as it applies by comparison favorably to other industries than that of the planter and stock raiser. It was shown in the discussion that the Committee on Agriculture was visited by representative men of affairs, who had knowledge of the terrible calamity which fell upon our agricultural interests without warning, when the price of farm products and cattle raising went down to a point that meant bankruptcy.

These allegations and denunciations were justified by excerpts from the administration newspapers and reports, and from cited instances showing that the manufacturing and speculative operators had profited by incredible per cents and dividends, while the toilers on farm and ranch were unable to realize the cost of production in the markets of the country.

To substantiate the above statement, I will cite only a few of many instances wherein the manufacturing industries are reaping an enormous profit at the expense of the American consumer and the agricultural interests of our Nation. Wanskuck Co., manufacturers of worsted, recently voted to distribute among themselves a 1,500 per cent stock dividend. The New York Manufacturing Co. of Minnesota, which makes cotton cloth, doubled their capitalization and declared a 100 per cent stock dividend. The Oakdale (R. I.) Worsted Co., after increasing its capital stock from $60,000 to $540,000, declared an 800 per cent stock dividend. The Merrimac Woolen Co. increased its capital stock from $750,000 to $1,000,000 and, in addition, declared a large dividend. The New Bedford Cotton Mills Corporation declared a stock dividend of 200 per cent. The textile manufacturers of Fall River, Mass., declared dividend for the year 1922 amounting on an average to 9,324 per cent. There are other instances in which the great industrial corporations have declared dividends as high as 3,000 per cent. Something is radically wrong with any government whose institutions and laws are so framed that the great industrial manufacturing corporations can realize such immense profit, while the foundation, the agricultural interest of the Nation, which sustains the entire superstructure, is continuously threatened with bankruptcy and ruin.

Our great problem is to make a correct diagnosis of the evil and correct that evil, even though it takes major surgery in order to completely restore the patient.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 32 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the limited time at my disposal it is very difficult to say very much on any subject that should receive much study from Members, as the House will appreciate. In yesterday's RECORD, in the speech by Senator BROOKHART, appear a number of statements on stock dividends that I commend to the reading of Members of the House. I will attach some data to my remarks as well. A few days ago the National City Bank of New York defended what they called social wealth, with the understanding that the stock dividends that were turned over for the purpose of conducting the business of a concern was "social wealth," and that the people of the country who created the "social wealth" ought to be satisfied with its present whereabouts, notwithstanding the income tax laws we have failed to reach a large part of the social wealth when it is placed in stock dividends.

I have only the time to read briefly from a statement of the National City Bank of New York which was placed by the bank on the desk of every Congressman. This is very high authority, and as the bank speaks from a standpoint not ordinarily taken by the average legislator I believe it should be answered, to show the position we are obliged to take when legislating.

Under the pressure of time, I am going to read only briefly from the statement sent out by the bank. This statement, in the form of a circular, was issued by the National City Bank of New York City for December, 1922, and sent to every Congressman and to banks generally. It contains a carefully prepared defense of the $775,000,000 ten-year net profits, or 77½ per cent annual net profits, of Standard Oil of New Jersey, and concludes with the statement:

> The wealth employed in industry is social wealth no matter who owns it. * * * The soviet revolutionists of Russia had a theory that leadership in industry counted for nothing. * * * The soviet leaders have modified their policies very materially in the past year as the result of practical experience. * * * The same old doctrines, however, are widespread in the United States, and the clamor for increased taxation of wealth is largely by people who favor it as a means of distributing the accumulation of wealth that exists. * * * The country will not be safe from such proposals until the fundamental fallacy that runs through all of them is generally understood.

The bank justifies a $775,000,000 net profit in 10 years on the capitalization of Standard Oil of New Jersey, or 77½ per cent annual net profit on $100,000,000, and excuses a 900 per cent surplus of Standard Vacuum Oil and others of like character, including a 16,000 per cent stock dividend of the Brown-Sharpe Manufacturing Co., of Rhode Island, that increases its stock through profits from $100,000 to $16,000,000, freed from present taxes.

THE BANK AND STANDARD OIL.

First, it should be noted, the National City Bank is reported to control Standard Oil's activities. It stretches out its hands all over the universe, reaching to the islands of the sea, far distant Africa, and the Central American and South American Republics, while its great power is recognized by the world. It says in this statement in effect that the accumulation by one man in a lifetime, through Standard Oil manipulations, of wealth reaching, according to estimates, over $2,000,000,000 on an original capital of a sixpence is "social wealth no matter who owns it." That is to say, it is immaterial whether Mr. Rockefeller as one man owns the money or whether it is possessed by the people generally who were squeezed out of that sum. It contends the same is equally true of thousands of our multimillionaires who began wealth on a shoestring, all of whom are comprehended in the National City Bank's unique defense of "social wealth."

THE BANK'S OFFICERS AS WITNESSES.

When witnesses voluntarily take the stand, it is customary to inquire as to their general views, particularly if they assume to speak for other parties or for their country which they fear may become impregnated with sovietism. Among such witnesses we note James Stillman, a recent president of the National City Bank, who belied his name with an unenviable notoriety gained while spending the patrimony of his dad. He is a standing justification for a stiff inheritance tax, because the "social wealth" he inherited was of doubtful value to himself or to the public generally. In fact, a relationship may occur to some minds between the cognomen Stillman and Standpatter that is found in the modern vernacular.

Mr. Frank Vanderlip, a former vice president of the National City Bank, in assuming to speak for this country, for France and England, and for the universe generally, stated in a Senate hearing (Sixty-sixth Congress):

> There is a distinct feeling in France and England that it would be a just thing for us to forego asking the repayment of the large amount of money ($10,000,000,000) we have loaned.

With this statement the National City Bank officers seem to be unanimously agreed, a suggested reason being that foreign holdings held by its customers would thereby be enhanced in value, leaving a tax burden of $23,000,000,000 for the American taxpayer to pay with no offset or liquidation by foreign debts.

It is understood that Mr. George E. Roberts, vice president of the bank, is sponsor for the National City Bank tax views. With all due respect to his large wealth and his opinion against taxation of Standard Oil's profits, it may be proper to recall that when Mr. Roberts was before the National Institute of Science he, too, was favorable to the cancellation of the $10,000,000,000 of foreign debts, that would be left for American taxpayers to pay, and in a burst of Christian fervor he declared, among other things:

> Apparently a good many people are beginning to think that, perhaps, this country will do well to forgive its debtors and take advantage of whatever benefits are implied in the Lord's Prayer, etc.

Those who pay their legal taxes and see men of large wealth charged by Secretary Mellon with tax dodging due to investments in tax-free securities may quote some biblical terms not found in the Lord's Prayer when responding to Mr. Roberts's proposal to forgive $10,000,000,000 to foreign debtors.

THE BANK'S POLICY IN BUSINESS.

Let it also be remembered the National City Bank was recently chosen to be the fiscal agent for Liberia, in far-away Africa, and that this bank was selected to handle $5,000,000 of American taxpayers' money to be paid to holders of defaulting Liberian bonds. Approximately $1,500,000 was to be paid out of the Federal Treasury for depreciated bonds thus made payable at par, and $3,500,000 for exploiting Liberia with the money of American taxpayers. The proposal was defeated during the present session after it had passed the House by a close vote.

The National City Bank's taxing viewpoint may be gathered from its government of Haiti, aided by American marines as collectors for the bank's loans. Its reputation as a tax collector abroad extends to preventing a vote on the Haitian constitution and a confiscation of officers' salaries to meet its own holdings. So, too, the National City Bank has abundant reason to quote Russia as a horrible example, for the bank is reported to be a large holder of Russian bonds reaching many millions of dollars, which the soviet government refuses to recognize or pay, and their repudiation to-day is alleged to prevent recognition of that government by our own.

Other illustrations could be offered of its viewpoint when speaking authoritatively on the subject of Standard Oil, which it represents, but these would seem to suffice. Financially the National City Bank is considered the American Gibraltar, and if Congress permitted its branch banks to reach out in this country as abroad the National City doubtless would be as numerously represented as the proverbial canine has active inhabitants. Officials of smaller banks speak with bated breath of the huge New York bank that assumes to lead in finance, business, and supervision of politics, and when it comes to quoting the Lord's Prayer for the forgiveness of foreign debtors, other than its own, they find in it a model of interested disinterestedness.

It may be conceded that the National City Bank is a fair representative of the big business viewpoint of profiteering, exploitation, and accumulation of "social wealth" at public expense. Contributors who furnish the profits, surpluses, and "social wealth" are not much in evidence, but are entitled to consideration from those who make the laws and for whom we equally speak, and I am addressing you to that end.

ANOTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE.

A page from the human side of the ledger of last year is offered. In 1921, when one of the 33 subsidiary Standard Oil companies (New Jersey) was extracting upward of $77,000,000 net profits, or 77 per cent, from oil consumers of the land, the farmers of my own State, one of the most prosperous States in the country, suffered a loss in gross income over the year 1920 of $160,000,000, or of more than 33 per cent compared with the preceding year. The official figures for 1921 are $306,708,000, and for 1920, $480,800,000, which, however, tells only half the story, because in 1921 the purchasing power of the dollar was only 50 per cent pre-war prices with which to meet the necessities of upward of 2,000,000 men, women, and children of the State who are dependent upon their products of the farm.

Standard Oil's profits of 77½ per cent annually taken from 10,000,000 farmers and other consumers of the country are placed in the pockets of a comparatively small handful of stockholders. The bank contends this is "social wealth, no matter who owns it." The 10,000,000 farmers averaged less than $500 annual income for themselves and families in 1921, with 54 per cent increased cost of necessities over 1913, or less than one-half of the pre-war purchasing power. They have helped put an additional $2,000,000,000 into a comparatively few pockets through excess profits held out from corporate earnings as surplus aside from cash dividends, taxes, and all other charges, and as the big fish swallow the little ones, the number of stockholders will be reduced eventually to a few great interests.

Apart from these extortionate profits we now learn that the $2,000,000,000 of surplus is carefully tucked away in stock dividends and will avoid individual income taxes, which if collected under the law and not avoided would probably reach a half billion dollars contributed toward the support of Government from these excess profits. I have placed the facts before you in the Mellon correspondence, and these facts elicit a public protest that will not be affected by cries of sovietism, even by such powerful combinations as the National City Bank and the equally powerful Standard Oil system, which it represents.

HARSH TERMS BY TAX DODGERS.

Harsh terms are hurled at the heads of those who protest against extortion, profiteering, and tax dodging by men of large wealth or against the recognized power of those who are popularly understood to form "the invisible government" in this country. Protestants are termed radicals, reds, socialists, soviets, and other opprobrious names when they ask why big business does not obey the law and pay its just taxes. Secretary Mellon in his 1922 report, page 16, speaks specifically of tax evasions or tax dodging by large wealth in these words:

> Investors who would normally put their surplus funds into productive enterprise are driven * * * into investment in tax-exempt securities with the result that the Federal Government loses the revenue * * * and funds badly needed for productive purposes are directed into unproductive and frequently wasteful expenditure.

Secretary Mellon estimates $10,000,000,000 of this money has gone into tax-free securities in order to dodge taxes. The amount is double that sum, according to Doctor Seligman, and within three months upward of $2,000,000,000 more of "social wealth" has gone into stock dividends that will also dodge individual surtaxes.

JUSTICES DESCRIBE TAX DODGING.

Of "social wealth" one of the ablest members of the United States Supreme Court, in protesting against the MaComber decision, reported by one majority of the court, said:

> If stock dividends representing profits are held exempt from taxation under the sixteenth amendment, the owners of the most successful businesses in America will, as facts in this case (Standard Oil) illustrate, be able to escape taxation on a large part of what is actually their income.

That has come to pass, over the protest of the country that voted for the sixteenth amendment, of the Congress that passed the income tax law, and of four protesting judges of the court, who were outvoted by the other five members, and Secretary Mellon refuses to impose any tax penalties under the law.

After impaling tax dodgers, Mr. Mellon asks Congress to remove incentives for dodging by reducing the tax dodgers' taxes by one-half. No one charges Mellon with being a soviet or a Socialist because he threw the spot light on unprecedented tax dodging. Those terms go only with men who would see the law enforced, even if it affects the fortunes of Mr. Mellon himself. Some really sensible people believe that, instead of radicals, reds, and soviets, the country is in more danger from the rabid cult than from the radical; from the blacks, who, figuratively, fly the skull and crossbones of law's defiance, rather than from European reds; from self-constituted money sovereigns, or what Clemenceau terms our "money imperialism," rather than from soviets.

It does no good to call names. It gets nowhere. It frightens nobody but small children whether the tom-tom is drummed by the National City Bank or other great influences, while those in glass houses may find stone throwing a hurtful exercise. Men who are intelligent mortals—and most men are—do not lose their poise excepting during war or under stress of great excitement. In other words, the 100,000,000 people of this country who do the governing figuratively under the Constitution will not be seriously alarmed over the hundred thousand or more who shout imprecations to distract attention from their tax dodging, and who are credited with being the invisible government, with far-reaching influence over our business and political affairs to-day.

PROFITEERING WITH NECESSITIES.

The spirit of profiteering evidenced by oil, steel, cutlery, and all the huge melon-cutting concerns recently disclosed was never more universal or more cruel and unconscionable than it is to-day. Food, fuel, clothing, and, in fact, all necessities of life have caused consumers to contribute to the growth of human greed.

A 16,000 PER CENT MELON.

Let me say in this connection that it was recently disclosed that one cutlery company in Rhode Island increased its capital stock from $100,000 to $16,000,000, or 16,000 per cent. Now, that must have come, apart from cash dividends, through additional profits which they have not distributed during that time. That is a melon of some size that the consumers of the land have grown for the stockholders cutting.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will, certainly.

Mr. GARNER. I want to ask the gentleman if, in addition to the present statute which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate these matters and ascertain if they are not collectible under the present statute, if there is not another way to get at these people in the future? With reference to the particular case that the gentleman from Wisconsin has just mentioned, if you levied a very high stock tax and discriminating so that it would apply to stock dividends of the last two years, is it not possible to get some of that money?

Mr. FREAR. I have had that plan with some others in mind, but it seems to me that the safer plan if we can secure action by Congress would be to tax the undistributed profits, because by that means after you have made full allowance for corporation reasonable profits the earnings which ought to be allowed, the rest ought to pay a just tax. There ought to be a way to reach it, but of course we can not reach it now under the stock-dividend decision of the Supreme Court, although the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to impose penalties of 25 per cent where the surplus is not necessary for the business.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. In spite of the fact that the accumulations may be far above those necessary for the conduct of the business, no action can be taken without the certificate to that effect.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman probably knows that I have had a controversy with the Secretary of the Treasury—and, by the way, it has been in good spirit—to the effect that he ought to impose the penalty. I am not discussing that here, because I have already discussed it before in the House. It seems to me that that would be the way to reach it at present, and the penalty tax ought to be imposed. But in the absence of that penalty there ought to be some way to reach it, especially by law.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think, then, that that provision ought to come out of the law and leave it a question of fact whether there is an unlawful accumulation?

Mr. FREAR. It is absolutely impossible to frame any law that has not a certain discretionary power, and I am frank to say that I do not care to have discretionary power left with any official. Every man should be treated equally under the statute and the stronger we can make the law the better for those who believe it ought not to be evaded.

STANDARD OIL'S SOCIAL WEALTH.

Standard Oil makes public confession through the National City Bank that during peace and during war, for the last 10 years, one of its 33 subsidiaries has accumulated enormous net profits and profits on profits averaging 77½ per cent annually. These huge profits have been rolled up for stockholders represented by the National City Bank who find their profits translated into stock dividends to escape personal taxes due to a court decision that turned on the "guess" of 1 justice out of 9 in the MaComber case, while a kind-hearted Secretary of the Treasury who started the "melon cutting" now protects oil profits from penalties or surtaxes.

Mr. Roberts and other officers of the National City Bank, by an ingenious method of reasoning, after admitting the facts substantially as stated, now discover there has been added to our "social wealth" the profits and tax-exempt stock dividends pocketed by their customers. In other words, a "social wealth" that serves to fatten the prize porker largely goes to a quadruped that stands with four feet in the trough.

Those who protest against this National City Bank and Standard Oil method of reasoning are now reminded that Soviet Russia is a result of protests against the powers that be, to which the fellow who is pinched may respond, "Well, see what happened to the Czar and his followers, and to the National City Bank's Russian bonds." No sensible man finds any hope in either the reign of Trotsky or Lenin or of a drifting Czar who left behind a drifting Russia. Men who ignorantly shout about sovietism or socialism frequently do not know the fundamental principles governing their own America, and that may be a grievous error of several prominent bank officials.

THE PEOPLE ARE PATRIOTIC.

The people of this country are law abiding and love their Government and its institutions. Outside of New York City, which is the rendezvous for Old World immigrants, not 1 per cent of our people are in sympathy with sovietism. Not 1 per cent of the people of America would accept that form of government. Neither would 1 per cent quietly accept a czarlike government that seeks to rule with a rod of iron and blisters and bleeds the other 99 per cent under a plea that such money wrung from the helpless masses is "social wealth." The unprejudiced legislator seeking to avoid future possibilities reflected alike in Russia, Rome, and other governmental mistakes would steer clear of the rocks now and hereafter.

It is useless to discuss tax problems with men who believe their wealth should be exempted from tax laws, or that laws only are for the farmers, the socialists, labor, and for those who have little but pay much proportionately. When wealth serves notice on Congress and on the country it is superior to law, and when defeated at the polls or in legislative halls it gives its ultimatum what it will not pay and we can take it or leave it, then we may well ask who makes such announcements and such demands.

LAWS SHOULD BE ENFORCED.

Critics generally who from self-interest denounce Congress or measures designed to carry out the will of the people are losing their power to inspire terror over the lawmaking branch of the Government. The Government will be stronger, not weaker, when officers fearlessly enforce the law, when men, great and small, obey the law, and when courts do not usurp the functions of Congress or subvert the will of the people as expressed in constitutional amendments and substantive law.

I have no further comment to offer on "social wealth" that fears "sovietism." This does not seem to be a fair argument with those of us who are just as much in earnest, just as anxious for the welfare of the country as the National City Bank. The average Member is anxious to do what he can for the country at large and acts from right public motives, I believe. As was well stated by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] yesterday, most of us are comparatively poor men, but if we were rich men we would probably adopt the same plea that the men of wealth do to-day. We would invest in tax-free securities because no man cares to pay taxes if to be avoided legally; but having passed laws in which surtaxes are provided whereby the man best able to pay shall pay, Congress should enforce the law and meet evasions with curative legislation. Men of large means now escape through investments in tax-free securities, in stock dividends, but the little fellow who has a small income—some 1,900,000 more in 1921—as the gentleman from Georgia said yesterday, the little fellow has to pay his full share of the tax. He can not escape. He can not argue the question with the Treasury Department, he has no way of making investments in these stock dividends or tax-free securities. That is the situation, and although there may be no chance for immediate action now we ought to meet the bank's argument and later seek means of reaching this vast accumulation of "social wealth" which has been exacted from the people in addition to cash dividends and reasonable profits.

A FEW STOCK DIVIDENDS.

No complete list of stock dividends can be furnished, but a few cases that have been published in the press are attached hereto with memoranda that may be of interest. Bearing in mind that these stock dividends represent accumulations of surplus saved out of net profits, after deducting all expenses, including taxes, cash dividends, sometimes enormous salaries, and other items, it gives a bird's-eye view of some earnings, with accent on the word "some."

Because industry was "suffering" Congress repealed the excess-profits tax. The corporation tax of 12½ per cent instead of 40 per cent imposed under the excess-profits tax after deducting 8 per cent net profits explains why the excess-profits tax was objectionable. In like manner the stock dividend, by avoiding individual surtaxes, prevents any considerable paring of the enormous melons, a few of which are found in the following items.

SURPLUSES TO DIVIDE.

The following press copy is self-explanatory:

Although no definite explanation has yet been offered to account for the sudden rush of the Standard Oil companies to split up their big surpluses through the payment of huge stock dividends, belief is growing on the Street that such action is being taken to forestall some new Government financing plan, not yet disclosed to the general public, to impose a heavy tax on such surplus funds. It will be recalled that the Gulf Oil Co., which had a surplus of $112,000,000, was the first of the larger oil corporations to split up its shares this year. Gulf Oil gave 12 new shares for 1 old share, and charged par value of its stock from $100 to $25. Gulf Oil is understood to be controlled by the Mellon family, of Pittsburgh. Following close on Gulf Oil's action comes Standard Oil of California's 100 per cent stock dividend and Standard Oil of New York's 200 per cent payment.

Expectation now is that not only will Standard Oil of New Jersey and other Standard Oil units fall in line but that distributions of like character will be made by scores of big industrial and, possibly, railroad corporations whose surplus accounts bulk into the millions. If such turns out to be the case the Street will be flooded with new stock certificates, and we may fairly expect to see such public interest in the stock market as has never before been witnessed.

Six Standard Oil companies, which have not yet acted on stock dividends or surplus distributions so far this year, had a combined surplus at the close of 1921 amounting to over $1,000,000,000. They include:

Standard Oil of New Jersey	$594,000,000
Standard Oil of Indiana	143,000,000
Prairie Oil & Gas	86,000,000
Ohio Oil Co.	72,000,000
Vacuum Oil Co	62,000,000
Atlantic Refining Co	61,000,000

United States Steel is the leader of the general industrial group, with a profit and loss surplus at the close of 1921 amounting to $508,000,000, or next to the Standard Oil of New Jersey among the corporations whose securities are listed on the stock exchange. Following comes American Telephone & Telegraph, which at the end of 1921 had a surplus fund in excess of $108,000,000. General Motors, Texas Co., Swift & Co., Anaconda, General Electric, and Corn Products have surplus funds running to $45,000,000 or better.

A partial list of industrial corporations with surpluses of $20,000,000 or more includes:

	Surplus, 1921.
United States Steel	$508,000,000

BILLION DIVIDENDS IN STOCKS LAID TO SURPLUS TAX FEAR—PERLEY MORSE ALSO EXPLAINS THAT CORPORATIONS MAY THUS HOPE TO DISARM CRITICISM—POINTS OUT SHAREHOLDERS RECEIVE NO MORE VALUE—SWITCH MERELY MADE FROM SURPLUS TO CAPITAL—LIST OF 79 THAT CUT MELONS THIS YEAR.

Since the first of the year $1,000,000,000 in stock dividends have been declared by 70 corporations. Such a record-breaking figure for stock dividends naturally has led to considerable public interest. What does the phenomenon mean? What is the reason for it?

Does a stock dividend of 200 shares added to 200 shares of 5 per cent stock already owned by a shareholder mean that the holder is the fortunate possessor of 400 shares of 5 per cent stock, or 400 shares of 2½ per cent stock?

ADVANCES TWO REASONS.

The Standard Oil companies alone accounted for $781,324,311 of the immense total of stock dividends. The question of the explanation of the unprecedented performance was of such interest that the World yesterday sought the opinion of a recognized expert on financial matters. Perley Morse, head of Perley Morse & Co., public accountants, declared it to be his opinion that the corporations scent a surplus tax. He gave as a second cause the pressure of public opinion. This is Mr. Morse's analysis of the situation:

A FEW MELONS PRIOR TO DECEMBER 6.

These reasons speak for themselves.

"In my opinion, the reason why a great many of the large corporations are issuing stock dividends is because they expect sooner or later a tax upon their surplus; further, because they are liable to obtain less criticism from the public by paying smaller dividends upon a larger capital than larger dividends upon a smaller capital.

* * * * * * *

ONE POSSIBLE ADVANTAGE.

"The only possible advantage a shareholder gets by receiving a stock dividend is in cases where the old dividend is kept up upon the increased number of shares. If the company pays a reduced dividend on the increased number of shares equal to the dividend paid upon the old number of shares, the income to the stockholder is no different.

"The Standard Oil Co. excited a lot of criticism before and since its famous dissolution into numerous companies on account of the enormous dividends it paid upon its small capitalization, and it would not have done so if it had increased its capitalization to an extent that represented the value of its assets; while the United States Steel, when it was organized, was capitalized up to the full value of its assets and paid a much smaller dividend on its capital; hence excited less criticism."

BENEFITS AVERAGE INVESTOR.

The splitting up of shares into smaller units through stock dividends places within reach of the average investor many stocks that formerly were looked upon as investments for the richest men only. Employees of the Standard Oil concern who have bought these shares during the past 15 years have seen some of them jump 1,000 per cent in value. Some of the stocks of other companies outside of the leading oil concerns have made an equally good showing.

Less than two decades ago the Standard Oil properties represented an investment of several hundred millions. To-day its properties and working capital are estimated at several billions. When the Standard Oil of New Jersey was dissolved, the $100,000,000 capitalization was selling for about $400,000,000. The stock dividends declared by the Standard Oil companies in the last 11 months have a par value about double that.

OTHERS THAT MAY "CUT MELONS."

To-day many corporations would be warranted in declaring stock dividends and it is expected that within the next year they will do so. The possibilities include United States Steel, Baldwin Locomotive, American Locomotive, American Car & Foundry, National Lead, General Electric, and United Fruit.

A GREAT, JUICY MELON.

Cutlery was an item boosted in the last tariff bill to the limit. Apparently there was a reason, if the following enormous melon of 16,000 per cent is any standard of profits:

PAY STOCK DIVIDEND OF 16,000 PER CENT—BROWN & SHARPE, OF PROVIDENCE, FILE NOTICE OF NEW DISBURSEMENT—BIG INCREASE BY WANSKUCK—WORSTED MILLS TO DISTRIBUTE 1,500 PER CENT—PAN AMERICAN TO PAY 20 PER CENT.

BOSTON, Dec. 15 (by the Associated Press).—Another batch of increased capitalizations, with consequent stock dividends, brought further Christmas distributions representing many millions of dollars to stockholders in New England corporations to-day. To the large sums already diverted from surplus and other companies there were added several actions of recapitalization and disbursement that ran into many hundreds per cent.

The Browne & Sharpe Manufacturing Co., of Providence, making machine tools, filed with the secretary of state notice that its capital stock had been increased from $100,000 to $16,000,000. A stock dividend of 16,000 per cent was voted to dispose of the new stock.

WILL DISTRIBUTE 1,500 PER CENT.

Stockholders of the Wanskuck Co., manufacturers of worsted, voted at Providence to-day to increase the capital stock from $500,000 to $8,000,000. They voted also to distribute among themselves the new stock as a 1,500 per cent stock dividend.

The York Manufacturing Co., of Saco, Me., making cotton cloths, by action of the directors, proposed to the stockholders a doubling of the $1,800,000 capitalization with a 100 per cent stock dividend.

The Oakdale (R. I.) Worsted Co., after increasing its stock from $60,000 to $540,000, distributed the difference in the form of an 800 per cent stock dividend.

The Merrimac Woolen Co. increased its capital stock from $750,000 to $1,000,000 and provided for a stock dividend from capital and surplus, the exact amount of which was not announced.

The New Bedford Cotton Mills Corporation declared a stock dividend of 200 per cent, increasing its capital from $850,000 to $1,050,000 to make it possible.

20 PER CENT BY PAN AMERICAN.

NEW YORK, December 15.—E. L. Doheny, president of the Pan American Petroleum & Transport Co., announced to-day a 20 per cent stock dividend, payable in class B stock to holders of the common stock. Mr. Doheny said that the surplus of the company, after acquiring 90 per cent of the Mexican Petroleum Co., was more than $30,000,000 and that $12,000,000 of the surplus would be capitalized by the increase in stock.

PARKE, DAVIS & CO. TO DISBURSE 100 PER CENT.

DETROIT, December 15.—A stock dividend of 100 per cent, payable December 28, to stockholders of record December 18, was declared to-day by the board of directors of Parke, Davis & Co., drug manufacturers. Capital stock of the concern was increased from slightly less than $12,000,000 to $25,000,000, leaving slightly more than $1,000,000 for the stock in the treasury.

In addition to the stock dividend, the directors declared a cash dividend of $2 a share, amounting to 8 per cent, payable January 2 to stockholders of record December 18.

100 PER CENT BY SIMMONS CO.

KENOSHA, WIS., December 15.—The board of directors of Simmons Co. in Kenosha to-day declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent to be distributed among the stockholders of the common stock of the company. The new stock is to be issued immediately to stockholders of record November 30.

THIRTY DAYS' PROFITS REPORTED EXCEEDS GOVERNMENT DEBT PRIOR TO 1914.

Over a billion dollars distributed by Santa Claus gathered in from the rich and poor alike. All to escape any surtax, because of the Supreme Court stock-dividend decision in the MaComber case, 252 United States, decided 5 to 4 (see Mellon correspondence).

STOCK DIVIDEND TOTAL IS LARGE—RECORD DISTRIBUTION IN LAST 30 DAYS EXCEEDS UNITED STATES DEBT IN 1914.

This autumn will figure in the annals of finance as the period in which the distribution of stock dividends reached proportions never before known, not even in the days of large dividends by the Standard Oils before the war. In the last 30 days no less than 41 stock dividends and special distributions have been declared, the aggregate total of such dividends having been $1,119,000,000, or more than the total public debt of the United States in 1914.

The campaign of stock dividends has its basis chiefly in the desire of big corporations to split up their shares so that the market price can be scaled down within the reach of the small investor. Various other reasons have been assigned for the numerous dividends, among these reasons being the desire to capitalize surpluses and put them beyond the reach of the tax collector.

Still another reason for the special payments and stock dividends is cited in the newly inserted provision of the 1921 income tax law which makes it possible for large holders of stocks to liquidate their holdings under what is known as the capital-investment tax. The section of the stock law covering this point makes it possible for large holders of securities, which were owned for a period of two years or more, to liquidate their holdings, and under the capital-investment clause pay a straight tax of 12½ per cent on the profit from the sale of such securities in place of the regular surtaxes.

Regarding the many increases and resumption of cash payments, together with the payment of extra cash dividends, this is a clear reflection of the improvement noted in the business world since the beginning of the year and forecasts what these companies will show in earnings when the annual reports for 1922 are made public during the early part of 1923.

Some of the more important stock dividends declared by industrial corporations, banks, and trust companies within the last few weeks appear in the following table:

$1,200,000,000 IN MELONS.

Here are a few present and prospective melons that are self-explanatory:

MORE BIG FIRMS ORDER DIVIDENDS—FIFTY-FOUR CORPORATIONS HAVE NOW VOTED STOCK OR CASH PAYMENTS WITHIN MONTH.

(By the Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, November 21.—Four more large corporations to-day were added to the list of about 50 which within the last 30 days have declared extra stock and increased cash dividends approximating $1,200,000,000.

The Packard Motor Car Co. has declared a common-stock dividend of 100 per cent, payable December 9.

The R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. declared a 33⅓ per cent stock dividend on common and common B stock, payable in common B stock December 2 to stock of record December 1.

The Southwest Pennsylvania Pipe Lines declared a quarterly dividend of $4, payable December 30 to stock of record December 15. The dividend makes a total of $7 for the year, an increase of $1 over last year.

The Alliance Realty Co. declared a stock dividend of 2% per cent, payable December 5 to stock of record that date, and announced that stock so issued would participate in all cash dividends effective as of November 20. The company also declared the regular quarterly cash dividend of 2 per cent, payable January 10 to stock of record December 28.

ANOTHER BIG MELON.

BALTIMORE, November 21.—The Mortgage Guarantee Co., of Baltimore, has declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent, payable December 15 to share owners of record December 12. Stockholders also will receive the right to subscribe to 1,000 shares of stock (par value $100) at $150 a share in the ratio of one share for each two shares held. The shareholders will be asked to vote an increase in the stock from $200,000 to $500,000 on November 27.

NEW ENGLAND FIRM ACTS.

BOSTON, November 21.—A special meeting of stockholders of the New England Spring Bed Co. has been called for December 4 to authorize an increase of its preferred stock from $500,000 to $2,500,000 and of its common stock from $500,000 to $2,500,000.

The Reed, Prentice Co., of Boston, has filed a certificate with the commissioner of corporations showing an increase in its common stock from 7,500 shares of $100 par value to 16,000 shares of no par value.

COAL NOT CORN PROFITS.

In recording profits it is well to remember that the farmers are not dividing these juicy melons. They are created by the farmers and other consumers, but the farmers are not cutting melons to-day brought about by raising wheat, corn, potatoes, or apples. They only help to grow melons that are not found in the farmer's field.

Here is a good side light on coal. Coal is a necessity, and it is a timely subject with the temperature hovering around and below zero in the Northwest to-day:

An investigation of bituminous coal mining profits by the Federal Trade Commission disclosed an average of 15 per cent net income upon investment for the four years 1916 to 1920. The high figure of 29 per cent was set in 1917. Over the six-year period 1916 to 1921 the average net income upon investment is computed at 14.5 per cent. Profits in the anthracite industry are even higher, net income for the seven years 1912 to 1918 averaging 21.3 per cent on capital stock on the basis of returns by leading producers. Results in the four following years were even more impressive, including 1922, when the formidable storage supplies were completely distributed at top prices which more than offset the cost of the strike.

In comparison the return on £160,000,000 invested in the British coal mining industry is estimated below 9 per cent. This low figure is all the more surprising considering the close concentration of the mining companies into comparatively few and strong hands. In August, 1921, there were reported 1,160 companies operating 2,576 mines, but about half of these companies do not count. Around 98 per cent of the entire output is credited to 51 per cent of the companies.

EXPLAINS HOW MELONS GROW—LIKE THE SNOWBALL.

Speaking of coal, it is noted that melons grow like a snowball, and the consumers furnish the material apart from cash dividends and other regular corporate expenses.

SEE NO REASON FOR NEW STOCK ISSUES—RUSH TO DECLARE DIVIDENDS OF SURPLUS SAID TO BE BASED ON MERE SHADOW—TRADE EXPANSION CONTINUES—TEXTILE AND AUTO INDUSTRIES ARE MAKING RECORDS—LOADINGS SHOW PROGRESS.

(By Tracy J. Sutliff.)

NEW YORK, December 3.—The last week has been curiously lacking in economic developments of great significance. The stock market has moved within the narrow limits established by its professional character; the bond market has done much the same. Commodities have fluctuated over rather a wide range, particularly wheat, and foreign-exchange rates have moved in a fashion which before the war would have been epochal, but which now, due to tremendous speculation in foreign currencies, is regarded as more or less normal.

Perhaps the outstanding feature of the last week was the manner in which the rush to declare stock dividends by almost every company that has a sizable surplus broadened. Some weeks ago the Gulf Oil Corporation declared a 200 per cent stock dividend. This was followed by other large surplus distributions by some of the Standard Oil companies and then the smaller concerns fell into line.

GROWS LIKE SNOWBALL.

Like a huge snowball this tendency has grown both in size and in velocity until now it amounts almost to hysteria. With a few exceptions, notable among which are the United States Steel Corporation and the larger railroads, a majority of the biggest industrial concerns in the country having large surplus accounts have taken the initial steps looking to the distribution of at least a portion of this surplus through the medium of capitalisation.

In seeking a sound and substantial reason for this new condition, one meets only the single explanation of taxes. On all sides are heard stories of proposed revision of the Federal statutes which would place an impost on large corporate surpluses, but from official sources there has been a surprising reticence. Members of Congress have risen to demand of the Treasury Department why companies should be allowed to make these huge distributions which now amount to considerably more than $1,000,000,000 in stock, and the Treasury officials have patiently answered that the law as it stands to-day is sufficiently broad to permit taxations against a huge surplus account when it is shown that that surplus is unreasonable.

STARTED BY GULF OIL.

It is intimated by a Treasury official that the present helter-skelter method of surplus distribution reflects only the hysterical reaction of timid capital frightened perhaps by a shadow. When the Gulf Oil Corporation decided to pay a big stock dividend the shadow first made its appearance. Everyone knew that this company was more or less under the control of the Mellon interests. Everybody knew also that Andrew W. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury and they took it for granted that he "knew something." Next came the Standard Oil interests, and when they declared a series of large stock dividends the suspicion became a conviction. Thereafter a large number of companies that had piled up surpluses which were materially out of line with their capital accounts followed suit.

As a matter of fact it is quite unlikely that the Government has in mind any plan for the taxing of surplus accounts. It is reasonable to assume that if such legislation does develop it will be because the corporations have drawn attention to themselves through their hasty action. Except in rare instances stockholders have not benefited by this violent rush to pay stock dividends. They have only been given, in the form of stock certificates, what was already theirs in the shape of surplus. Of course, a few companies have placed their increased capital stock on a dividend basis which nets stockholders a larger return in dollars and cents, and to that extent have the stockholders benefited. In more cases, however, the new dividends have been fixed at a rate which changes but slightly or not at all the aggregate disbursements of the corporations.

LITTLE CHANGE IN BUSINESS.

So far as business is concerned the last week has shown little in the way of change. Steel mills are still averaging from 75 to 80 per cent of capacity and the textile and automobile industries are making records. Bank clearings show the same tendency toward expansion as compared with a year ago and car loadings and car shortage suggest the same high rate of progress as has been apparent for several weeks. Money has been in freer supply due to the let-up in requirements of the interior, but this is not especially important at this time because money has not been what might be called scarce this year.

Railroad earnings for the month of October which came to hand during the last week were not good, but all who have followed developments in the railroad industry and who have analyzed the situation carefully were expecting nothing else. So there was no great element of surprise there. Some of the carriers wrote off their entire strike losses in the month of September, but a far greater number preferred to extend these charges over the last four months of the year, and for this reason it is not unlikely that the monthly statements from now until the end of 1922 will be more or less disappointing. MORE MELONS.

Here are a few melons, watermelons, and other varieties grown by the public for the melon cutters and gatherers. They were picked out incidentally because they attracted attention. All were ripe for picking:

MAY CUT 40 PER CENT MELON.

NEW YORK, December 1.—The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Co. to-day called a special meeting of stockholders for December 18 to act on a proposal to declare a 40 per cent stock dividend. The present capitalization of the company is $10,000,000.

VICTOR VOTES $5 DIVIDEND.

CAMDEN, N. J., December 1.—The Victor Talking Machine Co. to-day announced a dividend of $5 per share on its new issue of common stock.

The last dividend of the company was paid in October and amounted to $10 a share. The old capitalization was $5,000,000 and the new one is $35,000,000.

WHITIN MACHINE TO PAY 1,400 PER CENT DIVIDEND, A RECORD.

NEW YORK, December 18.—(By U. N.)—The Whitin Machine Works, of New England, is about to pay a dividend of 1,400 per cent to its stockholders.

An increase in stock from $600,000 to $9,000,000 had been authorized.

This is the biggest dividend yet declared by big corporations for the ostensible purpose of evading a tax on accumulated and undistributed earnings.

FOUR HUNDRED PER CENT "MELON"—PARK HILL CO. JOINS STOCK-DIVIDEND RANKS.

FITCHBURG, MASS., November 20.—The Park Hill Manufacturing Co. to-day announced a stock dividend of 400 per cent. This action was explained as intended to adjust a balance between a low stock capitalization and a heavy capital investment. The company's mills here manufacture ginghams.

WALL STREET GOSSIP.

"Standard Oil has absolute control of industrial alcohol," is the statement of one close to the latter company's management. He declares that recent trading in the stock has originated with interests connected with 26 Broadway. Those usually familiar with Standard Oil affairs, in discussing the matter, point out that Standard Oil always had quite a little to say in industrial alcohol. Now that they have found that its products can be used advantageously, they naturally want more of a voice in the management. The company's sales are said to be running at the highest figure attained since the war boom. The financial position is said to be sufficiently strong to take care of the growing business. With continued improvement, it is expected that before long alcohol will join the growing list of companies resuming dividends.

UNENDING PROCESSION OF STANDARD OIL MELONS.

The "unending procession" of Standard Oil melons is marching on. The Atlantic Standard Oil cut only 900 per cent. Of course, that looks rather large to the farmer who is scratching to make ends meet, but he helped grow the melon, if that is any consolation:

Atlantic Refining, which has just declared a 900 per cent stock dividend, is expected to go on a dividend basis of $1 per share for all the new stock. This would mean annual dividends of $40 per share on the equivalent of one share of the present stock, on which the rate has been $20 per year. While this new dividend rate has not been actually declared, it is reported that officials of the company anticipate such an increase. This is decidedly interesting in view of the fact that all of the Standard Oil companies which have declared stock dividends so far have been reticent on the subject of dividends, or, if anything has been said, the only inference that could be drawn has favored a continuation of the old dividend rate. The position of Atlantic Refining as the largest earner in the Standard group favors the larger disbursement.

THIS IS ANOTHER PICTURE OF THE SAME MELON.

[From the Financial Review, December 2.]

MORE S. O. "MELONS" PICKED FOR PUBLIC—EXTRA JUICY ONE OF 900 PER CENT.

The unending procession of Standard Oil stock dividends was enlivened by a "whopper" declaration of 900 per cent by Atlantic Refining Co., the largest "melon" cut by any member of the "trust" group this year. Standard of Indiana, which holds the distinction of having disbursed the largest stock dividend ever paid—2,900 per cent, in 1912—also entered the list, this time with a 100 per cent stock dividend declaration.

In the case of Atlantic Refining, no special meeting of stockholders to increase capital is necessary, as only $5,000,000 is outstanding from $50,000,000 authorized. Distribution will be made December 20 or as soon as possible thereafter. Larger cash dividends upon the new shares are also rumored.

Stockholders of Standard Oil of Indiana are called to a special meeting December 27 to increase the authorized capital from $140,000,000 to $250,000,000. The proposed stock dividend will be paid to holders of record December 28. This will be the third large stock dividend for Indiana Standard, the initial disbursement having been 2,900 per cent, in 1912, and the second payment 150 per cent, in 1920, when par value was also reduced from $100 to $25. At the beginning of 1922 there was outstanding $107,360,455 capital stock, which will now be brought up to $214,720,910.

Share owners of Ohio Oil Co., Standard's big operating representative in the Northwest, have authorized increasing capital from $15,000,000 to $60,000,000. The additional stock will be distributed as a 300 per cent stock dividend December 30 to owners of record December 1. Directors have also posted the usual quarterly dividend of $3 in cash, payable on the same dates.

Here comes the "manufacturer" that collects in the melons, from 100 to 16,000 per cent. He professes to fear that the tax-gatherer may limit his profits. He signals "Danger ahead."

[From the Manufacturer (semimonthly edition), published by the Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia, November 25, 1922.]

"DANGER AHEAD."

With the installation in office of the new Congress there will be in existence a situation filled with constant danger to the conservative element and policies of the Nation. It will be the embodiment of the drift that has been going on in certain sections of the country, whose object is to "liberalize" legislation. There will be attempts to promote a line of legislative enactments utterly at variance with the ideas of those people who do not wish government to be something paternalistic. The conservative interests of the country can none too soon inquire what they purpose to do about it.

* * * * * * *

There will be projects of which our farm-loan enterprise is only a beginning, further cheapening the rates of interest for loans on agricultural products and widening the field to which this advantage may apply. There must be faced plans to have public ownership and operation of storage warehouses and grain elevators, such as was tried out in North Dakota. There will be attempts to have Government ownership of the railroads, the telephone, and the telegraph. Business surplus will be heavily taxed, stock dividends will be penalized, and an end put to tax-exempt securities, if the busy radical leaders can have their way.

Who is to pay for all of this if the program goes through? The well-to-do people of the East, through income and inheritance taxes. The greatest war in all history saddled upon the American people a measure of taxation, including that of city, State, and Nation, wholly without precedent. The war has been over for years. Yet the prospect is now for higher taxes rather than lower. But it was only some 15 years ago that a Federal income tax was proposed for this country, to be greeted with a tremendous storm of opposition by a Nation free at that time from such a levy on business and industry. We have gone far since then along the tax road, from the day not far back when the Federal Government supported itself from customs and internal revenues.

One of the facts of American life is that government is the most expensive agency known to man for the conduct of business. * * *

GULF OIL'S PROFITS.

Gulf Oil that recently carried a 200 per cent melon is again in the limelight. It acquired undue prominence because of Secretary of the Treasury Mellon's share of the melon that began the fatal procession. Its significance occurs from the fact that Secretary Mellon can not impose the 25 per cent penalty on accumulations of surplus reaching, in one case I have quoted, to 16,000 per cent, because his own company, Gulf Oil, started the melon cutting. All this has been discussed in the Mellon correspondence but it was not then known that other dividends were to be issued on the heels of the melon carving of Secretary Mellon's company:

[From the New York World, December 20.]

STOCK DIVIDENDS IN MORE STOCKINGS—HUMBLE AND GULF OIL COMPANIES REMEMBERED BY SANTA—IN OTHER LINES.

Directors of the Humble Oil & Refining Co. have declared a 75 per cent stock dividend and also ordered that the present capital stock of $100 a share par value be changed to $25 par. This will give each holder of the present $100 stock seven shares at a lower par value.

The action of the directors increases the capital stock from $25,000,000 to $43,750,000. The company has also declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 on the old stock of $25,000,000, payable January 1. Stock declaration is payable December 30. It is stated that the dividend on the new stock will be at the rate of $1.20 a share a year. The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey is the largest stockholder in the company. At last reports the company was credited with holding about 70 per cent of the Humble Co. stock.

Directors of the Gulf Oil Corporation, which is controlled by the Mellon interests, met in Pittsburgh and declared a quarterly dividend of 37½ cents on the new $25 par stock, payable January 2 to stock of record December 20. This rate is equivalent to $18 a year on the old stock, which paid $6 yearly.

A meeting of the preferred and common stock holders of the Saco-Lowell Shops has been called for December 28 to increase the capital stock of the company by authorizing $2,643,800 par value new second preferred stock. It is understood that the entire amount of the stock will be disbursed to the common-stock holders as a 50 per cent stock dividend.

STERLING PRODUCTS IN LINE.

The Sterling Products Corporation has increased its dividend from 75 cents quarterly to $1 quarterly, and the stockholders will receive the increase February 1 next. It will be paid to stock of record January 12.

The banks are showing up well in the general prosperity. Among those that will gladden the stockholders' Christmas is the Nassau National. It has just declared its regular 3 per cent quarterly dividend and also an extra of the same amount, both of which are payable January 2 to stock of record December 28.

Chicago Railway Equipment Co. yesterday declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2 and a stock dividend of 50 per cent, both payable December 30 to stock of record December 19.

The United Engineering & Foundry Co. has declared a stock dividend of 50 per cent on the common, payable December 30 to holders of record December 23.

Falling off in the trade of the shipping companies caused the American-Hawaiian Steamship Co. yesterday to cut its quarterly dividend to 25 cents a share, as against 87½ cents, which the company paid in the preceding quarter. The dividend just declared is payable January 2 to stock of record December 20.

MINING COMPANY INCREASE.

Stockholders of the Tamarack & Custer Consolidated Mining Co. have voted to increase the capital from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000, and the directors have declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent, payable December 30 to stock of record December 28.

To permit payment January 2 of a 100 per cent stock dividend to holders of record December 30, the stockholders of the Worcester Salt Co. yesterday voted to increase the capital from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000, the increase being provided by the transfer of $1,000,000 from the surplus and undivided profits to capital account.

Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Co., which has just declared a 40 per cent stock dividend, will pay it to owners of record December 18. The action of the stockholders increases the capital $4,613,490, or to $16,147,215. Stock has $50 par and has paid 10 per cent annually since organization in 1909, in addition to frequent extra cash dividends, aggregating 265 per cent, between 1913 and 1920. This is the first stock declaration. The authorized capital is $20,000,000.

STANDARD OIL'S LIST.

From the press we learn of Standard Oil's private preserves, which include well-grown melons, properly preserved:

[From the New York Times, November 22.]

STANDARD OILS PAID $881,960,684 IN 1922—TOTAL DISTRIBUTION SINCE DISSOLUTION OF OLD NEW JERSEY COMPANY IS $2,389,693,252—PRESENT YEAR SETS RECORD—EXCEEDS ANY PREVIOUS TWELVE-MONTH PERIOD BOTH IN CASH AND STOCK DIVIDENDS—MORE PAYMENTS EXPECTED—EXTRA DIVIDENDS IN MONEY AND SHARES ARE LOOKED FOR FROM SEVERAL PIPE LINES.

The various companies comprising the so-called Standard Oil group have distributed to stockholders during the current year a total of $881,960,684, either in the form of cash dividends, "rights," or stock dividends. In the 10 years, 1912 to 1921, inclusive, a total of $1,507,032,568 was distributed in the same forms, making a total of $2,389,593,252 since the dissolution of the old Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey in 1911. The cash dividends distributed this year, amounting to $128,856,373, establish a new high record for any year in the history of the independent operation of the various units of the old company, while the stock dividend distributions this year also establish a high record.

A recapitulation of the total for 1922 and the previous decade follows:

Total cash dividends.	Total par value stock dividends.	Total par of rights.
1922—$128,856,373	$751,104,311	$2,000,000
1912-1921 inclusive—$924,855,968	288,200,000	294,576,600
Total for 11 years, 1912-1922 inclusive—$1,053,712,341.	1,039,304,311	296,576,600

Prior to 1922 the largest total in any year in cash dividends was $115,736,700 for 1920, which was nearly duplicated in 1921.

The record of cash and stock dividends declared by the various companies since January 1, 1922, up to the present time, as compiled by Jenks, Gwynne & Co., is as follows:

[1] The outstanding amount of each of these stocks has been slightly increased since Dec. 31, 1921, but as the exact amount is not known yet, total payments are calculated on the Dec. 31, 1921, capitalization.

In addition to the companies mentioned above which have declared large stock dividends, similar action is expected by other units before the end of the year, while some of the pipe-line companies are expected to declare extra cash dividends. Those companies which are expected to declare stock dividends include the Atlantic Refining Co., Standard of Indiana, Prairie Oil & Gas, Prairie Pipe Line.

The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey leads the list in both cash and stock dividend distributions. In the payments from 1912 to 1922, inclusive, this company disbursed a total of $216,344,436 in cash on the common stock, $37,599,278 on the preferred, or a total of $253,943,714, which is approximately one-fourth of the cash dividends distributed by all companies. Its subscription rights (to preferred stock) total $196,766,600, or about two-thirds of all rights given by these companies in the 11 years. Its stock dividend of $393,333,200 par value is about a third of the total par value of stock dividends by the entire group.

FEARS OF TAXATION.

The following is not of special moment excepting it explains why the vast crop of melons were cut after they were ripe. It would be cruel on the part of the new Congress to do anything that would disturb the melons or melon cutters, and Congress rarely does cruel things. It allows tax-free securities, or, rather, the Supreme Court allows all kinds of escape from the income tax, and that is law to-day:

STOCK DIVIDEND LAID TO FUTURE TAX FEARS—DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUSES DUE TO POSSIBLE DRASTIC ACTS BY NEW CONGRESS.

NEW YORK, December 4.—With stock dividend declarations announced by leading Standard Oil companies and other prominent industrial corporations during the last few months amounting to approximately $1,500,000,000, the question as to what is the purpose of this flood of stock distributions continues to attract more attention as one announcement of such a dividend follows another. That the question of taxes is back of the entire movement, says the New York Times, is the belief which dominates in the financial district, but as already pointed out there is also the desire on the part of the officials of companies whose stocks have been selling higher to bring down quotations to a level which would appeal more to the general investing public, and also the desire of these officials to bring capital more in line with the investment in the business rather than continue to pile it up in surplus accounts. These latter reasons, however, are considered of minor importance so that all arguments are based upon the question of taxes.

In regard to taxation, the provisions of the present law are well known. These are not believed to be the cause for the recent flood of stock dividend announcements. What the officials fear, according to opinion, is the possibility of drastic revision in the tax laws when the new Congress meets for regular session. Before this takes place, however, it is expected that agitation will be brought about to have the entire question of the taxability of stock dividends presented to the Supreme Court for review.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

[By unanimous consent Mr. FREAR was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I should perhaps ask the pardon of the House for taking up the amount of time assigned to me out of the time allotted for the discussion of this important bill, and I am going to do my very best to get through in less than 30 minutes and yield back some of the time to the gentleman in control of the time.

This is the annual appropriation bill dealing with the great industry of agriculture. During the past two years the people of the Nation apparently have come to appreciate the importance of agriculture, not only as the source of their food and clothing but as the source of business, as the root of our entire industrial plant in a most definite sense. During the first of the period of readjustment following the war, when the strain, the pressure, came against the interrelated industries of the country, we broke at the point held by agriculture because there was no economic strength there. When agriculture lost its purchasing power the factories were closed, and idle men walked the streets of the great cities of this country. I believe we have reached the point where definite results of universal benefit may be expected. We now have all sorts of blocs—we have the farm bloc in the Senate and the farm bloc in the House, and everybody is trying to do something for the farmer. When the President appeared before the House and Senate in joint session the other day he made certain observations and recommendations, and I ask the Clerk to read from that address the paragraphs which I have marked.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

There are necessary studies of great problems which Congress might well initiate. The wide spread between production costs and prices which consumers pay concerns every citizen of the Republic. It contributes very largely to the unrest in agriculture and must stand sponsor for much against which we inveigh in that familiar term—the high cost of living.

No one doubts the excess is traceable to the levy of the middleman, but it would be unfair to charge him with all responsibility before we appraise what is exacted of him by our modernly complex life. We have attacked the problem on one side by the promotion of cooperative marketing, and we might well inquire into the benefits of cooperative buying. Admittedly the consumer is much to blame himself, because of his prodigal expenditure and his exaction of service, but Government might well serve to point the way of narrowing the spread of price, especially between the production of food and its consumption.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it is in no spirit of criticism that I direct attention to that part of the President's message, and direct attention to the fact that some time ago you authorized that this identical study be made. You created a Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, of which Mr. ANDERSON, the gentleman in charge of this bill, was the chairman. That commission made a concrete recommendation to the country after nine months of exhaustive study, and I ask the Clerk to read that.

The Clerk read as follows:

With the better organization and standardization of farm production, the organization of farmers' cooperative associations, the evolution of grades more accurately reflecting the qualities of farm products in relation to use, the establishment of concentration warehouses at points within the areas of production, issuing receipts or certificates which clearly indicate such grades and guarantee the physical protection and quality of product, it should be possible to develop a system of commodity exchanges through which these commodities may be sold and under which such products will move directly from areas of production to points of use under prior sale without the necessity of previous inspection and with the assurance of delivery of a product by grade conforming to the user's or consumer's requirements.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss as briefly as I can those recommendations.

My observation during my period of service in Congress is that we talk too much, too generally, investigate too much, study too much, and do not undertake to apply to a given situation the knowledge which we acquire. Let us see what the concrete suggestions are.

Of course, we require in this country a system of long-time agricultural credits. Everybody recognizes that, and a bill has been introduced looking to that end. In this connection, may I say that we have made a fundamental mistake in dealing with the extension of agricultural credits in taking the position that paper secured by agricultural commodities being held by producers ought not to be regarded as eligible for rediscount through the Federal reserve system. It is nobody's business when the farmer sells his commodity. He raises it and it is his, and as long as he tenders a good sound basis for credit he ought to be the judge of when it is to be sold. If he is permitted to hold it, instead of the speculator, the consumer will not have to pay a speculator's profit. That is not merely to the interest of the agricultural producer. I make the further suggestion that we are rapidly moving toward a condition in this country with regard to the volume of agricultural production when there will not be sufficient surplus carried over from the years of high production to make sure a sufficient surplus in the lean years. The difference in the price of the same commodity from year to year is too great. It is of the highest importance that somewhere we find, and find soon, in the economic structure of this country a reservoir where we can hold over from the years of high production to supplement the yield of the years of low production.

There is too much uncertainty as to when the bugs or the droughts will come. The manufacturer can speed up to meet any emergency demand. With a given amount of equipment and material he can calculate with certainty almost as to his future output. Farmers can not do that. The farmer who helps to carry over from a bountiful harvest helps to guard the people against hunger, or at least ruinous prices when the lean years come.

If we make it possible for the farmer, when the volume is excessive and the price is low, to carry this surplus himself, then there will be something for the people in the city to eat when the bugs and the drought comes, and we will not have this spread of price which we now have, which ruins farmers when the yield is good and makes the cost of living too heavy a burden in the lean years.

I ask nothing for the farmer which is not in accord with the highest public interest. We have reached the point where that interest demands a definite, comprehensive, constructive policy for agriculture. Much of this demand for radical legislation comes as a penalty for inexcusable delay. In addition to a proper credit system, not one cut to fit the necessities of the manufacturer or of the merchant, but of the farmer, we must find a way to shorten the route of physical movement of agricultural products, and in some way we must reduce the number of intervening profits.

In some way we must reduce the physical waste of these commodities after they have been harvested. These are the definite concrete propositions which challenge us now as a people. Those are the things which enter so largely into what we call the high cost of living. They cause the farmer to get too little and compel the consumer to pay too much. How are we going to do it? How can it be done? There is but one way to do it, and I submit with all deference to gentlemen who might differ—I do not believe they differ—we must make it possible to deal with agricultural commodities on paper. In addition to credits we must evolve a better method of sales and distribution of agricultural products than the shipping of those commodities from the farms to the concentration centers to find a market. If we are to effect the greatest good, they must move from the place of first concentration to the points of use by the shortest railroad and steamboat line. In order to do that they must move under prior sale or with an assurance of use at destination equivalent to that. There is no other way to do it. The time has come when we must stop running around in a circle. If I may be permitted to speak the certainty which I feel, this is the only route that we may travel with a warranted hope of success. It is the first essential, gentlemen, that agricultural commodities be standardized with regard to requirement for use, and the quicker we learn the better.

You never can take these so-called produce exchanges that are privately owned, merchant controlled, where gambling transactions are admittedly carried on, and build upon them as a foundation a real market for agricultural commodities. [Applause.] During the 10 years almost of my service I have seen the Congress legislating, legislating, trying to compel this service from privately owned institutions which say they can not function in that regard. The fact that we have been trying to compel them to render this service is an evidence of our belief that it is needed. They do not want to, can not, and we know if forced to the effort would desire to fail, and yet we continue to try to have them perform this public function. I offer no apology for this statement. From times most remote the establishment and regulation of public market facilities has been recognized as government's chief duty with regard to commerce. That duty discharged in adjustment with modern economic conditions and trade necessities, not the buying and selling for the people, but the creation of the possibility of general trade contact, and the necessity for many of our regulatory laws would disappear, democracy in business opportunity would be established, and the laws of commerce which God has made would have a chance to operate. I make this general observation as a preface to the statement that it is at the marketing end where the chief difficulty of agriculture lies, and there the chief duty of the Government is. Unreasonable demands upon the Government come largely from the failure of the Government to do what it ought to do at the time it ought to be done.

Let us forget about these so-called produce exchanges. They never can function directly in the economic sale and distribution of farm products. These products are capable of being dealt in on paper, of being bought and sold for shipment to any point of consumption in the world while they are still at the points of first concentration. It is difficult, of course. Everything worth while is difficult. But we have reached the point where we must tackle the job. First, these commodities must be graded according to requirement for use, as distinguished from requirement for future board transactions. Each considerable quantity possessing distinctive characteristics determinative of the use to which it is best adapted must have a separate grade classification. If we will get away from the limitations imposed by the future boards, it can be worked out.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not true the Secretary of Agriculture is just now through its department carrying on an investigation of the standardizing of tobacco, for instance, and——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; much work, and what I say is not in criticism of the Department of Agriculture. What I am trying to do is to get before us a picture of the structure of economic strength which we must build for agriculture. It was brought out in the hearings of the Commission on Agricultural Inquiry that nobody who wants to use cotton or grain can depend upon the purchase of those commodities through any of the so-called exchanges. Why? Because they have in mind a particular sort of finished product which requires for production a particular sort of raw material, which they can not depend upon getting when they purchase through the exchanges or when they purchase by grade, due largely to improper and incomplete grade classifications, which in turn is to a degree due to the influence of future board requirements. With these commodities properly standardized, and when they are stored in the warehouses where they are physically and morally protected, and the warehouse issues a certificate that indicates the exact quantity and quality of the commodity, and that warehouse receipt has behind it financial responsibility that guarantee both physical protection of the commodity and integrity of the whole transaction, then you create a universal potential commercial status for that commodity while it is still at the point of first concentration. In other words, the commodity can stay where it is while you send that which represents it into the market to be sold.

Proper standardization, proper system of warehousing, and then the third thing that is necessary, namely, the place where that certificate, representing the actual commodity stored in the warehouse, physically and morally protected, can be offered for sale, some place, not a little obscure place hidden in a department, but some place, figuratively speaking, which stands on the hilltop of commerce where everybody who has a commodity for sale can offer it by its descriptive grade and everybody who wants to buy can buy, not necessarily in person but by telegraph or through an agent on the ground. That is a mere detail. This would create the possibility of universal trade contract between people who have commodities for sale and people who want to buy.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. In a moment. That would make possible for cotton in a warehouse in Waxahachie, in my district, properly classified, properly certificated, properly protected, and properly guaranteed—it would make it possible for that cotton while remaining there to be placed in trade with China, Liverpool, Bremen, Havre, or wherever cotton is used. Then when it is sold it could move from Waxahachie by the shortest physical line to the point of use with the minimum number of intervening profits and charges.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. I just wish to ask the gentleman from Texas, who is an expert on these matters, if he does not believe, as an alternative to the proposition that he has just now laid down concerning the warehousing of all these products, that if the suggestion of the President of the United States, made recently, were followed by Congress and credit could be extended to the farmers of the country on their products, such as wheat and cotton, would it not be better to have the farmer build his own granary or his own warehouse for storing his wheat or his cotton if he had the credit and he could hold it there himself and avoid one of the things we are now cursed with, and that is the lack of transportation occasioned by all of the farmers in a certain section wishing to take advantage of the market at the same time?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have the same object in view, and I thought I had made myself clear. I agree with the President as to the necessity of having long-time agricultural credits. I agree thoroughly with the President that we must get rid of what we call "crop-moving periods." It taxes unnecessarily the financial institutions of the country and the transportation facilities of the country. It is a foolish thing. But the point I make is, in addition to long-time credit, is that it is highly essential that these commodities move under prior sale from the point of first concentration to the point of use by the shortest physical line. I want to make it possible for the farmer to hold his stuff until the market condition is ripe for sale, and then when he, with a group of other farmers selling in cooperation, wants to sell they have a chance in trade contact with the general markets of the country and of the world. I do not believe it is possible for an individual farmer not acting in cooperation with his neighbors, even if he has got credit or if acting with them to accomplish what is desired, unless there be the chance to reach the general market before the products are shipped for sale. We must not be mistaken or confused about the value of credit. Credit is valuable, but credit means interest and a sale at some time to pay the principal and interest. A better marketing system will be as badly needed when the sale is made as if no credit had been extended. They are both needed. That is the point. It takes all of what I have enumerated, if I may use the figure, to span the difficulty. Credit for orderly marketing, but the broadest possible market in which to sell.

I would not have in mind the idea that immediately after the harvest the farmers would send all the commodities they contemplated selling into a public warehouse; but I do believe that you must be able to put somewhere behind these commodities such assurance of financial responsibility as that a stranger, a man who has never seen the commodity, who has no knowledge of the financial responsibility of the owner or of his integrity, would have full confidence to buy the commodity. In other words, to do with regard to agricultural commodities what we have done with regard to rural credits. Under our farm land bank system a farm is appraised and put under mortgage, and a man in New England buys that mortgage on a Texas farm, we will say, which he has never seen. He does not know whether the man who owns it is a thief or not; he does not care. He has confidence in the intervening agency of inspection and guaranty. The difficulty with regard to sale of agricultural commodities is almost identical with the difficulty with regard to the sale of rural credits.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want to divert the gentleman from his argument, but he said that one difficulty about our deliberations on these matters was that we talked a great deal and did not get down to concrete action. Now, as to the classification of commodities and the warehousing of commodities, does the gentleman think that should be done by private enterprise and cooperation, or should there be a quasi authority or an absolute authority over these agricultural functions? What is the gentleman's thought on that?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have thought very much of that. I do not advocate Government building warehouses. The gentleman's question touches the only point where there is any reason or excuse for making an additional study. In my judgment it is a matter of ascertaining in the general coordination of the national and State departments of agriculture the distribution of governmental assistance and supervision. The total of that in turn will depend upon how much of that which is required to be done can be left to cooperative effort and private agencies. The first thing, however, is for us to agree as to what ought to be done. The Department of Agriculture of the Nation, the departments of agriculture of the several States, with no great readjustment can, if agreed to be necessary, provide the Government's share of aid, and the cooperative organizations of the farmers I believe can supply the rest. That is the only study yet to be made. I do not know, but I do have this in mind, the thought that the Department of Agriculture of the Nation, created by the Government and its people to help deal with the big problems of agriculture, ought to feel, and I hope it does feel, the same degree of responsibility and duty in helping agriculture to deal with the big problems of sale and distribution that it feels when it renders service with reference to the problems of production and preservation of soil fertility. The fact is, gentlemen, practically speaking, if you help agriculture to deal with the sale and distribution end of its business, the point where the nerve center of agriculture is now located, if you help the farmer get a fair share of what the consumer pays for his commodity, the question of production and preservation of soil fertility will pretty largely take care of themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Does not the gentleman believe that if we could get money on longer terms or at a lower rate of interest and then take advantage of the national warehouse law that we have and of the cooperative marketing law, we could get along fairly well?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe we could get along fairly well and very nicely. But I do insist, my good friend, that we need the things that I have enumerated. We need the credit which the gentleman has spoken of. We need the warehouse system that he has spoken of. We need the proper standardization of these commodities by which they can be given a universal trade status while at the point of first concentration; and then when we have the agricultural product ready for sale we need a place that sustains relatively the same position with regard to the commodity that a jockey yard bears to the fellow who has a horse to swap. I do not want to stop short of the manifest destination. This grading is to prepare for sale by grade. This warehousing is to protect physically and provide a guaranty of correct grading. This credit is to make orderly marketing possible. Then the next thing obviously is the market place; otherwise we have it all dressed up with nowhere to go. The market is the objective. Let us provide the possibilities of trade contact.

In the little country towns in my country we used to have a place near the courthouse square where on first Mondays every man knew who had a horse to swap that he could find other people of similar disposition, and by assembling there it saved a great deal of time and expense and trouble in the horse swapping that the country did. I want to create that which in the sale of farm products by grade will be to such sales what the jockey yard was to horse swappers, except that that which represents the commodity would be sent to market, and when the commodity moves it would not be to market but to the place where it would be consumed.

Mr. LAZARO. Let us see if I have this thing right now. Under the national warehouse law the farmers of your country, for instance, could build a bonded warehouse, could they not?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Every bale of cotton in this bonded warehouse would be weighed and graded by a Government agent, who would be neither a buyer nor a seller. Is not that true?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Then with a receipt issued by that bonded warehouse, all it would need would be someone willing to loan money on long time at a low rate of interest, and a man could borrow money on his warehouse receipt.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If the gentleman will excuse me, I should like to proceed in the order which I have in mind.

Mr. LAZARO. I should like to get the gentleman's views on this national warehouse proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I have tried to make myself clear on it. In my judgment, it is going to take all four of the things I have enumerated to put agricultural commodities in trading contact with the market so as to reduce to a minimum the intervening profits, reduce physical waste, and make it possible for the farmer to get a larger share of the dollar that the consumer pays than he now gets. That is the thought I have in mind. Each of the things which I have enumerated sustains a natural relationship to the others. They are parts of the whole. They fit into each other. Each is, in the nature of things, dependent upon all the others for its proper functioning. To illustrate, agricultural commodities properly standardized, physically and morally protected in a warehouse and in general trade contact with the markets all the time through a real produce exchange, would constitute the best and safest possible basis for the rural credit system we have been talking about. Such commodities, in the event of their distress due to the financial necessities of their owners and your market conditions, would have a chance to be reached by the speculative energy of the country, which now is absorbed by chalk-mark transactions on future boards.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know how much time I have remaining. I had 30 minutes to begin with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 28 minutes. He has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Is the gentleman prepared to state how he would apply his idea to the live-stock industry? I am very much interested in that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will try to state it very briefly. I can not speak as an expert, as the gentleman can in regard to live stock, but I have been out on the ranches a good deal. I believe if we had a proper system of standardization of live stock the gentleman from Kansas could go into a herd of 1,000 white-faced cattle and separate them into five different bunches of more uniformity than any expert cotton grader can separate 1,000 bales of cotton into five lots. That is my idea.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. The gentleman compliments me too highly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think it can be done. I have talked with a great many ranchmen who seem to think it can be done. If it can be done, then that is the end of it. If practical, this is true if you had a market herd graded, you could list that market herd by grades and thereby put it in trading contact with every packing house while the herd was still on the range. When it was moved it would be moved to the point of purchase for slaughter with no uncertainty as to price, and you would not be at the disadvantage at which you now are, after you have shipped your stock into the cattle pens, where they have to be maintained at a high cost, and are subject to shrinkage, and you are almost at the mercy of the men who want to buy. You do not have a fair trade opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. When the gentleman extends his remarks I ask him to elaborate them by stating his machinery for selling and for reaching the market, after the product is stored.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will be glad to do so if I can find time to extend. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with a great deal of what our friend from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] has just said, particularly as to our manner of doing business here, perhaps too much talking and too little accomplishment. I do not know that there is any way of correcting that condition. I have no suggestion to offer as to the method of procedure, but I think the illustration that some of us saw last week in one of the well-known weeklies is quite apropos. It was a take-off on our manner of doing business here, the politeness that we show in debate, and so forth. It was supposed to be a debate on a resolution to send for a physician for some one who had been injured. The debate and the politeness among the Members and the parliamentary procedure ran on so long that eventually the injured person died. So an amendment was offered to send for the coroner instead of for a doctor, and even that was objected to. I use that as an illustration for a condition which is developing very rapidly to-day in New England. The coldest part of our winter is coming on. We suffer severely from low temperature, particularly in the section of New England where I live. I have been in correspondence with some of my friends at home during the last few days, and I find that the fuel situation there is very critical indeed. I do not know who or what is to blame, beyond the strike conditions of last summer, with which we are all familiar. The President came before us and asked to have a fact-finding commission appointed, and we have a fuel director here in Washington for the Federal Government. We have one in Massachusetts for the State, and I think other States have the same. But the fact remains, my friends, that we do not get coal. I do not pretend I can offer any cure for that condition. The people expect we should and want us to do so. I stand ready in any way possible to cooperate with my colleagues to bring about a better condition of fuel supply for New England. Of course, the average citizen has some rather indistinct and vague ideas as to our powers here. I try frequently to convince them that we are not all powerful, and that we can not do the impossible. Perhaps it is beyond human power to remedy the fuel situation in New England which exists to-day. I am only making this statement with a hope that if there is any progress being made or any process under consideration to remove the serious condition that confronts our section of the country during the next few weeks and months it may be drawn to the attention of the proper officials. Our people for warmth burn anthracite coal, and to be supplied with bituminous coal will not altogether obviate the situation. We must get anthracite coal into New England.

Is there a cure for our people? If so, come to our assistance. So if my colleagues or other officials can offer any concrete specific method of assisting in the correction of that condition, let us get at it before the patient dies. [Applause.]

The critical situation demands prompt action, and if it can be discovered that the fault lies at the door of any one person or any group of persons, let correction be promptly made.

If it is true miners will not load cars unless a guaranteed number are on the track, if it is true that transportation lines fail to return cars to the mine for loading, if it is true that transportation lines prefer to supply customers on their own line, if it is true that coal is diverted from its original destination, if it is true that some dealers are mercilessly profiteering, if numerous other similar complaints that come to us are true—does no authority exist to overcome these conditions?

In spite of improved business conditions throughout Massachusetts, we hear many references made to the spirit of unrest broadcast among the people. Who is at fault? Certainly not the man or woman who, in these bitter winter days, finds it impossible to make the dear ones at home comfortable. The family hearthstone instead of being a place of comfort and pleasure will, in our section, soon become the center of distress. This must not be and we ask for the help of such authorities as either individually or collectively can correct existing conditions and prevent them reaching a point in the next few weeks of positive misery.

Christmas cheer is at hand. No brighter smile could spread the countenance of the people of Massachusetts than knowledge that Uncle Sam in the bounty of his provision had supplied Santa Claus with comfort for the people for the next three months.

The last speaker made reference to President Harding's address. One sentence, I think he did not quote, that struck me as being of considerable interest, and it was this: "Agriculture is a vital activity in our national life. In it we had our beginning, and its westward march with the Star of the Empire has reflected the growth of the Republic."

The President recognizes that agriculture had its inception in this country in the East and has proceeded West. I have frequently told my friends at home that there is one drawback in our relationship as a group of men. It is hard to get out of the mind of the average Member of this House that New England is not altogether an industrial section. We are an agricultural section and have absolute sympathy with agriculture so ably aided by the Committee on Agriculture and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I want particularly to commend the work of the special commission of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] was chairman, and the very voluminous report which that committee made. [Applause.] I also want to commend the purpose of the so-called farm bloc. I have not agreed with their efforts always, but they have known what they wanted and have gone to work to get it, and for that reason within the last session or so it has been a very marked success. [Applause.]

[Mr. TREADWAY had leave to extend his remarks.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE.]

Mr. LITTLE. During the war prices went mountain high. I am able to announce that the price of wheat has gone back to normal, and I also find it necessary to announce that wheat finds itself very lonesome. The farmer is about the only man who is compelled to take for his work whatever anybody will give him. Everybody that sells the farmer arbitrarily fixes the price that the farmer must pay. He is, therefore, totally unable to protect himself under the laws of supply and demand. Labor organizations throw a cordon about their wages that enables them to get bigger wages than laboring men are paid anywhere else in the world at any time and always know what they will get. The protective tariff assists in protecting those wages, and also in enabling the manufacturers to defy the world. The farmer's business is always a precarious one. He puts the seed in the ground every year and bets a nickel it grows. Every crop is an adventure and a gamble. If nature is bountiful, the surplus cuts the price down to where he isn't much better off. The wheat gamblers can evade the laws of supply and demand, form a bloc, pyramid the price of wheat, and make a fortune almost any time. Is it not curious that nobody has ever thought of any way by which the farmer could take advantage of the laws of supply and demand for his own welfare? He has reached the point where somebody has got to apply the rules of common sense under the laws of supply and demand or the wheat farmers will all be ruined and compelled to quit. They can not pay three prices for machinery and everything they buy and not get the cost of their wheat. They fight with the whole world for their prices. In 1915 there were some 3,500,000,000 bushels of wheat, with which they competed, of course. During the six years before that, Russia produced a little more wheat than did the United States, and the rest of the world produced more wheat than did Russia and the United States combined. The time has come when the Government of the United States should take some intelligent steps to assist the splendid people engaged in this industry. The farmer is about the only old-fashioned workingman we have left; he puts in 12 hours a day, never watches the clock, and never strikes. You then reply that he never will and that we can get along anyway. Just a few months ago laboring men who quarreled with their employers made a terrific attempt to wreck, ruin, and destroy the transportation system of this country to get what they claimed was justice. Do not, gentlemen, trespass too much on the farmer's patience and on his chance of making a living.

BRAZIL BUYS ALL ITS COFFEE.

Ten years ago Russia was producing more wheat than we did. Well, the Russian farmer struck; what wheat does the world get from there now? Half the fortunes of our big business are simply castles in the air. Take heed, gentlemen, that they don't take flight as did the magnificence of the czars and their associates. Two men can always have their way with a third man whenever they want to. You tell me that nothing can be done. Twenty years ago the price of coffee had fallen from 132 francs per 50 kilos to 30 francs, and the coffee planters of Brazil were ruined, as was the country and its revenues. Brazil adopted the radical and thorough policy of buying all the coffee produced there and restricting the amount of acreage. They reached a place where the Government of Brazil had on hand 8,000,000 sacks of coffee themselves, but they won; the tide turned; the government made a fortune; the people engaged in coffee planting all became prosperous; coffee went back to 90 francs per 50 kilos. The gentlemen who claim they are against the Government going into business should begin to shape their steps to make it unnecessary and take warning by such a success in Brazil. In 10 years Russia will be back in the wheat markets with a supply as great as ever. They will handle their wheat just exactly, in effect, as Brazil handles its coffee, and the American farmer will be up against that kind of organized and ferocious competition, and, gentlemen, you will then, at the point of the gun, launch your country into the necessary combat that will arise. Let us now endeavor to take safe, conservative, wise, prudent steps to make it unnecessary for the Government to go into business.

THE SENATE COMMITTEE'S BILL.

Now, do not tell me that we will loan them some money. That, gentlemen, is not going to solve this problem. I hope we will establish this winter a satisfactory credit system that can enable the farmer to finance his enterprises, but that won't make wheat worth $1 a bushel, which is as little as they can raise it for and still live. It does not require any great tax on a man's mental processes to make a motion to pay them $2 a bushel for all the surplus either, and every time you simply pay a fancy price and take in the surplus, you have given an overstimulation that brings you next year a bigger and more dangerous surplus and puts you further in the hole. The other day a great committee in another body reported favorably a bill to establish a corporation and endow it with $100,000,000 and authority to borrow $500,000,000 on bonds that it might go into the wheat business. You can adopt that policy if you wish and see what happens. Personally, I think if the Government is going into the business it ought to go into it itself and not be mixed up with corporations which will get beyond its control and spend its money as they please. Whether such an enterprise which would attempt to do business just like any other wheat buyer would be a success, you can figure as well as I can. If you like, there is your chance to try something. On the other hand, gentlemen, I have ventured to present a proposition that, in my judgment, will make it unnecessary for the Government to go into the wheat business, but will make it as certain that the farmer will get at least $1 a bushel for his wheat as it can be without getting into conflict with the laws of supply and demand, and without endeavoring to set the Government up as the universal almoner of the wheat grower. The suggestions I shall venture to make are grounded on the rules of common sense. Instead of being a scheme to get into the wheat business, it is a plan to keep out. Of course, if you are opposed to the Government carrying the mails and handling the schools and building the Panama Canal, you might be opposed to the proposed legislation, but if you are, why I shall insist that you be consistent and vote against the appropriation for the Post Office Department. If not, gentlemen, come with me a moment.

STAR OF EMPIRE STUCK IN WHEAT FIELDS.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts told me that he would quote a beautiful expresssion in the President's message about the Star of Empire progressing westward. I take the liberty of calling your attention to the fact that the Star of Empire is stuck out there and that it is not going any farther if the farmers of this country can not have some assurance of the stability of the price of wheat. There is a system of handling wheat through the storehouses in the grain elevators with warehouse receipts. If there were not such a system I should not have proposed the legislation I have presented to the Agricultural Committee. Without that opportunity I would not regard it as feasible.

If H. R. 13352 becomes a law, an appropriation of $30,000,000 will be made and the Secretary of Agriculture will be authorized to expend it in the purchase of wheat at not to exceed the local market price, not to exceed $1.10 a bushel, and at such times and places as he selects, and of such grades and qualities as he designates. He will be authorized to buy at not more than the market prices at each place. The wheat he purchases will be deposited by him in elevators and he will receive warehouse receipts. As the wheat is shipped and replaced from month to month, it will never deteriorate, and the charge for its care, which will include the insurance, will be very small, and in this way he will gradually accumulate and store that much wheat.

FINANCES ITSELF.

When he has accumulated 25,000,000 bushels he may, with that as security, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, secure an issue of Treasury certificates equaling the amount paid for that 25,000,000 bushels, and use the same to purchase another stock. As the first 25,000,000 bushels is sold, the money received for it will be used to pay off the said Treasury certificates, and that process may be repeated as he shall see fit. If any 25,000,000 bushels should not bring quite enough to take care of those Treasury certificates, he may draw on the revolving fund for that purpose. In this way Congress will never be asked for any further funds with which to purchase, but the proposition will thus finance itself after the first appropriation. He will thus have more money as becomes necessary.

As he does not pay above the market price anywhere, wheat buyers will be able to purchase whatever wheat they need at the price they then find in the market. They will take what they need and the Secretary will merely absorb the surplus wheat offered for sale gradually and in full accord with the ordinary laws of supply and demand, just as any other purchaser would get it, until the Secretary has taken up the slack and has absorbed that immediate surplus, whereupon the purchasers in the market, having ascertained that that surplus is gone, will stop the Governments' further purchases by paying $1.11 for wheat, which drives the Government out of the market and gives the farmer the benefit of this increase in price, just as would result under any competition. From then on, wheat, having a good foundation, will continue under the ordinary laws of supply and demand, and the Secretary will have accumulated his reserve supply of wheat at the lowest market prices and he will have no high-priced wheat at any time.

SECRETARY CAN HOLD WHEAT UP TO $1.

This proposed legislation further provides that whenever wheat shall go below $1 a bushel anywhere, the Secretary may, if he sees fit, pay $1 a bushel. Without any effort to fix a price for wheat and leaving to the Secretary the option of declining to pay $1, the farmer is reasonably assured of $1 a bushel, which, to say the least, is as little as he should ever be expected to raise wheat for anywhere in this country. The idea of this legislation is that whenever nature gives a bountiful crop with an exceptionally large number of bushels per acre, the Secretary will absorb in the course of the year the surplus; but whenever speculators, stimulated by the probability that the Secretary will buy at $1 all they offer, shall plant an area artificial as compared with the real demand, the Secretary will decline to purchase the surplus. The Federal reserve banks announced the other day that as long as these cooperative societies confined their operations to the ordinary course of trade, their paper would be handled by the banks, but whenever they undertook to hold their crops for speculative gains the banks would not handle their paper. The Secretary will, it is supposed, apply the same theory to the wheat growers, and the probability is that the cooperative societies and farmers' associations and the Secretary working together will be able to keep the acreage within bounds so that the farmer can be practically certain of a reasonable acreage and at least $1 a bushel. The prices that I have suggested of $1 and $1.10 are, of course, purely tentative and subject to correction by the committee or the House if it shall be demonstrated that they are too much or too little to effect the purpose.

PROVIDES FOR 5-CENT LOAF.

This bill would provide that whenever wheat can not be bought for less than $1.85 in New York City and Chicago, the Secretary shall begin selling from his stock to relieve the scarcity and maintain a bread supply at a reasonable price, maintaining a 5-cent loaf, it is hoped. Whenever this stringency comes, or whenever speculators have pyramided wheat up to $1.85, the Secretary must sell at such prices as he deems proper and as long as he deems to the best interests of the Nation. This makes impossible any corner by gamblers that would profit by exorbitant prices, which will be one of the valuable results from having on hand this continual reserve of wheat.

At any time the Secretary may sell wheat at not less than the market prices in Minneapolis, Buffalo, Kansas City, Kans., Chicago, and New York if he deems proper for the good of the Nation. As he sells at the market prices, he does not interfere with business, and it is intended that he shall not put at any time enough wheat on the market to affect those prices, except at $1.85 or more, but as he buys wheat at $1.10 or less, it is anticipated that during the course of the year he will be able to sell some wheat at more than that and net a profit for the department, which will carry on its incidental expenses and maintain its funds, but it is not the purpose of this plan that the Secretary shall go so far as to be engaged in the wheat business in competition with other wheat traders, except when wheat is down to $1.10 or up to $1.85.

WORKS LIKE GOLD RESERVE.

This bill will thus make it unnecessary for the Government to go into business as a wheat firm, and is intended to keep the Government out of that business.

As soon as the gold reserve was formed, the currency became worth 100 cents on the dollar. Nobody wanted gold when they found they could get it. As soon as the Secretary has shown people that the Government stands ready to buy wheat at $1, the same result will be achieved; wheat will not be sold for less than $1 with the Government ready to pay that.

To convince the public of the Government's good faith, it will not be necessary to buy in all the States. If the Government is known to be ready to pay $1, the influence of that on the market would assure them of $1, or if they purchased wheat in any half dozen States the same result would be reached.

This will also give the Secretary the power to break up the pyramiding of wheat for speculative purposes. He can buy wheat at not over $1.10 and break in whenever he sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield two minutes additional to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LITTLE. People respect the good faith of their Government after many years of experience. When they understand that it will pay them $1 for wheat, or a dollar in gold for a paper dollar, they will not any more come to the Secretary with wheat to sell for $1 than they would come to Washington to ask the Secretary of the Treasury to give them a dollar in gold. This is the judgment of many sound business men who have examined the bill. If we would by law fix the price at a given amount, that would not affect the market price effectually at all like the Government's readiness to buy it at that. On the other hand, if he were directly ordered to pay that in all events, that would leave the plan no elasticity and would add greatly to the difficulties of its execution and success. In Brazil, where they buy all the coffee, they directly restrict the acreage in coffee and have great success. The surplus makes all the trouble, and no proposition can succeed unless it takes due notice of the possibilities of a surplus and guards against being carried too far by it. With these qualifications and limitations which guard against too great an acreage, it is as certain that wheat can thus be held at $1 as is any other business proposition in which men ever engage. In reaching that conclusion, the business experience of centuries has been taken into consideration. Everything has been considered except the flood, which of course would wreck my plan. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. May I inquire why the gentleman does not include other crops in the bill to stabilize wheat values?

WHY WHEAT ONLY.

Mr. LITTLE. As I stated in the beginning, this bill would never have been drawn but for the fact that the system of storage in wheat elevators at a nominal price, where the wheat is never allowed to deteriorate but can always be found by the Government, makes wheat peculiarly the crop for attempting this stabilization of values. Except perhaps oats and barley, no other crop can possibly be handled with equal facility and economy, and I would not have drawn the bill but for these facts. If such a bill can not pass, where there is practically no possibility of failure, it would not be worth while to attempt it with any other crop. I am glad the gentleman asked this question because it again directs attention to the readiness with which this crop alone can be handled without interference with the orderly course of the market and without any investment by the Government in great warehouses. Again, there is no other food crop that compares with it in extent and importance to the consumer and the producer. Furthermore, there is no other crop so situated as to be so in need of some such method as this. The purpose of this bill is to stabilize the price of wheat, and I drew it for that purpose, and one reason I did not put in other crops was that I proposed this bill to accomplish that and if others have bills to propose they can read this bill and go ahead and write their own. My method is entirely at their service. While it is true that no such proposition was ever before made, it is also true that nobody has suggested any serious criticism of the proposition, and if I have overlooked somebody's crops, this opportunity is much more at his disposal than it was before I drew this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, while this has nothing to do with the subject matter before the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] in discussing the constitutional amendment presented to the House yesterday made a criticism that is in one sense so serious that it seems desirable to answer it to-day, so that those Members who desire to think over the whole proposition between now and the time when it will again come before the House may have the opportunity to weigh the merits of the criticism.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] says that the amendment is fundamentally defective in that theoretically at least this situation might arise: The United States Government might have no securities outstanding and it would then be in a position to discriminate against State and municipal securities by taxing the income derived therefrom at a higher rate than, let us say, railroad bonds or industrial securities. I say that the objection is theoretical, because certainly not in 150 years and more, if our experience with the Civil War debt means anything, if England's experience with the Napoleonic war debt means anything, will the United States find itself with no outstanding securities. But is it sound as a theoretical proposition? The resolution submitted by the committee provides that the United States may tax the income from State and municipal securities providing that it does not discriminate against income derived from State securities and in favor of incomes derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article, by or under the authority of the United States. If it stopped there, there would be some merit in the suggestion of my friend from Texas, but the words "United States" are followed by the words "or any other State."

There are, therefore, two limitations. The United States may not discriminate in favor of its own securities, and it may not discriminate in favor of any securities issued by a State or under the authority of a State. Corporations are not natural persons. They owe their existence to the laws of the State which creates them. Securities issued by a corporation are issued by virtue of the authority given by the State which creates the corporation, and the very words of the resolution providing that you can not discriminate in favor of securities issued under the authority of a State is a limitation against discriminating in favor of any securities issued by a corporation created by the State. That is the specific purpose intended by that language. If we attempted, for instance, to discriminate in favor of railroad bonds, taxing their income at a lower rate than the income from State and municipal securities, we would violate specifically the words of lines 2 and 3 on page 2 of this resolution by discriminating in favor of securities issued by virtue of the authority granted by a State.

If the gentleman's objections are unsound, I suggest to him that his remedy—the remedy which he proposes—is even more unsound. His amendment will not only limit the taxing authority of the United States, but let me point out to him that he is going to limit very strictly the taxing authority of the States. He limits the taxing authority of the Federal Government when he provides that there shall be no discrimination in favor of income derived "from any source." He will thereby knock out our present income tax law, in which we do discriminate, in so far as the normal tax is concerned, with reference to the dividends paid by corporations. He will further knock out the exemptions granted to holders of outstanding Federal securities, because he wipes out the words "issued after the ratification of this amendment" contained in the committee resolution; and he will make it impossible in the future for the Federal Government to discriminate between earned and unearned income, a reform urged very earnestly and with considerable force by some of the wisest of our tax reformers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. I prefer to finish the statement, as I have only eight minutes. What does he do to the States? As the amendment now stands, the State may keep inviolate its present method of taxing securities. It can still tax all securities except Federal on their property value, whether at the general property rate or at a classified property rate. It can, in addition, if this amendment be adopted, tax Federal securities in so far as their income is concerned; but if we do as the gentleman suggests, and that is introduce the words "from any source," then if the State desires to tax income from Federal securities it will have to wipe out all of its property taxes on securities and adopt a general income tax or forego the right to tax the income from Federal securities. Even when it comes to drafting that general income tax, unless it is willing to tax the incomes from Federal securities at the lowest rate adopted, it is going to find itself unable to classify income-tax payers; it is going to find itself unable to discriminate between interest and dividends; it is going to find itself unable to discriminate between earned and unearned income. In short, if my friend's amendment be adopted, he is putting the States in a straitjacket in so far as future income tax legislation is concerned. In order to meet an imaginary danger to the sovereignty of the States he is prepared by his amendment to seriously limit that sovereignty by compelling the State first to adopt income taxation as the only method of taxing all securities, and then limiting the State to one particular kind of income tax. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not think the premise of my friend from New York is correct. This amendment deals entirely with Federal securities and securities issued by the State and subdivisions thereof. Now, if you will take your amendment and refer to it you will find that it uses the language "State securities or subdivisions thereof." Now, let me illustrate for a moment and see if I am correct. For instance, is the Pennsylvania Railroad a subdivision of the State of Pennsylvania, taking it for granted it is a corporation created under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania? I submit to the gentleman from New York that question, whether or not the Pennsylvania Railroad, assuming that it has its charter by virtue of the State laws of Pennsylvania—whether or not the Pennsylvania Railroad is a subdivision of the State of Pennsylvania. Now, if it is not, it does not come within this amendment, because the amendment says "securities issued by a State or subdivision of the State, or under its authority."

Mr. MILLS. Under the authority.

Mr. GARNER. Certainly. Does the gentleman from New York agree to this premise, that he desires to limit the Federal Government power in levying its taxes against State and municipal bonds to the tax that it levies against other property of the citizens of the United States and incomes from property of the United States? Does the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. MILLS. I want to limit the right of the United States Government to tax Federal and State bonds in their incomes to the rate applicable to all securities of whatever kind.

Mr. GARNER. All right. If you do and if you will draw that amendment accordingly, I will accept it. [Applause.] I ask you, sir, whether or not this amendment will reach rents derived from property of an individual? I will yield to the gentleman to answer.

Mr. MILLS. I will say frankly it does not reach rents, and the gentleman knows that is the only thing that it does not reach, and knows that it does it so far as securities are concerned——

Mr. GARNER. When the gentleman answers the question he answers his own argument. When you have one exception that is sufficient. I for one deny the right of this Government to ask the States to surrender that right and place a heavier tax upon the income of a State agency than it does the individual of that State. If the gentleman is in earnest, if he means what he says, that he wants the Federal Government to be restricted to the right to the taxes that it may levy on any income, then prepare your amendment to this proposed amendment carrying that into effect, and I for one, speaking for myself, will accept it. I seek only by this amendment and by my crude effort, maybe, to protect the States against the power of Congress, should it think proper to do so, to destroy their ability to issue bonds and issue securities under the various divisions of a sovereign State. And so I say again, once and for all, that if the advocates of this amendment are serious in their contention that they only desire to levy the same rate of tax on receipts from bonds of States and municipalities that they levy against other property, other receipts, if you will prepare an amendment I will accept it. I do not know, I am probably not as good a lawyer as the gentleman from New York, but as I came here the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] suggested to me that the creature of a State as referred to in this proposed amendment did not contemplate other than the subdivision of a State such as a county or precinct of that State.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Just a moment.

Mr. WINGO. Or necessary agency.

Mr. GARNER. Or necessary agency of the State. And a corporation created by virtue of law is not necessarily an agency of a State. I have had no opportunity to examine the authorities, and I am not prepared to express an opinion, but that seems to me to be the purpose of this amendment. I understand that what is meant is a State or subdivision or creature of a State, such as counties, precincts, school districts, road districts, and so forth. I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that we clearly understood the gentleman's proposition. The gentleman does not contend, I assume, that under the amendment Congress could lay a heavier rate of income tax on securities issued by the State and its subdivisions than upon Federal securities?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not going rather far afield, is it not almost absurd to suggest that Congress would lay a burdensome tax on its own securities in order to reach the State?

Mr. GARNER. Oh, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that is the contention of every man who wants to take away from the State some right and put it in the Federal Government; that you are not going to do any wrong. I do not want to give you a chance to do wrong.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman voted for an income tax.

Mr. GARNER. In just a moment. I want to fix this amendment, if it is to become a part of the Constitution of the country, so that your and my successors can not do a State an injustice.

Now, I ask you to help us fix it, and if you are in good faith and mean what you say when you assert that you do not intend to do that, you will fix it now so that you can not do it.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not agree with the gentleman in regard to the income from securities at all.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman means the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MONDELL. But even if what the gentleman urges were true, it strikes me that it is most extraordinary to suggest that the Congress, for some reason not now in anyone's mind, would lay an enormous burden on Federal securities and those of the States. Would it not be entirely fair if the tax on State securities be the same as those on Federal securities?

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman evidently was not here yesterday when I spoke. I thought I had made that clear to everyone.

Mr. MONDELL. I am waiting for the answer.

Mr. GARNER. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman and to those responsible for this proposed amendment that I gave on the highest authority the fact that the principal purpose of those gentlemen who would tax State securities is to restrict and, if need be, prohibit the issuance of them. I gave the President of the United States as my authority. I suggest that the gentleman read the President's message.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not the reason.

Mr. GARNER. He said, in substance, he wanted to stop the issuance of these bonds in order that the money might go into other industries. I contend that the industries of a State are as important to this country as any other industry, whether it be the manufacture of steel or of aluminum or of anything else. The construction of schoolhouses and the construction of roads or the construction of irrigating systems is just as important as some of these securities that you gentlemen want to tax.

Mr. MONDELL. The irrigation securities are not tax free.

Mr. GARNER. I want the gentleman to understand that they are in my State, because they are issued under the authority of the State, and they are a part of the State taxation system, which exempts the income from them from Federal taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Supplementing what the gentleman said, I read from the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] and ask the gentleman from Texas to answer whether this was actually stated by the gentleman from New York before the committee:

> We have got to look at this from the national standpoint. We are giving to the States the privilege, to be sure, of taxing national securities, but in return we are getting the great mass of securities that on the whole are going to constitute a much larger tax base than the Federal securities are. And what is more, we are asking for the benefit—and we are getting the benefit—of taxing them at a much higher rate than the States are likely to do. You are only giving to the States the privilege of taxing income from these bonds.

Mr. GARNER. I am much obliged to the gentleman. The gentleman from New York knows that the gentleman from Pennsylvania declared that the absolute reason, and the only reason that you can give, for the State provision in here is that it was offered as a sop to the States to try to get them to adopt this amendment. That is all it was put in for. No one would dream of putting this second section in here unless it were an attempt to try to buy the States into agreeing to allow us to tax their securities. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, in President Harding's last message to Congress he gave cold comfort to the friends of liquor. His wise and timely words declaring, not for a loose and liberal modification of our prohibition law but for its strict enforcement, were worthy of their high origin and wholesome in their influence. Regardless of former predilections and alignments on this question, they will be indorsed by every true patriot who remembers that this is "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," and that the people who have fought so long and unselfishly for the legal overthrow of the liquor traffic have won a fair and open fight by due governmental process. President Harding recognizes the truth uttered by former President Taft—himself admittedly an anti-prohibitionist—that this law has not had a fair opportunity to function, and that every citizen, and especially every official who has sworn to stand by the Constitution of the United States, is called on to give the law a square deal by precept and by practice. [Applause.]

It is highly, and I may say painfully, significant that the President has felt the necessity of calling a conference of governors to take counsel together concerning the most effective way of enforcing a part of our Federal Constitution.

Of course I indorse the call, but I deprecate the necessity for such a conference. What does it mean—that there must be a coming together of the President of the Nation and the governors of the States in behalf of the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment, when the other provisions of the Constitution stand alone and regnant in their fundamental and governmental majesty? If the situation is that serious, if the President is right when he declares that conditions "savor of a Nation-wide scandal," if the flagrant violation of this law means the physical and moral debauchery of illicit sellers and illicit buyers and, above all, the debauching of individual and national respect for all law, threatening the security of our most sacred ideals and our most cherished institutions, then God knows that that conference of our President and our governors ought to leave no stone unturned to make that exceptional round table a practical and national blessing. [Applause.]

But we might as well be plain about it, the plain people are justly skeptical of many of these high officials. They laugh at their high-sounding pronunciamentos because they doubt their sincerity. The people—the plain people—have cumulative evidence that some of these "conferring" governors and many other high officials do not practice the prohibition enforcement which they preach to others. The people—the plain people—believe that many of these high officials believe in that highfaluting autocracy which claims the privilege of buying and drinking illicit liquors themselves while denying that privilege to the poor devils down among the masses who are foolish enough to want the opportunity to buy and drink illicit liquid damnation. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

[Mr. UPSHAW shook his head.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Here is a timely editorial from the Dearborn Independent of December 9 which hits the spot:

"DRY" ENFORCEMENT BEGINS AT HOME.

President Harding and his Cabinet are reported to have been in serious conference regarding ways and means of enforcing the "dry" laws. Will the gentlemen permit a suggestion? Why not begin at Washington? Why not begin in official circles? Why not begin in those sumptuous homes which entertain the very highest personages in our Government?

This is not a taunt; it is a serious and respectful suggestion. Everyone knows what has transpired at Washington since prohibition arrived. Only the loyalty of certain men to the sentiment of respect for the personages of the Government has prevented a crushing scandal at times. To these men whose forbearance has been intensely patriotic it has come with hopefulness that the Cabinet meeting may result in obedience to law in the city of Washington.

[Applause.]

Let the word go forth that members of the executive and administrative branches of the Government have set themselves a rigid standard of obedience to the letter and spirit of the law—and see what a difference it will make in Washington.

[Applause.]

That is the end of the editorial. It is now time to applaud this editor's timely wisdom. [Applause.]

If these governors who put their feet under the President's mahogany at the White House really wish to get anywhere in their conference for law enforcement, let them remember what the beloved and immortal Sam Jones said:

"If you want to reform the world, begin on yourself and then you will have one rascal out of the way." [Applause.]

Let these governors, led by the President and Vice President of the United States and all the Members of the Cabinet, walk out in the open and lift their hands before high heaven and take a new oath of allegiance to the whole Constitution and the American flag. Let them sacredly declare that, regardless of what their tastes and practices have been, they will never again build up a bootlegger's barbarous business by drinking any form or any amount of illicit liquors at any dinner, at any function, or in any "ballroom or any back alley." Let every Member of Congress and every United States Senator follow suit; let every State and Federal judge and every prosecuting attorney in America stand up like patriotic men and declare that they will never again personally trample the Constitution which they have sworn to obey and defend. [Applause.]

Let the President issue a ringing Christmas proclamation calling every citizen, and especially every official, to total abstinence for the common good. No longer must these "higher ups" say "Go" at the end of an official lash. They must say "Come," in all the glory and effectiveness of consistent leadership.

I think it would be well for the President to put in that proclamation a call to those splendid, forward-looking citizens—those organizations that do things worth while—the Rotarians, the Kiwanians, the Civitians, the Optimists, and the Lions, and the Elks, and the Eagles, and the Owls, and what not——

Mr. CLARKE of New York. How about the Klan?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes; for they declare allegiance to the whole Constitution, and every organization that stands for the rule of democracy and the supremacy of a sober flag. Let them stand for it now, or forever after hold their peace.

Anything less than this will make the conference itself a farce and a scandal. Timorous souls have never inspired anybody. This is no time for pussy-footing utterances and actions on the part of our State and National leaders. [Applause.] Some of these governors—most of them, let us hope—are men of personal sobriety and positive character and patriotism, and most Congressmen and Senators, I am glad to believe, practice the prohibition which their votes profess, but there are enough who do not to cast an ominous cloud on the official sky.

Let us wipe that cloud away as a Christmas gift to society and sobriety! And let these officials be followed by "society" leaders everywhere who have been counting it a "smart" thing to serve illicit cocktails to dinner guests, remembering that every such deed is more than "slackerism" in the presence of a common foe. It is a shocking case of "trading with the enemy"—yea, of seeking, harboring, and using stolen goods. And no father or mother, citizen, or public official can do this thing and then blame anybody but themselves if their sons and daughters grow up to break their hearts by defying every law of God and man. [Applause.]

Let them honor their own laws, like the gallant French general, Marshal Foch, who refused to touch intoxicants in any form while on American soil, out of respect for the "dry" Constitution and "the stainless flag" of the country where he was an honored guest. [Applause.] Let them follow the inspiring example of that chivalric Texan, that whole-hearted American, Alvin Owsley [applause], the beloved commander of the American Legion, who as my breakfast guest last week authorized me to say on the floor of Congress and everywhere that, realizing the importance of this question and the responsibility of leadership, regardless of what his personal inclinations might be, he would not touch a drop of intoxicating beverage in private or public while he is commander of the American Legion. [Applause.]

I stand uncovered, I call on the friends of "young America" everywhere to stand uncovered before such loyal, stainless patriotism on the part of the gallant leader of America's soldier-citizens.

I can not close this honest, desperate Christmas exhortation to the governors of America and all other high officials without the inevitable observation that that conference of governors will be in a bad fix and will leave the President and his Cabinet and the whole country in a bad fix if they are all down with the same complaint which afflicts that visionary hero of windmills, the fantastic Governor of Louisiana. Hitherto holding him in high esteem, we have seen him plunge from his high pedestal of State and National confidence by rushing to the Nation's Capital for help to free his State from the tumultuous reign of "goblins" and "wizards," when his own Representatives in both branches of Congress, Protestant and Catholic alike, rise up to discount his flaming follies, declaring that Louisiana is beautifully tranquil and grandly able to take care of her own police powers. And now you can judge of the value of the dismal declaration of this same Governor Parker, who says to the governors' meeting on West Virginia soil that "prohibition is a flat failure." Thus he indicts the majority of the citizens of his State as lawbreakers and liars. I do not believe it. Shades of American heroism! Paraphrasing the words of the judge to the man who is going to be hung, "May the Lord have mercy on his timorous soul." If prohibition is a failure in Louisiana or any other State it is because the women made a mistake when they got married and the people made a mistake when they elected a governor. [Laughter.]

If the enemies of good government were making and selling a concoction that would poison our pigs and colts and calves and chickens for money, the militant manhood and womanhood of America would stop it. And when we begin to love our boys and girls as well as we love our domestic animals and our selfish appetites, then we will consecrate ourselves anew to their protection and set for them a safe example in refraining from the illicit use of intoxicants anywhere and everywhere. [Applause.]

In face of the legal enactment of this prohibition law which found its way into our Constitution and on our statute books through the prayers, the tears, and the consecrated wisdom of the best men and women on earth, any governor or any other State or Federal official who will patronize a bootlegger by drinking illicit liquor is a disgrace to the position of leadership which he holds and a dangerous example to the young manhood of America. [Applause.]

I want to declare to you that any man who stands here or anywhere and swears allegiance to the Constitution and then helps a bootlegger to trample that Constitution under foot is unworthy to represent any State or to hold any office under the sun. [Applause.]

I renew my call to Christmas consecration. Come on, governors! Come on, Cabinet officers! Come on, Congressmen and Senators! Come on, officials and patriots everywhere; and before the eyes of American youth and the watching world illustrate that brave, red-blooded, 100 per cent Americanism that accepts the full-orbed Constitution, eighteenth amendment and all; that reverent, consistent Americanism that practices what it preaches in building "that righteousness that exalteth a nation"—a leadership, pray God, that fulfills Goldsmith's dream of the "Village Preacher," who—

Lured to brighter worlds,
And led the way.

[Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. BARBOUR] five minutes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I hold in my hand a printed document which a few days ago was mailed generally to the Members of Congress. It is a rather severe criticism of and attack upon House bill 7452, a bill which I introduced and which is now pending on the calendar of the House, a criticism and attack entirely unjustified. The statement is not signed, but in the upper right-hand margin there is stamped:

From W. G. Van Name, 121 High Street, New Haven, Conn.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is the title of the bill which the gentleman refers to?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is the Roosevelt-Sequoia National Park bill.

Doctor Van Name, who, I assume, is the author of this statement, is a very estimable gentleman, one who is deeply interested in the conservation of our natural resources. But his fears as to the result of the enactment of this legislation are entirely ungrounded, and for the reason that his statement contains little of fact and considerable of imagination I wish to submit a few observations in reply.

The bill simply provides for the enlargement of the present Sequoia National Park, in the State of California, and the changing of the name to Roosevelt-Sequoia, the new park to be a great natural memorial to the late President Theodore Roosevelt. It also provides for the exclusion of a portion of the present park. In fact, the scheme is to exclude 105 square miles of the present park and to add 953 miles of additional territory. I read from Doctor Van Name's statement, as follows:

"The Sequoia National Park, in southern California, 252 square miles in area, was established in 1890 to preserve several fine tracts of the primeval forests of California, the most remarkable in the world for the extraordinary size and beauty of their trees. It is the only national park—except the General Grant Park, which is insignificantly small and sadly mutilated by lumbering—whose express purpose was to preserve some of these magnificent forests. For 32 years it has protected them, but it is to do so no longer. The Barbour bill, supposedly a bill to enlarge the park, while adding much land, mostly of little value for park purposes or for anything else, contains a concealed joker that cuts the park in two and turns over the half containing the larger part of the fine forest to the United States Forest Service, a bureau conducted entirely for commercial and utilitarian purposes, which can legally—and may be expected to—sell the greater portion of the trees for lumber."

Now, the fact of the matter is that the bill retains in the park 804 of the large Sequoia, commonly known as the California big trees. It will exclude 550 of these trees and will add 500 others. Of the 550 excluded, 410 are publicly owned and 140 are privately owned. If the bill is passed, the net result will be that there will be a gain of 90 of the publicly owned large Sequoia trees preserved within the park boundaries.

POLICY OF THE FOREST SERVICE TOWARD THE BIG TREES.

The fact that there are a large number of giant trees in the area now within the forest reserve which it is proposed to add to the park should be satisfactory evidence that it is not the policy of the Forest Service to destroy these trees. As to the policy of the Forest Service in regard to these trees and as further assurance that the same will not be destroyed, even though some of those in the present park should revert to the Forest Service, I submit the following extract from a statement recently made by United States Forester Greeley:

"To the Government forester these trees are most cherished possessions, and as such they receive veneration and loving care. Long ago the Forest Service decided that these trees, as living examples of nature's wonderful handiwork and as survivors of the pregiacial period, would contribute much more to human progress and welfare in a living condition than they could possibly contribute as manufactured timber commodities. It therefore has been the fixed and invariable rule that no standing redwood shall be cut from national forest land. The United States Forest Service has not sold a single giant sequoia except those dead and prostrate upon the ground and subject to decay if not utilized. Most of the giant sequoia occurring within the exterior boundaries of the national forests are on land in private ownership, over which the Government has no control, and here, unfortunately, the removal of these superb trees has been rapid and complete. From time to time the Forest Service has considered and made tentative plans for exchanges with private owners whereby some of the existing groups in private ownership would become public property in exchange for national forest stumpage of less scientific and historic value, but absence of legislative authority has prevented the consummation of these arrangements, and the best the Forest Service could do is to preserve the trees already in Government ownership. This it is doing with religious care, and no lover of these great trees need fear that the Forest Service will ever forget the obligations of its custodianship to the point of consenting to the sacrifice of a single living tree to any commercial or utilitarian purpose."

The bill in its present form has been indorsed by the following organizations or their representatives, all of which are enthusiastic advocates of the policy of conservation of our natural resources:

"Boone and Crockett Club, Roosevelt Memorial Association, American Civic Association, National Parks Association, Society for Protection of National Parks, American Defense Society, California Academy of Sciences, Association for the Protection of the Adirondacks, New York Zoological Society, National Arts Club, Camp Fire Club of America, Associated Mountaineering Clubs, Save the Redwoods League, American Society of Landscape Artists, National Geographic Society, Appalachian Mountain Club, and the Sierra Club."

Relative to the indorsement of the bill by the Camp Fire Club of America, I offer for the consideration of the House the following letter received by me to-day from William B. Greeley, chairman of the committee on conservation of forests and wild life, of that organization. Mr. Greeley states that in view of the efforts of Dr. W. G. Van Name to defeat the bill, the matter was further investigated by his committee and that after such investigation the committee voted unanimously to confirm the action previously taken in support of the bill:

THE CAMP FIRE CLUB OF AMERICA,
New York, December 19, 1922.

Hon. H. E. BARBOUR,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This committee, speaking in such matters for the Camp Fire Club of America, some time last winter went on record as approving heartily your bill H. R. 7452, known as the Barbour Roosevelt-Sequoia Park bill.

During the summer efforts of Dr. Willard G. Van Name, of the American Museum of Natural History, of this city, to defeat the bill were brought to the attention of some members of this committee who were much impressed by his contention. As a result, the matter was further investigated by this committee, considerable correspondence was had, and last night Mr. Horace M. Albright, of the National Park Service, known to most of us, attended a meeting of the committee at my invitation and discussed the whole situation with us.

I am glad to say that after hearing Mr. Albright, considering the letters received and discussing the matter thoroughly, the committee voted unanimously to confirm the action previously taken by the committee in support of the bill.

Because of the circularizing campaign carried on by Doctor Van Name, and the possibility that some members of the club might have put themselves on record as opposing the bill, as requested in an anonymous circular which is now before me, but is admitted to have been prepared by Doctor Van Name, it has been thought best that I should inform you immediately of the action of the committee at its meeting last night, and say to you that all such matters as this are intrusted to this committee and the action of the committee in this matter is to be taken as voicing the sentiment of the club.

We wish you success in your further efforts to bring about the passage of this bill.

Yours very truly.

WILLIAM B. GREELEY, Chairman.

Doctor Van Name's circular shows that he is not familiar with the scenic features of the area which it is proposed to add to the park or that he does not appreciate those features. The following quotation from the bulletin of the National Parks Association of June 7, 1922, describes one of the scenic wonders of this area:

TEHIPITE, WONDER OF CANYONS.

"The floor of the valley is exceedingly rough but fascinating. It could accommodate hundreds of campers. And the river! It is times larger than the Merced. From the beginning to the end of the valley it is a succession of cascades, swift rushes, and pools. It is the finest trout river I ever fished.

"Opposite Tehipite Dome, Mount Harrington rises a thousand feet higher than Clouds Rest above Yosemite, namely, 7,000 feet. From near its summit cascades tumble into the Middle Fork.

"The Tehipite Valley is nothing short of the most inspiring chasm in the Sierra. It ranks in its own way with the greatest American spectacles!

"Unquestionably, it is one of the most striking features in American scenery; wholly lacking the Yosemite type of beauty, it is far ruggeder, more virile. It is bigger. It has power, majesty. Its walls are loftier. The Tehipite Dome, 3,200 feet above the valley floor, is one of the five greatest rocks of the scenic world, the others being El Capitan and Half Dome in the Yosemite, the Grand Sentinel in the Kings River Canyon, and El Gobernador in Zion National Park. Just for comparison's sake, the famous Rock of Gibraltar, if transferred to Tehipite Valley, would rise 700 feet less than halfway up on the Tehipite Dome.

"The walls are correspondingly striking; on the whole they rise higher than Yosemite's. They are perpendicular and remarkably eroded. There is one place where a landslide has rolled rocks as big as houses more than halfway across the valley floor."

Bulletin 24 of the National Parks Association, issued on January 30, 1922, and referring to an amendment prohibiting the development of power projects within the proposed park, contains an article advocating the passage of the bill in its present form under the following title: "Barbour bill amended. Now let's help pass it."

I wish to call the attention of the House to a letter received from the Acting Director of the National Park Service commenting on the statement of Doctor Van Name. The following quotation from the letter of Mr. Cammerer, the acting director, shows how unfounded are the criticisms of Doctor Van Name and how groundless are his fears:

"One statement made in the printed circular—that the area to be added is barren and inaccessible mountain land—is absolutely without foundation. Forests of very fine pines and firs in the two Kings River Valleys which will be added to the park will alone more than offset the forests in the park area to be returned to the national forests; and besides this there will be added several hundred square miles of main forest belt, which carry groves of yellow pine, sugar pine, and white and red fir, running much larger and finer on the average than those in the forests of the park area to be returned. The gain to national park control in fine forest, not including sequoia, is several hundred per cent.

"As you have stated in your letter, most of the statements contained in the printed circular are far from the truth. One which stands out is that made in connection with the General Grant Park, which it is said is insignificantly small and sadly mutilated by lumbering. As a matter of fact, there has never been any lumbering in General Grant Park."

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time now remains as follows: The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has 15 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield 4 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer for just a moment to the question that was up the other day, when the naval bill was under consideration, as to the enlisting of minors or those under 21 years of age. The question was raised as to whether the recruiting officers should be permitted to enlist boys under 21 years of age without securing the consent of their parents or guardians, or in the alternative securing affidavits showing their exact age. There seemed to be an almost unanimous inclination to adopt the amendment that was suggested by my colleague from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], until the chairman of the committee read the existing law, which, according to his interpretation, seemed to cover the case already. I just want to read in this connection the exception that is in the law which practically nullifies its operation.

It so happens now that when a young man who is less than 21 years of age goes before the recruiting officer he may be accepted practically on his own affidavit. Of course, they have alluring advertisements and signs which indicate the beauties of travel and the attractive side of naval service for the purpose of getting the young men into the service. As was suggested in the discussion the other day, the services of every young man in this country are the property of his parents until the young man reaches the age of 21 years. It seems entirely right that before the Government takes the boy's services the consent of the parent or guardian should be obtained. That was the attitude of the House until the law was read which seemed to require at the present time the consent of the parents. But there is an exception in the law, which reads as follows:

Except in cases where such certificate is unobtainable—

That is, the certificate as to age, and so forth—enlistment may be made when the recruiting officer is convinced that oath of applicant as to age is credible.

I understand that when a young man comes up to enlist the practice now is to have a blank affidavit for him to sign along with the other papers, stating that he is of a certain age, and then he is in, and if the parents undertake to get him out of the service the department issues to him an ordinary discharge which for all practical purposes has about the same effect as a dishonorable discharge. But this law has still another defect in that it applies only where the minor is under 18 years of age. Now I submit to the Congress that the Navy is in a bad way if it is necessary to go out and secure through alluring advertisements and signs and blandishments, through a process that amounts in some instances to deception, the services of the boys of this country who are less than 21 years of age, more especially when their services belong to their parents. Surely the American Navy can be maintained and the necessary recruits may be had by the naval officers being as clean and as careful in their enlistments as they are in their discharges, because while they will take a boy under 21 years of age into the Navy on his simple affidavit that he is 21 years of age, when it comes to discharging him they require not his affidavit but a birth certificate or the affidavit of two or three disinterested persons, which they should secure prior to his admission. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am sure all of us who are particularly interested in the problems of agriculture have been very greatly interested this afternoon as we have listened to various Members in their discussions of many phases of agricultural thought. I myself am under great obligation to them.

Recently, upon the occasion of the visit of the President of the United States in presenting to Congress some recommendations for legislation, attention was called to many things of particular interest in connection with agriculture. Probably more than any other we were attracted by his recommendations on the subject of agricultural credit. And so there has been unusual interest in this discussion along that particular line this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that in the near future we are to pass judgment in the House upon the resolution which was the special order of business yesterday, I have thought it might be of some interest to the committee to present some ideas I have in mind in connection with an amendment which I propose to offer to the pending resolution, namely, the resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States with reference to tax-exempt securities. I will read it for the information of the committee. It is to follow the second section as it is now, with the following language:

Provided, That nothing contained in this amendment shall be construed to refer to securities or bonds issued under the terms of the act known as the Federal farm loan act.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, my amendment proposes to exempt from the provisions of the constitutional amendment the bonds or securities issued under the terms of the Federal farm loan act. The total amount of Federal farm loan bonds sold to November 30, 1922, is $641,208,375. If the total of tax-exempt securities issued amounts to $16,000,000,000, then the amount of such total affected by my amendment is approximately 4 per cent. I am aware that there should be unusual merit in any proposition that seeks to modify the application of a proposed amendment to the Constitution. In support of my amendment, therefore, I present the following considerations:

1. The Federal farm loan system has clearly established itself as a sound, practical, and indispensable credit agency for American agriculture. Its operations have been interrupted by hostile interests through court procedure and limited by the natural hesitancy our people manifest in adopting a new plan in so vital a matter as mortgage loans. Its present popularity is shown by the fact that during the period from November 1, 1921, to November 1, 1922, the Federal land banks loaned $219,780,649 to 70,993 farmers and sold Federal farm loan bonds to investors to the amount of $278,150,000. The Treasury holdings of these bonds have been reduced $69,650,000, and Secretary Mellon says that—

The system is rapidly approaching a condition which meets the original intention that it should be a mutual organization operated under Government supervision and control with the capital stock supplied by the borrowing farmers and not by the Government.

Until such time shall come it appears clear to me that no action should be contemplated by this House that will seriously limit, if not entirely suspend, the operations of the Federal farm loan system by advancing the interest rates.

In the second place, I invite the attention of the committee to the fact that the saving in Federal taxes on these farm-loan bonds would be infinitesimal in comparison with the increase in interest charges which the farmers will pay on the mortgage indebtedness.

In proof may I quote what I believe will be accepted as good authority, Professor Putnam, of Washington University, of St. Louis, who says:

The Federal tax on each billion dollars' worth of tax-exempt securities would be $8,820,000. If this is correct, the amount of revenue to be derived from taxing joint-stock land-bank bonds now outstanding, $78,000,000, would be negligible. And if the time should come when the joint-stock land banks had outstanding in future issues $250,000,000 of bonds, the revenue to be derived from their taxation at the present rate would be but $2,000,000.

If the surtax should be reduced, as is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, from 65 to 40 per cent, the revenue to be derived from joint-stock land-bank bonds would be reduced to an amount slightly in excess of $1,000,000.

When we recall that from ten to twenty billions of tax-exempt securities are now outstanding the inquiry suggests itself: Why strain at a gnat and swallow a camel? Why remove the tax exemption in the very quarter where it is doing the most good? Why remove it in these abnormal times before there has been opportunity to give the plan a fair test? Why of all times do it now, when agriculture is crippled and least able to stand this blow?

Under the Federal farm-loan system the interest rate varies from 5½ to 6 per cent. The farmer who borrows from a land bank at this rate is a direct beneficiary, and all others who borrow through the regular channels are likewise beneficiaries, through the wholesome competition of the land banks. When we stop to contemplate what would be the situation if we do away with the tax-exempt feature in connection with the farm-loan bonds and reckon what the increased interest rates on $4,000,000,000 of farm mortgages held in the United States with the competition of the land banks removed, I am sure we will see that the saving that would be made to the Federal Government in taxes would be very small in comparison.

An average increase of 1 per cent in the interest rate would amount to $40,000,000 on the total mortgage indebtedness of the farms of the country. This is certainly a modest estimate of the increase in the interest rate, if our former experience is a fair example. Contrast this with Professor Putnam's estimate of an increase of $8,000,000 in taxes on each billion of bonds denied tax exemption, and every friend of agriculture will hesitate before voting for the proposed constitutional amendment without the limitation I have proposed.

The effect that the loans made through the land banks have upon the general interest rate on farm mortgage loans is indicated by the comparison of the total amount loaned by the land banks with the total farm mortgage indebtedness of the country. The former is $664,986,000 and the latter $4,000,000,000 in round numbers. Fifteen per cent of the total mortgage loans are made by the land banks. No one will say this is a negligible factor in shaping interest rates on the whole amount.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. My time is limited, but I yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman made one statement—that no one would dispute but that the rates would be advanced to the farmer. That has been and will be disputed by very high authorities. The gentleman forgets that only a small portion of the farmers' loans are from the farm loan banks, and even about that there is a dispute, and the other part, the 95 per cent, will be very much lower to him.

Mr. KETCHAM. All I can say in reply to the gentleman is this, that during the time the operations of the farm loan system were suspended by reason of the court procedure brought against it the interest rates through ordinary channels were not only increased but the increase was so appreciable as to give point to the argument that I am making.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The rates were increased to everybody during that time; interest rates were going up everywhere.

Mr. KETCHAM. May I just refer to the indirect effect of the interest rates by quoting the following language from a high authority:

The influence of the loans made by the banks of the farm-loan system was to stabilize interest rates on farm loans throughout the entire country. In Montana and Texas, where rates had been 10 and 12 per cent, farmers were able to get money at 5½ and 6 per cent under the farm-loan system, and the rates charged by commercial concerns dropped considerably. Every farmer, no matter of whom he borrowed, was benefited by the farm-loan system, because all money lenders had to meet, in a measure, the competition of the land banks.

We got the "reverse English" on this proposition when the banks of the farm-loan system were compelled to suspend operations owing to a suit in the courts to test the constitutionality of the act.

Third. Reference has been made to the attitude of the farm organizations, and I think the distinguished acting chairman of the Committee on Rules quoted from one of these farm organizations. May I in that connection read the action of the National Grange at its recent session in Witchita?

The Grange favors an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit further issues of all tax-exempt bonds, but so long as tax-exempt bonds of any kind are permitted we oppose the repeal of the tax-exempt features of the Federal farm loan act.

That indicates very clearly that while they favor the general proposition of abolishing tax-exempt securities they do hold in this resolution to an indorsement of the operations of the Federal farm loan act, and are especially insistent that no action shall be taken that in any way affects that act.

May I also refer to the action of another great farm gathering on the same question? Probably no farm conference in the history of the United States has created so much interest as the one held not quite one year ago here in Washington, and I now quote from the committee on taxation in the report of the National Agricultural Conference, page 141. I quote the second recommendation, which, by the way, was adopted unanimously by more than 400 delegates from various agricultural activities attending this conference:

We recommend—

Second, a constitutional amendment prohibiting issuance of tax-free securities: Provided, That inasmuch as agricultural lands and mortgages are both taxed and that agriculture is a fundamental industry upon which all industries depend, nothing in these resolutions shall apply to bonds, debentures, and certificates of indebtedness issued under authority of the Federal farm loan act or any amendments thereto.

My amendment to the resolution will give point to this recommendation unanimously adopted by this great gathering of farmers uniting in one of the best expressions of farm opinion that we have ever had in this country.

Finally, may I present for your consideration the very wide distribution of the farm loan associations? There are now in the country 4,463 of these land-bank associations. Herewith I give a table showing the number of individual farmers in the several States who have loans through the farm land banks together with the amount loaned:

When it is recalled that the percentage of mortgaged farms is alarmingly high in this country and increasing with each decade, and when we are called upon to submit to the people an amendment that makes the future of the farm land banks at least uncertain, it is my judgment that we should hesitate a long time unless my limitation is adopted.

The farm land bank works. It helps the members directly and all other mortgage debtors indirectly. Pending legislation is designed to extend its usefulness. Why not make sure that the helpful influence it has exerted shall continue? Why take a chance in limiting seriously, in not completely stopping the operations, of a system that satisfactorily and completely answers the farmers' demand for long-time mortgage credit?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KETCHAM. Oh, no; I asked only to revise them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he would put in his remarks the figures on Maryland. I have no objection to his revising and extending his remarks.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will be very glad to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I call the gentleman's attention to the new legislation, the office created, director of extension service. That is new legislation, not authorized by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think, under the decision of the Chair last year, it would not be held to be new legislation. However, I may say to the gentleman that the establishment of this office is in accordance with a reorganization which was adopted two years ago, under which the three lines of work in the department—regulation, research, and extension—were combined under three heads. We completed two parts of that last year by creating a Director of Research and a Director of Regulatory Work. The object of this office is now to fully complete that reorganization by bringing all of the extension service under one head, under one director, so that it will all clear through one place.

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it for granted that the additional office is required providing the reorganization is effected. What is the reorganization suggested in the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand in effect that the reorganization is effected now and this only gives a legal status to the method of doing it that is in existence to-day.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then it is legislation and subject to the point of order. I would prefer to pass it for the present and let the policy be determined as to whether the reorganization shall be effected or not.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, but if the gentleman wants to reserve it until we pass the item with reference to the extension service which is connected with it, I shall have no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman's contention is that this legislation is absolutely necessary—the reorganization suggested.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it is, anyway. It certainly is if the reorganization is effected.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to hear the gentleman on the reorganization. I have read the hearings. It does not seem to throw very much light on the subject and what is to be gained by the reorganization. I have read the testimony of Mr. Pugsley and the rest.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman would not expect me to throw more light than the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and the others?

Mr. HAUGEN. What saving could be effected by it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think we can throw some light on that proposition later on.

Mr. HAUGEN. If we pass it for the present we will then decide.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa make the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed for the present without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we might as well thrash that question out now. There are several matters in here I would like the Chair to pass on.

Mr. ANDERSON. Do I understand the gentleman to object?

Mr. BLANTON. I think all of the points of order ought to be passed on now and not be suspended over.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Iowa does not I am going to make one or two points of order. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph for the present, Mr. Chairman, until the gentleman acts.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman reserves the point of order, I suggest that we pass the paragraph because this proposition is coming up on pages 3 and 4.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask a question or two if the gentleman from Iowa has finished. To create this new director of extension the gentleman in his opening speech admitted would require the creation of a new bureau in this department?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. BLANTON. I so understood it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Under the reorganization no new bureau is created. The office of Home Economics, which as now carried is under the States Relations Service, becomes a separate bureau under this reorganization and becomes such separate bureau with exactly the same statutory force and the same appropriation they now have.

Mr. BLANTON. But with the passage of this paragraph, as it now stands, will there or will there not be an additional bureau in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, this particular paragraph will not have any effect in reference to the creation of the bureau to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is an additional bureau created by this bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not an additional bureau.

Mr. BLANTON. More than we have at this time?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; not at all. The office is there; it is now under the States Relations Service; it has a statutory roll; it has an appropriation. All this reorganization does, or one of the things it does, is to take that office from under the States Relations Service and make a separate bureau, with exactly the same statutory force and the same appropriation that it now has.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention to the growing list of help that the department annually is getting in the way of legal advice, and I presume, by reason of getting the extra legal advice from time to time, that they must have created new bureaus. For instance, this paragraph gives a solicitor to the Secretary at $5,000 a year.

Mr. ANDERSON. They have always had that.

Mr. BLANTON. They have always had that—that is an attorney?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The solicitor is an attorney?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Down a little further, in line 15, after giving a solicitor at $5,000 a year they give attorneys. I do not know why they have a different specification and do not call them solicitors, but they are called attorneys—one at $4,000, two at $3,500 each, two at $3,250 each; law clerks, four at $3,000 each—I may say that used to be the salary that a circuit judge would draw in the States of Minnesota and Texas not so many years ago, but they call them law clerks here. Two additional law clerks at $2,750 each, four at $2,500 each, eight at $2,250 each, and one at $2,200. What is the necessity for so much legal advice to be lodged in the Department of Agriculture in addition to the swarm of lawyers in the Department of Justice?

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman knew more about the Department of Agriculture than he apparently does he would not ask this question.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope some of these days I may know half as much as the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, because sincerely I believe he knows more about the Department of Agriculture than any other man on this floor. I am hopeful some day to know partly as much as he does. But I am down there frequently; I am in the various bureaus frequently; I am asking questions down there frequently, trying to find out, just as the gentleman from Minnesota used to do, something about the business of this country, and for my life I can not see why they should need so many high-salaried lawyers down there in the Agricultural Department.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think I can answer the gentleman's question, and I shall be glad to. In the first place, the solicitor's roll under this paragraph carries $2,500 less than it carried before.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman means than last year?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How about the fiscal year 1917?

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me answer the gentleman's question. There are two new places in the solicitor's office, one attorney at $4,000 and one at $3,500. They take the place of five law clerks at $2,000 each, so that there is an actual saving as the result of that readjustment of $2,500.

Now, the Department of Agriculture is charged with the enforcement of a large number of very important laws—the pure food law, the grain futures act, the packers and stockyards act, and a large number of other very important laws. Now, of course, the actual prosecution of violations of those acts is conducted by the Attorney General's office, but the cases have all to be prepared, the evidence has to be secured, the cases have to be proved up, and the whole business has to be put into the hands of the Attorney General as ready for trial. That requires quite a large force of attorneys.

In addition to that, there are constantly arising in the department questions of interpretations of these laws, the interpretation to be put upon appropriations, and a great many other matters, all of which require a considerable amount of research and the giving of sound legal advice to the Secretary in connection with his duties.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure that explanation appeals to the gentleman from Minnesota, but I was under the impression that this particular administration, and especially the gentleman himself, was in favor of a consolidation rather than an extension of the various bureaus of the Government, and from my investigation I believe that much of this work that is now done by the various lawyers in the Department of Agriculture should be left to the lawyers in the Department of Justice. May I ask the gentleman this question for information? How many more lawyers—and when I speak of lawyers I am speaking of these law clerks that draw $3,000 a year, and I suppose they are lawyers——

Mr. ANDERSON. They are.

Mr. BLANTON. How many more of them are we giving to the department in this bill than the department had in 1917? That was the last normal fiscal year.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am afraid I can not answer that question, but my guess would be that under this bill we have a less number of lawyers than we had then.

Mr. BLANTON. I am afraid the gentleman is mistaken about that conjecture. If the gentleman has those figures there, I would like him to give them to us.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have not got them here.

Mr. BLANTON. On the statement of the gentleman that it does not create a new bureau, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, before passing from this I notice there is an increase in the total amount. Is that due to bringing some activities under this paragraph that are now under some other paragraph?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will be very glad to explain that to the gentleman. Of course, the gentleman understands, in the first place, that the office of the Secretary here includes a great deal more than the language itself signifies. It includes the office of the Assistant Secretary, and it includes the office of the solicitor, and it includes quite a number of agencies that are directly under the Secretary's office in addition to what would ordinarily be meant under the language "Office of the Secretary."

Now, while this does show an apparent increase in the amount, in reality it is not an increase. It has been the practice for a good many years to carry on the various rolls of the department employees who are detailed to the Secretary's office. Now, where the addition of activities of one kind and another results in increasing the work in the Secretary's office, these details become permanent. When they do become permanent in that way we take them off the lump-sum roll in which they are carried and carry them on the Secretary's roll; so that this sum now, though apparently representing an increase, actually represents a decrease because of the persons taken from the lump-sum appropriation and placed in this paragraph.

Mr. TILSON. Is this item here, "Salary of director of scientific work," new?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; since last year.

Mr. TILSON. And so with a number of others, aggregating about $20,000 increase?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] desire to make a point of order on the paragraph?

Mr. HAUGEN. My idea was to withdraw the point of order and ask that the paragraph be passed over until later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and compensation of necessary employees in the mechanical shops and power plant of the Department of Agriculture, $90,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who is to determine the number of these so-called "necessary employees"?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman, I suppose, is familiar with how this item comes to be in this form?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No.

Mr. ANDERSON. We formerly had a statutory roll in the mechanical shops, and prior to that there was carried a number of employees in all the bureaus doing this kind of work. These employees were all gathered under one statutory item in the Secretary's office. Some of them are employed part of the time and some are employed the year round. Last year we made a lump sum of $90,000, which represented a decrease, as I recall, of $19,000, and placed them at fixed salaries on the statutory roll.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The number of employees not being fixed by law but left to the discretion of some officer, he can pay all the salary he may please to any individual provided the aggregate of all salaries shall not exceed $90,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. Within the limitation of existing law.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What would be the maximum salary possible to be paid?

Mr. ANDERSON. It would depend on the character of the employees. They are all obtained through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly. Have we any law to-day which would fix the maximum salary which could be paid under these two lines?

Mr. ANDERSON. So far as I know, possibly not. I could not answer the gentleman's question definitely.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If we have not, then we have this situation: We have $90,000 appropriated in a lump sum, and the number of employees and the salaries to be paid to them not fixed, and it is left entirely to the discretion of some man to pay any salary as large as he pleases to any employee, provided the aggregate of all salaries shall not exceed $90,000. Now, with all respect to the gentleman and the committee who have done such fine work in preparing this bill, it seems to me that this is a discretion that ought not to be lodged in any man who has charge of the expenditure of the public funds. There are very few private employers who would turn over to any man the right to take out of the employer's bank account $90,000 and pay it all to as few men as he might decide to pay it to—to fix the salaries in his discretion; and inasmuch as we are expending money out of the Public Treasury it would look as if there ought to be something to limit that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, may I say in answer to the gentleman that, of course, there is so much work of this kind to be done in the department that the department would only be spiting itself by fixing salaries so high that it could employ only an insufficient number of people to do the work. But the real answer to the gentleman, it seems to me, is that the salaries which have been paid heretofore do not justify his fear. For example, we have employed now under this item a mechanical superintendent who gets $3,000 a year. We have an assistant mechanical superintendent who gets $2,500 a year, a chief engineer who gets $2,040, an executive clerk who gets $2,000, a foreman who gets $1,800, a messenger who gets $720. Then we have two mechanical assistants who are paid $1,400 to $1,800. We have 17 carpenters who are paid from $840 to $1,600. I am sure the gentleman would not say those salaries are exorbitant.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; I will say that those figures seem to be very reasonable; and that leads me to ask, Why should not specific mention of those salaries be incorporated in the pending bill, and these not be left entirely to the discretion of some person to determine the number of employees and the salaries to be paid?

Why should a department official be given a lump sum of $90,000 to expend in his discretion when the figures that the gentleman has just read show that it is not at all necessary to legislate in that way?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think the figures show anything to be feared. They show that the policy which we adopted when we established this lump sum has fully justified the confidence we reposed in the department in doing it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then why did the gentleman in the first paragraph of the bill go into such details, mentioning particularly the employees, the number of them, and the salary of each?

Mr. ANDERSON. Because that class of employment is entirely different. Those people are employed at annual salaries, while a part of the mechanical force is employed for day work, part of it month by month, and part of it for the entire year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The reason I propounded the question I did was not because I have any doubt as to the integrity of any gentleman, especially not of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], or of any man in the department who has the employing of these people, but because I do know that wherever possible—and it is possible here—the Congress of the United States should not turn over lump sums of the people's money to be expended in salaries in the discretion of any department official. With all respect to the gentleman from Minnesota, who says he has the utmost confidence in these particular officials, you could say that of every official in the public service, and never have a bill of rights, either in the Federal Constitution or in the constitutions of the respective States. If you are to believe that all public officials are honest, and that there need be no restrictions around them, what necessity is there for your bill of rights? Not only that, but, as Thomas Jefferson said, governments are founded on distrust of human nature. Men may use their own money as they please, but the expenditure of the money of the taxpayers of the Nation ought to be regulated, in as far as possible, in the letter of the law enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. It seems to me that the general policy followed by the committee is a sound one. If there were necessity for making a limitation that no salary under this lump-sum appropriation should be larger than a certain sum, as is done in other departments, that might be worth while; but it seems to me that to attempt to write out a statutory roll in all its details would be an unwise thing; because when a person gets on the statutory roll the head of that bureau has a very difficult task ever to dislodge him from that roll, and there is less chance for improvement in a department if thus hampered.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think there would be anything improper in saying that no salary should exceed a certain sum?

Mr. TILSON. I do not. That very thing is provided in the naval bill that we passed the other day. Many of the paragraphs of that bill contain such a limitation, and I do not say that it is inadvisable.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is all I had in mind. You can readily see that a man having a lump sum of $90,000 to expend might pay to some man of whom he was fond a larger sum than would be necessary; and inasmuch as the paragraph which the gentleman from Minnesota read shows that the highest salary paid last year was but $3,500, I had in mind that there ought to be some limitation of that sort.

Mr. TILSON. After all, these lists of the employees paid out of the lump-sum appropriations are gone over with a fine-tooth comb every year by the committee in order to see what the department has done with the money the year before. I believe that leaving a little bit of leeway, a little discretion on the part of the department, makes for better service than can be obtained by tying it up with an absolute iron-bound statutory roll.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin also that accompanying the estimate is an itemized statement showing each necessary employee and the salary at which he is going to be employed under this appropriation, and the department has always been bound by that statement.

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that we are running a serious risk of the department abusing its trust. I believe that this gives sufficient leeway whereby the department can pay some of the employees more than it has been paying them and cut off a few that are unnecessary. For my own part, I think that we ought to have a less number of Government employees and at the same time require a higher degree of efficiency and pay higher salaries to those remaining in the service.

Mr. HAUGEN. After all, it leaves it to the department in its discretion to pay any salary within the appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. Of course it can not go beyond that.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is the present limitation?

Mr. ANDERSON. That would have no application here. The present limitation is for a certain number at $6,500, a certain number at $5,500, and a certain number at $5,000.

Mr. TILSON. According to the class of civil service under which they are employed. It seems to me that the policy of the committee is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. Three thousand dollars is the highest paid to the mechanical superintendent, and the ordinary law which applies to the use of lump-sum appropriations applies here as well as elsewhere.

Mr. HAUGEN. There is no general law. You have a law affecting the salaries in certain departments. Is there any limitation put upon the salaries except the $4,500?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can the gentleman give us the salaries paid under the statutory roll, so that we may know whether these salaries have been increased or decreased?

Mr. ANDERSON. The roll under 1922, which I think was the last year, carried exactly the same salaries that are paid now.

Mr. HAUGEN. The salaries were not increased by the lump sum?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Do I understand that there is a law which would prohibit the paying of larger salaries than is mentioned in the list which the gentleman read?

Mr. ANDERSON. This is the law on the subject, which is not applicable, however, to mechanical employees because there is a question, of course, of the price which is being paid to mechanical employees in competition with other private agencies that use them. But, speaking generally, the lump-sum funds can not be used to increase the salary of a person taken from the statutory roll and placed in a lump-sum appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICES OF EDITORIAL AND DISTRIBUTION WORK.

Salaries: Assistant in charge of editorial office, $5,000; assistant in charge of office of distribution, $3,500; editor, $3,000; executive assistant, $3,000; assistant editors—1 $2,250, 2 at $2,000 each, 1 $1,800; assistants in charge—1 of addressing, duplicating, and mailing, $2,400; 1 of indexing, $2,000; draftsman or photographer, $2,100; chief clerk, $2,000; assistants—2 at $2,500 each, 3 at $2,000 each; indexer or compiler, $1,800; artist and designer, $2,500; draftsmen or photographers—1 $1,600, 1 $1,500, 3 at $1,400 each, 1 $1,300, 10 at $1,200 each; lantern-slide colorist, $1,200; executive clerk, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 10 of class 2, 18 of class 1, 19 at $1,100 each, 45 at $960 each; mechanical assistant, $1,980; machine operators—1 $1,500, 4 at $1,400 each, 13 at $1,200 each, 7 at $1,100 each, 5 at $1,000 each; folders—1 $1,200, 2 at $1,000 each; messengers or laborers—3 at $900 each, 8 at $840 each, 4 at $780 each, 10 at $720 each, 1 $600; 8 skilled laborers, at $1,100 each; messenger boys—5 at $720 each, 1 $660, 5 at $600 each, 6 at $480 each; charwomen—3 at $480 each, 3 at $240 each; in all, $263,670.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph. Here is an assistant in charge of editorial office, $5,000. Where do we get that?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is in the Division of Publications under a new title.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Have we had an assistant in charge of the editorial office at $5,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. We have not; that is a new position.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then you have an assistant charged with the office of distribution, $3,500.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And an editor at $3,000, an executive assistant at $3,000, and assistant editors—one at $2,500 and two at $2,000 and one at $1,800.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The price of editors must have come down. Assistant in charge of the editorial office—I suppose that means an assistant secretary; if not, what does it mean?

Mr. ANDERSON. It means an assistant to the Secretary in charge of this office.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it means an Assistant Secretary in charge of the office; $5,000 is the pay of an Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ANDERSON. It means substantially the same as Chief of the Bureau of Publications.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What was his salary?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think $3,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not wish to object to the whole paragraph, but I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he would object to an amendment reducing the salaries of the various editors?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can reach that by his point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am withholding the point of order. I do not care to destroy the editorial work going on, but I think it is unnecessary to have it overdone.

Mr. ANDERSON. I said that the assistant in charge of the editorial office is a new employee. I was in error. There is an assistant in charge of the editorial office who is now paid out of the lump sum for extension service $5,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is he mentioned in any provision of law?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; he is not carried on the statutory roll. His duties are the same as under the reorganization.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not care to tear up the bill by making points of order, because that means a lot more work for the committee. Would the chairman be willing to accept an amendment reducing the salary to $4,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have no information particularly as to whether the work is worth $4,000 or $5,000. This is a very important division.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We are developing a systematic plan, and we have consolidated much of the printing, and yet here we have printing scattered all through the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it is all collected in one item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On the very next page you say that the provisions of a certain paragraph shall not apply to such printing and binding as is now specially authorized by law or by the decision of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANDERSON. We can take that up when we reach it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not want to lose any rights under the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman can not lose any rights under a point of order as to a paragraph not yet reached.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If you ever get an editor under the title of assistant in charge of an editorial office at $5,000 a year you will never get rid of him, and everybody who has ever been around these Government establishments knows that.

Mr. ANDERSON. But I do not want to get rid of him. I think if he is put there that he ought to be kept there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This is creating a new office.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not, because we have him now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But he is hidden out under a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it not better to put him where we can see him?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have him now where we can see him, and let us get rid of him.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman makes the point of order as to the $5,000 position and the Chair sustains him, it will go out, and the gentleman from Minnesota will then offer his amendment to restore him at $3,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Just one moment. Do not let us lose this thing. We are out for economy, and while we are all in favor of the Agricultural appropriation bill, we would like to discuss these things when we discover them. We have discovered a $5,000 man hiding behind the lump-sum bush.

Mr. BLANTON. And the way to reach him is by a point of order to the $5,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and then we would get the $3,500 man under the previous law, and the $5,000 editor will still be hiding behind this lump sum.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I think you will knock him out completely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not sure of that, because these editors are everywhere and always irrepressible.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to know why the assistant gets $5,000 and the editor $3,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Because the assistant is going to boss the editor.

Mr. BEGG. What are the assistant's duties?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, these editors and bosses of editors and bosses of bosses of editors. We know the brand.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it makes much difference what you call these gentlemen, but certainly I would not call an editor as badly as my friend here who is one.

Mr. BEGG. Well, he knows what they are.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I know that the market is down for editors just now.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is not in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Just to what part of the paragraph is the gentleman making the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of order to that portion of the paragraph beginning on line 15, page 4, and running as far as line 16 after the figures "$3,000." I make the point that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, this is not a new position. A person employed under this title is now employed in the Department of Agriculture and is paid out of a lump-sum appropriation for extension activities, and is engaged in substantially the same work as he will be engaged in under this appropriation, according to the chief of the division.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not this an entirely new position?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was so stated on page 31 of the hearings. Mr. Pugsley says:

There are only two new positions asked for; one is for a man to take charge of this editorial work in the Secretary's office, and the other is the director of extension work.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know which one of the gentlemen is right, but, on page 35, Mr. Cobbs, who has been in charge of the division of publications, stated:

> The first place, page 11, assistant in charge of editorial office, at $5,000, is a transfer from a lump-sum fund to the extension service, which has been correspondingly reduced and is to provide for a person to take charge of the offices of the editorial and distribution work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I suppose that is to be Mr. Cobbs?

Mr. ANDERSON. No; it will not be Mr. Cobbs.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope not; but it will be somebody else equally adept in jockeying these things around from lump sums to high-sounding titles.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if I may proceed, the Chair is familiar with the general law applicable to the Department of Agriculture with reference to the employment of persons in connection with the services authorized by the appropriation.

I call the Chair's attention to section 523 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows, and this is a very old law:

> The Commissioner of Agriculture shall appoint a chief clerk with a salary of $2,000 a year, who in all cases during the necessary absence of the commissioner, or when the office of commissioner shall become vacant, shall perform the duties of the commissioner; and he shall appoint such other employees as Congress may from time to time provide, with salaries corresponding to salaries of similar officers in other departments of the Government, and he shall, as Congress may from time to time provide, employ other persons for such time as their services may be needed, including chemists, botanists, entomologists, and other persons skilled in the natural sciences pertaining to agriculture.

Of course that language does not specifically state that the Secretary of Agriculture may employ an assistant in charge of the editorial office, but it does in general language give the Secretary of Agriculture the power to employ such persons as Congress may provide for by appropriations.

Mr. BEGG. Does not that language specifically require that Congress shall provide for and then that the Secretary shall appoint?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Instead of the way it is being done, the Secretary appointing and then coming down and asking Congress to provide?

Mr. ANDERSON. Congress provides the appropriations, and it has always been the practice under these appropriations for the Secretary to employ the necessary persons to carry out the purpose which Congress designated in the appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit just one question further?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. On the gentleman's statement that Congress provides the appropriation before there is any excuse for an appropriation, that Congress felt the necessity for the office, instead of filling the office and then coming down and showing the necessity for the appropriation, I think we have just reversed the actual working of the law that the gentleman read.

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not agree with the gentleman at all. The whole question which arises, so far as the rules of the House are concerned, is whether there is statutory authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to employ a person to do this job. Is not that it?

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit I will say it is just exactly the contrary. Congress creates a department down there to do a specific work authorized by Congress. Now, under the interpretation the gentleman has put on it the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture could go to unlimited lengths and if he can, on the gentleman's contention, name one officer without specific authority and then come to Congress and say, "Under the authority you have given me originally I have named one officer," why, under the same authority he can name 100 officers.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not claim he can name one officer. There is a distinction in the law between officers and employees of the department.

Mr. BEGG. I change my verbiage and use the word "employee" instead of "officer," and I still contend that under the authority of the general law if the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture can name one new employee he can name 100, and he is the sole judge and not Congress at all.

Mr. ANDERSON. I take the gentleman on his own statement. Let us suppose we should put in this bill some such language as this, "To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to assist farmers in dehorning cows, $100,000," I venture to say the gentleman would not contend for a moment that under that appropriation the Secretary would not have the power to employ any persons necessary to carry that appropriation into effect.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman will permit, I will concede in that specific case, but does the gentleman contend that under the language "to assist in the development of agriculture" the deciding power as to how far the Government shall go in the development rests with the Secretary? In the illustration he gave he made a specific work, to dehorn cattle, $100,000, but in this appropriation it is to assist in the development of agriculture, and I say the authority to say how far the United States shall go rests with the Secretary or with Congress, one of the two. The gentleman's contention is that it rests with the Secretary, and my contention is that no Congress intended to go that far.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not question at all the power of the Congress to strike out this proposition and everything which pertains to the division of publications. The only question that arises is, Is there legal authority from the standpoint of the rules of this House to create this place? That is the only question, and the only determining factor there is, Has the Secretary of Agriculture the legal authority to employ a person to do this job? I think he clearly has.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like for the Chairman to hear me just for a moment. Mr. Chairman, clearly the hearings show conclusively that this is a new position. I call the attention of the Chair to page 30 of the hearings. In speaking of this new employment Mr. BUCHANAN asked this question:

> Is that the only new person you contemplate securing?
>
> Assistant Secretary PUGSLEY. On the extension end of the work it is. The Secretary is also asking for an editor in chief, at a salary which will permit him to get some person competent to do a lot of things that ought to be done in connection with the department bulletins.
>
> Mr. BUCHANAN. Are these two men outside of the service you contemplate employing?
>
> Assistant Secretary PUGSLEY. Those are the only two new positions we are asking for.

Now, on page 31, I call the attention of the Chair to the following:

> Mr. BUCHANAN. You have no increases in salaries. What are those? Just let the record show that.
>
> Assistant Secretary PUGSLEY. If there are any increases those will be taken up under the items as we come to them. There are no increases in salary due to the reorganization other than already explained.
>
> Mr. BUCHANAN. You have a chief in charge, at $5,000.
>
> Assistant Secretary PUGSLEY. That is the editorial position I spoke of a moment ago, the man that the Secretary wants to take charge of all the publications of the department.
>
> Mr. BUCHANAN. That is one increase, is it not?
> Assistant Secretary PUGSLEY. That is a new position by transfer from a lump sum of the extension service, which fund has been reduced accordingly.

Now, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture shows this is a new position, in which he is asking that this man be employed at $5,000, and I am willing to take the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], who is not only a distinguished Member of this Congress but a distinguished editor of long experience, that this editor is not worth $5,000 a year, and that the old salary authorized by law of $3,500 ought to be sufficient to get the very best of help for this department. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. TILSON. Will the Chair hear me for a moment on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I am afraid that I shall again have to take issue with my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] on a parliamentary matter. As I view this question, Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference whether it is a new position or an old one. Whether it is a transfer from a lump-sum appropriation or whether it is entirely new, the question is whether the service here proposed to be appropriated for is a service authorized by the law.

Some of us who sometimes give attention to parliamentary questions have been fooled on this Agricultural appropriation bill before. The organic law of the Department of Agriculture is broader than that of any other department in the whole Government, so that the rules applicable to other departments do not apply in many cases to the Agricultural Department on account of this difference in the organic law of the department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me while I read a quotation from the fundamental law?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I read:

> For the diffusion among the people of the United States of useful information in connection with the subject of agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

Mr. TILSON. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman from Texas has supplied the quotation from the organic law that I was not able to give from memory.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I was not able to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. I was addressing my remarks to the Chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman contend that the words "assistant in charge of editorial office" are admissible in a bill of this kind under the fundamental law?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. If these words were stricken out here it would make no difference. The Secretary of Agriculture could put the same man now holding the position on again at the same salary. In order to prevent this, the gentleman would have to put in a limitation by means of an amendment to the effect that no man who is employed by the Department of Agriculture as an editor shall receive more than $3,500, if that is the limit to which the gentleman is willing to go in salaries for editors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If it said "Assistant Secretary, in charge of editorial office, at $5,000," and established the Assistant Secretary, we have no recourse?

Mr. TILSON. We are not establishing anything. We are appropriating for a certain work that is authorized by existing law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And in a sly sort of way here we are giving some tone to an office that has been hiding. Is not that what we are doing?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Washington may characterize it as he pleases. It does not change the facts or the law in the case. This service is authorized by the fundamental law creating the Department of Agriculture, and we are here called upon to appropriate for it under a name. It makes no difference what the name is, whether it has a name at all. We are authorized under the law to appropriate for it if we so desire, and therefore, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I think the decision of this particular point of order is a determining factor in the question as to what the policy of the Congress shall be and how far any Secretary of a department may go under a general authorization.

I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the last part of section 523 in the volume known as "Laws Applicable to the Department of Agriculture," specifically referring to new appointments. I will concede the contention of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] that the Secretary of Agriculture may do what he wants to do with his lump-sum appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean section 622?

Mr. BEGG. I mean paragraph or section 523 in this book. It is found on page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a copy of another code.

Mr. BEGG. I want to read that. Speaking of the commissioner, it says:

> And he shall appoint such other employees as Congress may from time to time provide, with salaries corresponding to the salaries of similar officers in other departments of the Government, and he shall, as Congress may from time to time provide, employ other persons for such time as their services may be needed, including chemists, botanists, entomologists, and other persons skilled in the sciences.

Now, I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that that language specifically requires this Congress to provide the office before this committee, which is an appropriating committee, has any right to come in and make an appropriation for an office that is not in existence.

I will concede again, as I did a moment ago, that under a lump-sum appropriation the Secretary of Agriculture may spend this money for this identical purpose. He can do it if the money is carried in a lump sum. But this committee has no legal right under the rules of this House to come in with an appropriation for a specific office which has never been created under a statute by this body.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is all there is in the point of order. I will not deny that the Secretary can appoint a man out of the lump sum to do this very thing. I am denying that this committee, which is deprived of legislative power under a specific rule, can bring in an appropriation for a specific office before that office has been created by Congress under general statute creating that organization, because that statute plainly says that the Secretary may appoint and shall appoint after Congress has provided the office.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say this, that if the gentleman is right, then 99 out of 100 specific appropriations in this bill are subject to a point of order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman is correct in his assertion, that is not any reason why we ought to continue to go wrong. [Applause.]

Now, if I am right the Chair ought to uphold that, and it is a simple case of a judicial decision on the language. If the English language here does not mean what it says, then I do not know what it does mean. It says the Secretary may appoint after Congress has provided the job. I maintain again that this committee can not appropriate for something that is not in existence. They can get around that particular thing by adding $5,000 to the lump sum, and the Secretary can go ahead and do what he pleases with the lump sum. But we have no right to put it in in that shape.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. HILL. As to the lump-sum provision at the bottom of page 5, "General expenses, offices of editorial and distribution work," could $5,000 be taken from that for this purpose?

Mr. BEGG. Unquestionably you could take it all if you wanted to.

Mr. ANDERSON. You could not take a dollar of it. It is for another purpose.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the creation of a new office or a new bureau has universally been held to be subject to a point of order; clearly it is legislation not authorized by law. I recall that time and time again such a provision has been held to be subject to a point of order. If one office can be created, then any number of offices can be created. If this office can be created, it is possible also to create the office of a Third Assistant Secretary. That question has been decided in the past, and it has been held that such a provision was subject to a point of order.

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe anybody would deny the statement of the gentleman, which is absolutely sound, but I do not think anyone here claims this creates an office. I do not believe the gentleman from Minnesota claims that it creates an office. It is not legislation at all. It is simply an appropriation.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] states that it does not create a new position, but there is a change of title, which makes it subject to a point of order.

Mr. FESS. If this change is made, which the chairman of the committee claims is only a change in title, will there be any additional appropriation required by making the change?

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand the gentleman to say that it carries an increase of $1,500.

Mr. FESS. How is it the creation of a new office, if there is no additional amount of money required to be appropriated and if it is not creating some work that has not yet been done? If this work is being done under a different name and this is merely changing the name, is there any new office created?

Mr. HAUGEN. It changes the title.

Mr. FESS. The question might be answered more clearly if I put it this way: If you make this man an assistant editor instead of what you first called him, will the assistant editor be an additional officer, or will you continue an office that would otherwise be displaced?

Mr. HAUGEN. If you made the title exactly what it was before it would not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FESS. As a matter of fact, is this an additional office?

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the rules of the House a change of title or the creation of a new bureau or a new office is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FESS. I should not think a change of the character of work the man is doing would be a change of law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman has had some experience in seeing bureaus created, and he knows that if this position is created and there is anything left in the lump sum and they need another editor to do mimeograph work or to cut clippings out of a newspaper, they will employ that other man out of the lump sum, and thus the bureau grows. It is the old story.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has got right to the crux of the thing. The point I am after is this: If we make this change, will the other place for which this is substituted be continued?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. As long as there is anything left in the lump sum and somebody thinks there is additional editorial, or so-called editorial, work to be done.

Mr. FESS. If the other place is to be continued, of course this would be the creation of a new office.

Mr. HAUGEN. The present title is chief of division, which is stricken out, and this new language is chief editor, and this language is a substitute for the other.

Mr. FESS. When you create the position of chief editor is the chief of division continued?

Mr. ANDERSON. None of these officers under the Division of Publications has ever been established by any law whatever; not one of them. I will challenge the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] or anybody else to find one law that ever has established these places. The only thing that has ever been done was to pass a law which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to disseminate useful information.

As a result of that, a bureau was built up to carry out that authorization, and from time to time these places were created.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They get certain appropriations for a forestry service, or field work, or anything you please, and most of them contain the words "and for other purposes," and they generally develop an editor and a newspaper. Now, is the House of Representatives helpless when it is proposed to create in an appropriation bill a position equal to that of an assistant head of a department—are we helpless when we make a point of order because there has been a lump-sum appropriation somewhere?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 14 to the bill (H. R. 13232) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says most of these positions are in the same fix. They have not been stricken out heretofore because the Members of the House thought they were salutary and did not care to make points of order against them. But I ask the gentleman to remember the situation of the Indian bill, when the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] was on the warpath and stood on the floor here and made a point of order against practically every single paragraph of the bill and was sustained, and it required a special rule of the House to make the entire Indian bill in order, because that committee had been doing just exactly what this committee has been doing—carrying legislative provisions for years and years without any authority of law. But when the membership sees fit to raise points of order against some position which shocks the conscience, if they think it ought to stop, it is not a good argument to say that the members of the Committee of the Whole have permitted it heretofore.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Does the gentleman think that a salary of $5,000 for a man of this kind shocks the conscience of the House?

Mr. BLANTON. I am taking the evidence of the distinguished editor from Washington, Mr. JOHNSON, who says that it is $1,500 more than the very best talent in the country can be obtained for.

Mr. ANDERSON. This man is not merely an editor. He is in charge of one of the most important divisions of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. And probably does less work than the editor or subeditor or assistant subeditor does. Whenever you raise a grade or increase a salary you get more dignity and golf but less work out of the individual.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair realizes that there are complications in this point of order and appreciates the force of the argument advanced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], but last year an almost similar situation arose, and at that time the Chair went into the matter very thoroughly and quoted a number of authorities. Without taking the time of the committee to rehearse the precedents, it seems to the Chair that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has expressed the controlling factor in this case, and that is: Does the authority to engage these employees rest with the Department of Agriculture under existing law? The law creating that department and the law under which it is operated is probably the broadest of any law relating to any department of the Government, and last year when an appropriation for a new employee was presented against which a point of order was made the Chair addressed himself to the question whether the Secretary of Agriculture has the authority. The Chair thought then and thinks now that he has, and basing his decision on that decision rendered by the present occupant of the chair, and fortified further by a decision of Chairman TOWNER on January 24 last, the Chair believes that this item is in order and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman has his amendment reported, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] reserved a point of order, and it seems to the Chair that had better be disposed of first.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. I reserved a point of order on the section.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is that it changes the title of "Division of publications" to "Offices of editorial and distribution work."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I revert to the question of fact that the division of publications by name has never been created by any act of Congress. It is merely a convenient title by which the division which conducts a certain class of work in the Department of Agriculture is carried on. When that was created in the department by the Secretary it could have been given any name which he pleased to give it. It has no sanction of law. It is not so sacred that it can not be changed either by us or by the Secretary. This title does not change the appropriation status of this division at all. It is simply a convenient subtitle under which certain appropriations are placed in order to designate in a general way the division in the Department of Agriculture which shall perform this function. It is not legislation in any sense, because the original title was not legislation.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think under the rule it is not in order. If this never has been authorized it is out of order under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that it is a change of title and therefore legislation. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Minnesota that the appropriations have not been altered by a change of name and that it is not legislation. By giving a title is simply a method to designate certain activities, and therefore a change of name by the department is not a change of authority or the creation of a new activity. No legislation was enacted to create the title and no legislation is proposed creating a new bureau. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 14, strike out the figures $5,000 and insert in lieu thereof $3,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this reduces the salary of the assistant in charge of the editorial office to an amount which is $500 more than the editor, and should be enough to justify and require the assistant in charge of the editorial office to be in a position slightly less than that of Assistant Secretary, and make his position in true relation to that of the Assistant Secretary, who is or should be his superior officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were 16 ayes and 16 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken, and 10 Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 21, 1922.

(Legislative day of Saturday, December 16, 1922.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

REPORT OF THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION (H. DOC. NO. 512).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fifth annual report of the War Finance Corporation, for the year ended November 30, 1922.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume the report will be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will depend upon the order of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of Harris G. Hale and sundry other members of the congregation of the Leyden Congregational Church, of Brookline, Mass., favoring the passage of the so-called Near East refugee act, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. LADD presented memorials of C. M. Scidmore and 15 other citizens of Park River, and H. H. McCumber and 24 other citizens of Pettibone, all in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of A. M. Thompson and 1 other, of Wildrose; O. J. Freeman and 2 others, of Esmond; Albert H. Westphal and 2 others, of Clyde; N. M. Marvel and 2 others, of Moffit; M. M. Freiland and 2 others, of Cummings; A. L. Ede and 2 others, of Courtenay; C. C. Jensen and 2 others, of Kenmare; Aug. Arvidoon and 2 others, of Wimbledon; E. Buhrn and 1 other, of Wheatland, all in the State of North Dakota; and O. Coequyt and 2 others, of Carbondale, Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation stabilizing the prices of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the fifty-fifth annual session, National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry, at Wichita, Kans., favoring the passage of the so-called Capper-French truth in fabric bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 957) thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to give notice that the bill just reported, the naval appropriation bill, will be brought up to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4218) for the relief of E. G. Crews; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 4219) to amend section 13 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. NORBECK (by request):

A bill (S. 4220) to provide credit facilities for the agricultural and live-stock industries of the United States, to amend the Federal farm loan act, to amend the Federal reserve act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CERTAIN FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. PEPPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 545) for the allowance of certain claims for indemnity for spoliations by the French prior to July 31, 1801, as reported by the Court of Claims, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. DIAL obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I desire to take a little time of the Senate just at this hour so that I may speak on the shipping bill. I am compelled to leave the city at 3 o'clock and perhaps the Senator from South Carolina will accommodate me?

Mr. DIAL. I am glad to accommodate the Senator from New York, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum present before the Senator from New York proceeds. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Simmons
Ball	Gooding	McNary	Smoot
Bayard	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	Nelson	Stanley
Brookhart	Harrison	New	Sutherland

Fernald	Lodge	Reed, Pa.
Fletcher	McKellar	Robinson
George	McKinley	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think it would be well for the information of Senators to state what I shall ask the Senate to do. When the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] complete their addresses I shall move that the Senate go into executive session for the consideration of executive business, and then at the close of the day's business I shall move to adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire at this time to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns on to-morrow, Friday, it be to meet on Tuesday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is the policy of the management of the Senate to limit the holiday season, so far as the Senate is concerned, from Saturday to Tuesday?

Mr. LODGE. We propose to limit it to three days.

Mr. ROBINSON. The purpose is to adjourn from Friday evening until Tuesday?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that that will deny all Senators, except those who live in adjoining States, an opportunity to return to their homes. It has been the custom for a great many years to recess or adjourn for at least a week or 10 days, and I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that it would suit the convenience of many Senators, whom I happen to have heard express themselves, to adjourn from to-morrow until the Tuesday following New Year's Day.

Mr. LODGE. That we can not do without the assent of the House. The House, I understand, is going to adjourn on Saturday until Wednesday. The House will not take a longer adjournment, and I think they are right. I think we ought not to take a protracted recess at this time. We hope to have the rural credits bill before the Senate next week, and I do not think it is proper to take a long recess at this season.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. At the proper time I shall make the motion, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, the Senator can do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it would not be better to provide for reassembling on Wednesday after the Christmas holiday?

Mr. LODGE. If the Senate prefers to take the adjournment from Saturday until Wednesday, as the House is going to do, I have no personal objection at all; but we can not adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand that, but I assume that we could amend the House resolution and probably send it back to the House amended.

Mr. LODGE. The House is not going to send to us any resolution of adjournment. It is not required to send such a resolution. We can adjourn for three days, and that is all the House is going to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it would be a great deal better to adjourn from Saturday until Wednesday than from Friday until Tuesday, for the reason that many of us who want to go home and spend Christmas with our families—for many Senators do not bring their families to Washington until after the holidays—would have to leave our homes during Christmas Day. Indeed, some would have to leave early in the morning on Christmas Day in order to get back here on Tuesday.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to make the order to adjourn on Saturday until Wednesday if the Senate prefers it. That is what the House is going to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator understands I am not speaking for this side of the Chamber at all; I am only representing my own views about it. I say that so far as I am concerned, and I believe other Senators share in my view, I would a great deal rather that our adjournment should be from Saturday until Wednesday than from Friday until Tuesday.

Mr. LODGE. That will be perfectly agreeable to me. I have no objection to it at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from New York yield to me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I have observed from what the Senator from Washington has stated that he expects to-day to move to adjourn instead of taking a recess. I presume all Senators realize what that move means. It means that the motion which is now pending which I have made to take up the bill which is stated in my motion will go by the board. An adjournment, as I understand, will have that result.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am glad the Senator from Nebraska has mentioned that. I was talking about that awhile ago, and it was something I had overlooked. I am very willing to ask, and I now ask unanimous consent, Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington for that purpose?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that when the unfinished business is laid before the Senate tomorrow, or whenever it shall be laid before the Senate after our adjournment, that the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] be considered as pending. It was not my intention to displace the Senator's motion.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to hear the Senator from Washington say that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator from Nebraska could renew his motion, but I do not wish the motion to be put in the position of having been displaced.

Mr. NORRIS. I have had an understanding with the Senator from Washington in regard to there being a recess, and——

Mr. ROBINSON. May I inquire——

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to say, if the Senator from Arkansas will permit me, that I should be glad if we could vote on my motion now. I have not desired this delay from day to day; I should like to reach a vote and have a roll call and let that determine it. It is true that I could, as the Senator from Washington stated, renew my motion; it would be in order for me to do that; but if there is a plan on the part of those who are in control to sidetrack my motion in that way, they will be able to do it, because I shall not, perhaps, be able to get recognition; and I should have to get that in order to make the motion.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Nebraska knows that I would not be a party to anything of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator from Washington would.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So I submit the request for unanimous consent which I have stated.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. May not the request for unanimous consent which has been made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] be submitted by the Chair?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the request for unanimous consent.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] asks unanimous consent that the following agreement may be entered into:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that when the unfinished business is laid before the Senate on Friday, December 22, or whenever it is laid before the Senate after adjournment to-day, the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to take up the bill for the purchase and sale of farm products be considered as pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the early history of American shipping reads almost like a romance. Before the Revolutionary War the Colonies, although subjects of another country, were carrying much of their overseas trade in vessels built and owned on this side of the Atlantic, and with the conclusion of the War for Independence and the establishment of a stable government here the new Republic possessed a merchant marine which was the envy of every maritime nation in the world.

Between 1790 and the second war with England, we developed this fleet of sailing craft until we carried 90 per cent of our oversens trade in vessels flying the American flag and our ships could be found in every port inhabited by civilized people. In the War of 1812 Great Britain practically drove our flag from the seas, but with the increasing need for our products abroad and with the subsequent enactment of tonnage and port-tax laws favorable to American merchant vessels, shipbuilders and operators were again encouraged to renew their calling with the result that the famous American clipper ships, trading between Europe, South America, Africa, Australia, and the United States, became renowned throughout the world. They were the largest of their kind and by far the swiftest. They carried the products of this country to every clime and returned to our shores with cargoes of silks, tea, and spices from China, coffee from Brazil, and the varied products of Europe.

The days of the American clipper ship that carried the flag and the products of this country to all parts of the world are gone. The men and women who read the story of the development of our merchant marine up to 1850 will be amazed at the fact that since the Civil War we have been practically unable to compete with the nations of Europe, particularly Great Britain. Although we built the first iron hull in this country, the decline of our shipping dates from the building of iron and steel ships and the introduction of steam power.

AMERICA TURNS FROM SHIPPING.

In the early days the United States ranged along the Atlantic seaboard; our forests grew down to the water's edge; a few hundred miles inland the country was occupied by uncivilized tribes, wild animals, and impassable forests, but as habitation trended westward, the discovery of coal, iron and copper, the advancement of commerce on the Great Lakes, the development of our wide agricultural areas, the introduction of steam and the building of railroads turned the minds of the men interested in the development of America from the sea to the opening up of the land west of the Alleghenies and later to the country beyond the Mississippi, which they soon found to be more profitable than the building or operating of shipping, and the men who had formerly followed the sea gave their attention to more lucrative undertakings because in doing so they found opportunities for education, higher wages, and better living conditions.

Great Britain, taking advantage of our neglect, never ceased in her struggle, not only for naval supremacy of the seas, but commercial leadership as well, and to-day we find our country with wealth untold and an area equal to that of all Europe, including the British Isles, without a well-balanced merchant marine, while England, step by step, day by day, month by month, year by year, has extended her commercial activities until now her ships carry her wares equal in value to that of all the maritime nations combined. The gradual westward trend of the world's affairs and the recent war have made it necessary for all nations to come to us to work out their great financial and business problems, but despite our banking and industrial strength the United States has made no real progress toward taking her rightful place in the maritime affairs of the world.

CREATION OF THE SHIPPING BOARD.

As a Member of the House of Representatives and the Senate, extending over a period of 18 years, I have voted many times for legislation dealing with the reestablishment of our merchant marine, and often it seemed as if our hopes in this direction were to be realized, but it was not until 1916 that a law creating the Shipping Board was finally enacted. This act gave the board authority to study and if possible develop an interest in American shipping. They were clothed with little authority, however, as I have indicated, but they did organize and were preparing to function when we became involved in the World War. Instantly Congress, realizing that we were without the necessary equipment to carry our men and supplies overseas, appropriated vast sums of money for the construction of vessels. Many of the Senators present will recall the speech of Balfour, England's representative, in this very Chamber, when he urged us to build ships, more ships, and still more ships. But in other days we had neglected to make provision for the hour of war. Had we spent $25,000,000 each year previous to the war for Government aid, encouraging the building and operation of American ships, we would not have faced the difficulties presented to us when we were called upon to aid in preserving the civilization of the world. In the selection of the first Shipping Board, the President unfortunately appointed men who lacked experience in large affairs. In the main they were without knowledge either in the construction or operation of vessels.

BUILDING OF WAR TONNAGE.

President Wilson's intentions, of course, were of the best, but inexcusable mistakes were made. We spent nearly $3,000,000,000 in this ship construction program.

Previous to the signing of the armistice we had laid the keels—and these figures are very interesting—of approximately 5,000,000 dead-weight tons of steel ships; much of this, however, was only partially completed.

Since the armistice the keels of 5,500,000 dead-weight tons have been laid. If we had stopped the whole program immediately on the ending of the war, we would have undoubtedly saved at least one-half of all the money spent and would be in much better condition concerning our shipping program to-day.

Out of this vast sum nearly $300,000,000 were used for the building of wooden ships. I recall distinctly in the earlier days of the war, at my invitation, Mr. Homer Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., and Mr. Joseph Powell, of the Bethlehem Co., were invited to appear before the Commerce Committee, of which I was a member. These two men, the best-equipped shipbuilders in this country, strongly advised against the building of wooden ships, but, despite their objections, we constructed all told 514 of these vessels. They were recently sold for a little over $10,000,000; the last 200 of them, although costing $500,000 each, were disposed of for less than $20,000 each. In my judgment—and I want it recorded in the RECORD to-day—the men who are responsible for the building of these wooden ships are entitled to the condemnation of the American people. They committed one of the gravest errors of the war. The sum wasted in their building would have provided for sufficient Government aid to establish a merchant marine that would have been a credit and glory to the people of this country.

There are also many steel ships built by the Shipping Board at a cost of more than $225 per ton which are now of very little value. In fact, Mr. President, I predict that at least one-half of the steel ships now the property of the Shipping Board will never be sold for more than $10 per ton, and the Government would be saving money in the end by scrapping these absolutely worthless vessels. They may have had some value, of course, if the war had continued two or three years longer or if the sinking of other craft by the enemy had been great enough to require their use in carrying the Army and supplies overseas, but the character of their construction makes them almost worthless in competing with the larger and more economically operated vessels.

Mr. President, it is costing more to-day for skeleton crews and the up-keep of at least one-half of these steel ships built in war time than we shall ever realize for them.

THE PROBLEM OF DISPOSING OF WAR TONNAGE.

Surely the present Shipping Board inherited a task which seems to those of us who have studied the situation insurmountable. It is a mess indeed, and the Nation can not unravel this tangle unless a measure such as the one under consideration is enacted, and let it be known that the present administration has had no part whatever in bringing about the condition in which the country finds itself to-day in relation to this subject.

The other day—and my colleague will bear me out in this statement, because he has seen that fleet in the Hudson River very often—I had occasion to travel over the New York Central Railroad from New York to Albany, along the Hudson River, and in passing the cove at Stony Point I saw anchored over 100 steel ships, the property of the Shipping Board. They have been there for nearly two years. It would be an object lesson to the people of the Nation to observe them huddled together, smoke emanating occasionally from stacks, and guarded by a few men who are protecting the Government's property. It would not be fitting at this time if I should denounce the whole scheme of the Shipping Board's business since the war. Many men engaged in that work were actuated by the best motives, and while I should never accept an excuse for the building of wooden ships, the steel ships were undoubtedly constructed with the thought that they could be profitably utilized.

The board was wrong, however, in not stopping construction immediately after the armistice was signed. Great Britain stopped building at once and rearranged her plans so that she would no longer have any more of these obsolete and extravagantly operated vessels on hand. In the American shipyards, men who were barbers, tailors, shoemakers, and watchmakers to-day were building ships to-morrow and receiving two or three times the wages they were entitled to, and when the armistice came the Shipping Board was apparently afraid to cease employment abruptly, but it would have been infinitely better to have stopped the building at once. Had we done this we would have had at least 500 ships less and would have saved at least $1,000,000,000 of the people's money.

During the years 1918 and 1919 Shipping Board officials toured the country, wrote magazine and newspaper articles, spoke publicly and talked via radio for the purpose of encouraging the men and women of America to invest their money in shipping projects. I recall many of these speeches and articles. Our citizens were urged to interest themselves in shipping. They were told it was their patriotic duty to organize shipping companies with which to carry the commerce of America. It was explained that the profits were certain and large. Tens of thousands of innocent people with small savings were so beguiled by these statements that they were induced to invest their savings in the stock of some quickly organized or fly-by-night steamship company.

I have in mind one company which succeeded in securing over 40,000 subscribers. This money was used to purchase vessels from the Shipping Board at prices exceeding $200 per ton, and the board received from this concern something like $2,000,000 on account of the purchase price of six vessels. Because this company failed to make good its obligations, the Shipping Board took over the vessels—and I have no complaint to make with regard to that, because they had a mortgage upon the vessels—they took over these vessels on which the people had paid $2,000,000 down, and are now offering to sell these same ships for about one-eighth of the original price, the entire investment of the 40,000 subscribers being wiped out.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator happen to refer in the statement he has just made to the steamship company whose stock was sold almost entirely to American citizens of Polish descent?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; I refer to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I merely make this observation: I think that is one of the saddest experiences that any group of citizens have encountered in connection with any business undertaking.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad that my colleague has pointed out the company to which I refer.

Mr. President, as I indicated a moment ago, the Shipping Board officials toured the country, presented beautiful pictures of the future of American shipping, encouraged the organization of this shipping company and many other like companies, and sold these ships at war prices. Of course, some one should have known that these vessels would never hold up their price, and that the commerce of the world would shrink. Then, after getting 50 per cent of the purchase price, they took away the vessels—and I do not complain of that. The Shipping Board was bound to do that; but the thing I complain of is the attitude of the Shipping Board of that day, which really betrayed these people into losing their money.

Examination of the records will show that very few of the older and experienced shipping men of the country were induced to invest their money in the purchase of vessels built under the abnormal conditions of the war. Some of them are now, however, taking advantage of the low prices of to-day.

I repeat, Mr. President, that about one-half of the steel ships now owned and controlled by the Shipping Board have little or no value. These vessels should be sold at any price to any buyer. My own judgment is that no one will buy them, except perhaps some shipping interests in foreign lands, who may take them over at a nominal figure. I believe a market can be found for the better vessels of the Shipping Board at a fair price. They can be operated for the benefit of the American producer as well as American shipping interests. Government aid must be obtained to insure the sale of the better vessels; and I predict, Mr. President, that unless this or some similar measure is passed, we will dribble away these better vessels one by one, perhaps carry 20 per cent of our foreign trade for the next five or six years in American bottoms, but at the end of 10 or 15 years most of these ships will have disappeared from the sea and we will be back to where we were before the World War.

We can save and maintain what we have; we can assure the continuance of the operation of our merchant fleet, and the higher prices secured for the better vessels because of Government aid will help materially to meet the subsidy paid in the 15-year period.

THE COST OF OPERATING AMERICAN AND FOREIGN VESSELS.

The distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], as I recall his very able speech in opposition to this measure, stated that "the records show that we can operate American vessels as cheaply, or nearly as cheaply, in competition with Great Britain."

I have inquired into the subject and from every hand I have the assurance that foreign ships can to-day be operated at from 25 to 40 per cent less than American ships of like character. Their supplies are cheaper; upkeep is less; higher wages are paid by us and our seamen's act provides for better care of our men. I submit, Mr. President, a statement of the cost of operating several vessels of different flags:

The Swedish steamer Italia, 2,960 tons deadweight, cost $107 per day for total operating costs including insurance.

Danish steamer Jomsborg, 3,069 tons deadweight, cost $80 per day to operate including all costs.

American steamer Commercial Scout, 2,200 tons deadweight, cost $131.26 per day to operate. I am unable to break down the foreign costs, but the Commercial Scout's costs are made up as follows:

Crew's wages	$63.24
Insurance	19.07
Stores	22.00
Repairs	12.00
Subsistence	14.95
Total	131.26

Swedish steamer Graecia, 5,200 tons deadweight, cost of operation $160 per day.

Danish steamer Albistan, 5,500 tons deadweight, $140 per day total cost.

American steamer Honolulu, 8,080 tons deadweight, cost per day $232.25.

American steamer Delco, 5,100 tons deadweight, operating cost $190.26.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there to inquire whether the vessels he has just mentioned are all operating under the same power—that is to say, whether they are all coal burners or all oil burners, or some coal burners and some oil burners? There is a difference in the cost of operation.

Mr. CALDER. These vessels are all coal burners.

Mr. President, I have here some interesting figures, and I should like the attention of the Senator from Florida to them. They are the most striking figures of Government operation of vessels that I have yet come across. This is the line of which Mr. Rossbottom is the president and manager, which includes the George Washington, the America, and others. These are nearly all of them ex-German vessels, and they are being operated in the north Atlantic trade, in competition with the vessels of other countries, by the United States Government Shipping Board under the name "United States Lines." In these figures no allowance is made for depreciation, insurance, or interest on the investment, which would increase the cost on every one of these vessels by at least $30,000 per month. In other words, the loss on the steamship President Polk, which the United States Lines reports as $47,615.66, should be at least $77,615.66 if you include insurance, depreciation, and interest upon investment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What is the period of time?

Mr. CALDER. The period is one trip from New York to Bremen and return. I simply list these vessels.

Steamship President Polk, voyage New York to London, November 9–December 15, 1921. Loss $47,615.66.

Steamship President Van Buren, New York to London, November 2–December 7, 1921. Loss $24,106.54.

Steamship President Adams, same voyage, October 25–November 29, 1921. Loss $34,563.25.

Steamship President Monroe, same voyage, October 19–November 23, 1921. Loss $37,755.46.

Steamship President Garfield, same voyage, October 12–November 16, 1921. Loss $28,062.85.

Steamship President Polk, same voyage, October 5–November 9, 1921. Loss $34,717.82.

Steamship President Van Buren, same voyage, September 28–November 1, 1921. Loss $31,048.56.

Steamship President Adams, same voyage, September 27–October 26, 1921. Loss $18,826.37.

Steamship President Monroe, same voyage, September 18–October 18, 1921. Loss $26,527.53.

Steamship President Garfield, same voyage, September 18–October 12, 1921. Loss $23,382.11.

Steamship President Polk, same voyage, September 1–October 5, 1921. Loss $20,717.

Steamship President Adams, same voyage, August 16–September 20, 1921. Profit $2,744.90.

Steamship President Van Buren, same voyage, August 23–September 27, 1921. Loss $25,202.41.

Steamship President Monroe, same voyage, August 14–September 14, 1921. Loss $11,673.98.

Steamship President Garfield, same voyage, August 2–September 6, 1921. Loss $12,311.16.

Steamship President Roosevelt, on her round voyage between New York and Bremen, Germany, began July 29, ended September 5, showed a revenue of $33,191.49. This vessel received for carrying United States mail $29,955, which amount is also equal to her total net income and is included therein.

Steamship President Harding, same voyage, from August 8 to September 12. Net revenue $19,258.06. Received for carrying United States mail $22,220.

Steamship President Fillmore, same voyage, August 22 to September 26. Net loss $18,371.06, including mail revenue of $5,945.

Steamship America, same voyage, September 2 to October 3. Net revenue $9,187.57, including mail revenue of $14,440.

Steamship President Arthur, same voyage, September 6 to October 9. Net loss $21,959.13.

Steamship Susquehanna, same voyage, August 28 to October 9. Net loss $40,181.46, with mail revenue of $3,545.

Steamship President Roosevelt, same voyage, September 6 to October 9. Net revenue $8,527.77, including $22,260 for mail.

Steamship President Harding, same voyage, September 9 to October 16. Net loss $6,229.18, including mail revenue $16,650.

Steamship George Washington, same voyage, September 18 to October 24. Net revenue $95,920.13, including $22,685 mail.

Steamship President Fillmore, same voyage, September 28 to November 1. Net loss $23,228.36, with mail revenue $5,970.

Steamship America, same voyage, October 4 to November 8. Net revenue of $22,425, with a mail revenue of $16,175.

Steamship President Roosevelt, same voyage, October 12 to November 15. Net loss $14,559.65, with mail revenue of $22,180.

Steamship President Harding, same voyage, October 18 to November 22. Net loss $15,754.22, with mail revenue of $35,300.

Steamship George Washington, same voyage, October 24 to November 27. Net revenue $376.10, with a mail revenue of $18,165.

Steamship President Fillmore, same voyage, November 1 to December 6. Net loss $28,397, with a mail revenue of $12,920.

Steamship America, same voyage, November 8 to December 12. Net revenue $2,528.32, with a mail revenue of $31,435.

Steamship President Arthur, voyage between New York and Dantzig, August 1 to September 6. Net loss $11,178.16.

Steamship President Arthur, same voyage, October 9 to November 18. Net loss $51,729.07.

In all of these figures where I have noted the mail revenue, attention is called to the fact that this was included in computing the net result of the voyage and is not an additional revenue.

Your attention is further invited to the fact that out of all the voyages listed, only one would have shown an actual net revenue had the vessel been compelled to pay insurance, depreciation, and capital charges. That voyage is the one of the George Washington, which showed a net revenue of $95,000; but if we take from that the interest upon the capital investment, insurance, and depreciation there is only a very small net profit upon the whole transaction.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to quote from Mr. Rossbottom's testimony before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate, sitting together in the hearings on this very bill. At page 362 he said:

> In voyage No. 2 of the George Washington my net operating revenue was $237,088; on voyage No. 3 it was $124,000; on voyage No. 4 it was $148,000.

That was the net revenue. Then, I call the Senator's attention to page 363 of these hearings, where there is a tentative statement of revenue and expenses of the United States Lines by services and by vessels for four months ending December 31, 1921, showing a total net operating revenue of $585,259.43. I admit this does not include insurance, depreciation, or repairs made by the United States Shipping Board, but the statement does include all expenses incurred by the United States Lines; also coal, oil, and advertising paid by the United States Shipping Board as well as office rent and wharfage billed by the United States Shipping Board. I submit that the testimony of Mr. Rossbottom does not at all bear out what the Senator has said.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I read the testimony to which the Senator has referred when I was preparing this statement. But the figures I have quoted are from the records of the United States Lines and can be authenticated in the office of the Shipping Board here.

On only one trip of the Roosevelt, and several trips of the George Washington, and on two trips of the America was there an actual net profit to the Government, and, as the Senator has indicated, on no one of those trips did the profit reported include interest upon the investment, insurance, or depreciation. These statements are from the records of the United States Lines, and, with the exception of these four vessels I have noted, on practically every trip made by these Government-operated vessels there was a loss shown.

Wages on ships form about 10 to 15 per cent of the daily cost of operation. However, there can be no thought of further economizing along this line. Seamen are being paid from $45 to $60 a month and firemen from $50 to $65 a month. These wages must be increased if we are to attract competent Americans to the sea. This fact must be obvious when you consider ordinary laborers in New York—that is, foreigners who can scarcely speak a word of English—are receiving $5 a day. The surprising thing is that we get anyone to go to sea at all, and, as a matter of fact, we are now experiencing considerable difficulty in getting full crews.

SHALL GOVERNMENT AID BE GIVEN TO COMPANIES OPERATING AMERICAN AND FOREIGN SHIPS.

I shall be glad to refer for a few moments to section 400 of the pending measure. Under the terms of the bill, as passed by the House, provision is made that no shipping company, owner, or agent for foreign-flag vessels shall receive any benefit for their American ships unless within three years at least 75 per cent of the vessels owned and operated, chartered, or acting as agent for are under the American flag. This provision was changed in the Committee on Commerce to 50 per cent.

The distinguished senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in his speech on the bill in the Senate the other day, criticized the committee for making this change, and stated that it was done in the interests of the International Mercantile Marine Co. It was on my motion that the change was made in the committee. I offered the proposal because I was anxious to induce well-organized shipping companies in the United States, who are operating American and foreign tonnage to gradually dispose of their foreign vessels and engage in business with American ships. I am informed that several companies would be affected by this; I do know that it would particularly affect the International Mercantile Marine Co. This company, 95 per cent of whose stock is owned by Americans, has been engaged for a number of years in trans-Atlantic business. I am informed that to-day approximately 85 per cent of the vessels operated by this company are of foreign registry, including British and Belgian, but in the main British. If the House provision prevails, it is almost certain that no effort will be made by the company to increase its American tonnage sufficiently to comply with the bill, because it is almost physically impossible to do so. If the Senate proposal is agreed to, I am reliably informed that this company will either make an effort to dispose of part of its foreign tonnage and begin the purchase of American vessels or construct in American yards ships for their overseas trade. And, so, this Senate amendment will materially aid American shipping; American vessels will ply across the Atlantic, flying the American flag, carrying American products, and in the end be available to the United States in case of an emergency.

UNDER THE AMERICAN FLAG.

I hold no brief for the International Mercantile Marine, but in all fairness it seems to me just that the country should know that this is the one concern, who, during the past 25 years, has maintained an American express passenger service across the North Atlantic; in fact, until very recently, it has been the only company that has sailed American vessels in the passenger service in that route, and it is also an interesting fact that it was the one concern, who, after the war, came forward and made a substantial offer to purchase and recondition at their own expense the ex-German passenger ships, with the understanding that they would be operated by this company under the American flag in the Atlantic trades.

I recall distinctly the discussion on this question in January, 1919. Senators will remember that Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, president of this company, made a public bid for all of the ex-German ships. One of his bids was to purchase 30 of them for the lump sum of $28,500,000; in another bid he offered to purchase 17 of the 30 mentioned at prices aggregating $21,576,000; and another to purchase 17 for $23,000,000. He agreed to pay 25 per cent in cash upon delivery of the ships, recondition them at the entire expense of his company, which, if we are to judge from the cost of reconditioning the Leviathan, would have meant an additional expense to the International Mercantile Marine of from 50 to 75 millions. In this connection it is interesting to note that this bill contains a provision that the Leviathan, one of the vessels for which Mr. Franklin bid $4,000,000, can not be sold for less than the reconditioning costs.

If the International Mercantile Marine had not been interfered with this ship would have been in the North Atlantic trade to-day flying the American flag; and we would have had $9,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States, the cost of reconditioning the vessel and the $4,000,000 additional which Mr. Franklin bid for her, so that to-day we would have had all of these vessels operating under the American flag which Mr. Franklin offered to purchase, together with the $28,000,000 he offered for them and the great cost of reconditioning the vessels. In other words, we would have had in operation a fleet of American-flag ships and many millions in pocket. I point out these facts to demonstrate to what great advantage it will be to the United States if we but encourage men who know the shipping business, who understand its problems, who have worked at them for a quarter of a century, and who have the courage and resources to go into the business on a large scale.

I have pointed out the tremendous losses we are incurring to-day in our attempt to operate American ships in the North Atlantic business. As I have already noted, in a single round trip of one ship under Government operation we are often compelled to pay out $40,000 in losses.

The Senator from Wisconsin in his statement called attention to the fact that this company, the International Mercantile Marine, has under its control a large amount of British tonnage. This is true. But, it is also a fact and a matter of record that early in 1918, the International Mercantile Marine had practically consummated a deal with a British syndicate to dispose of all of their British flag tonnage when the President of the United States, on November 18, 1918, wrote to Mr. Franklin requesting him not to conclude the transaction. The letter from the President is as follows:

WHITE HOUSE,
November 18, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. FRANKLIN: With regard to the sale to the British Government of the International Mercantile Marine, may I not request that no action be taken in the matter until the views of this Government are fully presented and considered?

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

Later the President, through the Shipping Board, definitely requested that the negotiations with the British syndicate be stopped, and the Government offered to buy this tonnage from the International Mercantile Marine—its offer was accepted and the ships were sold to the United States Government. After numerous delays in carrying out the terms of the sale, and without offering any reason, the Government withdrew from its share of the bargain and left the ships with this company. Instead of their being criticized for ownership of this tonnage, it seems to me that they have been dealt with very unfairly by the Government and should be the subject of sympathy rather than harsh criticism.

Let me read a letter dated April 1, 1919, addressed to Mr. Franklin and signed by R. B. Stevens, vice president of the Shipping Board, stating that the Shipping Board was no longer interested in the purchase of these vessels, and expressing appreciation of the spirit in which the company had worked with the American Government.

APRIL 1, 1919.

Mr. P. A. S. FRANKLIN,
President, International Mercantile Marine Co.,
9 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR MR. FRANKLIN: In answer to your letter of the 25th of March, you are informed that national reasons no longer make it compatible with the interests of the United States to consider further the possible acquisition of the ownership of your British tonnage, and that accordingly you are free, so far as the interests of this Government are concerned, to dispose of such tonnage to the British syndicate or otherwise as your company may consider desirable.

This Government is fully appreciative of the patriotic and considerate spirit in which your company has responded to the previous communication of the Government in connection with this matter.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) R. B. STEVENS, Vice President.

I am sure that an examination of the records will demonstrate that this is the only company in the United States which has attempted to acquire a large fleet of American-flag passenger ships, and particularly, to purchase those owned by the Shipping Board which have been the subject of so much trouble for the last three years. If they had succeeded in purchasing the ex-German tonnage, we would have had for the past year and a half a large passenger fleet which the American people would have been proud of, instead of the makeshift which we are now putting up with.

I feel that this company should be encouraged, and this bill should be drawn to induce them to acquire additional American tonnage rather than to discourage and exclude them. Every additional American ship which is built and operated by that company constituted a gain to the American merchant marine, regardless of what other ships they may have.

The thing the American merchant marine needs to-day, more than anything else, is not ships, but it is the active participation in the business of men who know how to operate ships successfully. We can not do this all in a day; we must build slowly; we need every single man and every organization in the United States to help do this work. There are to-day innumerable American concerns in the United States who have been acting for many years as agents for British and other foreign ships. Why? Because there were no American ships.

These men are experts, and it is this class of men that we should encourage to operate American ships.

I am of the opinion that the 75 per cent clause in the bill should have been omitted entirely and I believe an American company, operating one American ship, even if it operated 100 foreign flag ships, should have Government aid for that one ship, and the Government should be only too glad to induce that company to operate that one American ship.

Under the terms of the bill as it passed the House, they will not do so because it will mean that they must give up their existing foreign connections, which means the giving up of a going business on the gamble that the American ships will succeed. On the other hand, if they would acquire first one American flag ship, operate it and find that with the help of the subsidy they are able to make a profit, this would encourage them to purchase another one, and so on until their operations were largely American. Their income from acting as agents of foreign ships has permitted them to build up a business under the American flag. This is the logical way for the transition to take place and for our merchant marine to grow.

THE NECESSITY OF GOVERNMENT AID.

From every point of view I am convinced that there is no possibility of our maintaining an ocean-going fleet to carry American products overseas without the assistance of the Government. I am a strong believer in a protective tariff. Protection is levied for the purpose of making up the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Our Democratic friends, in the enactment of tariff legislation, provide for the levying of a duty so as to give a limited protection. Our party believes in a higher tariff, and on this same theory we come to the Senate and insist that we are powerless, as a nation, to operate in competition with foreign nations, unless we encourage this business by Government assistance, in exactly the same manner as levying a tax upon imports for the purpose of equalizing the costs of production.

During all of my service in Congress the Democratic party has constantly opposed legislation of this character. They have defeated numerous attempts to establish and maintain an American merchant marine. I know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] sought to encourage American shipping in the tariff law of 1913, and his own administration under President Wilson refused to put into effect the very helpful provision that he inserted in that measure. Here is a counterproposal in this bill for direct Government aid, and we find almost unanimous opposition on the other side, and to my regret a number of Senators on this side who live away from the seaports and whose people are apparently satisfied to ship their products in foreign vessels.

We can not blame men for purchasing things where they can be obtained the cheapest; we can talk of patriotism all we will; we can argue that people should send their products abroad in American ships, but they will not do so whether they live in Topeka or Boston, in Little Rock or New York, if they can ship in foreign vessels for less money. It is human nature and common sense to buy where we can get the lowest prices.

Senators on the other side and some of my Republican brethren lose sight of the ultimate advantage to their country. We have spent three billion dollars, at least two billions of which was thrown away, because of our short-sighted policy of the past 50 years. The interest on that wasted $2,000,000,000 alone would have supplied much more than the needed Government aid for years to come, and to-day we find Senators with lack of vision on this great important American question who will plunge their country into the same condition which confronted us prior to 1917; and when war comes again, as it will some day, if we fail to give Government aid to encourage the maintenance of our merchant marine, we may not have Great Britain to carry our men overseas the next time. She may be on the other side and we will be helpless. Mr. President, I feel very strongly on this subject from the standpoint of the future needs of my country.

I live in the great seaport of the nation. I have stood on the shore driveway in my native Brooklyn, overlooking the Narrows, through which pass majestically in and out of the harbor the great commercial ships of the world. In other days I observed the wonderful development of German commerce. I have seen Great Britain vying with Germany, struggling against the efforts of this Central European power to surpass Great Britain in character, size, and speed of her merchant ships. France, Italy, and even little Norway in the days before the war excelled America, and I then find Senators here who have had no intimate knowledge of these things, who have never seen them, and who have no contact touch with these conditions fighting against the best interests of their country. The opportunity is here and I am wondering whether or not we will permit it to pass. Shall we have a smaller merchant fleet than Norway or shall we equal the greatest in the world?

THE VALUE OF A MERCHANT MARINE AS A NAVAL AUXILIARY.

We have been discussing of late the question of naval armament. As I recall it, some reference was made the other day to the conference of last winter, when we arranged with Great Britain and Japan a 5–5–3 naval policy, when Great Britain for the first time in her history agreed that another country should have a navy as large as hers. I have always felt that she was confident that the chances of war with the United States were remote indeed, and I, too, believe we are less likely to quarrel with her than with any other nation. She is our neighbor on the north; our race largely springs from the Anglo-Saxon; we speak the same language; our first settlers came from the British Isles; but when Great Britain made this agreement at the recent conference she had something back of it which the American public did not know about, but we know now that it was her great second line of defense. I took the trouble recently to make inquiry about the number of steel ships over 10,000 tons operating in American, British, and Japanese commerce to-day. It is as follows:

Great Britain has ships of—
27 knots	1
26 knots	1
24 knots	1
23 knots	2
21 knots	2
20 knots	1
19 knots	1
18 knots	22
17 knots	40
16 knots	47
15 knots	76
Total	194
United States has ships of—
25 knots	1
23 knots	1
22 knots	2
19 knots	1
18 knots	2
17 knots	19
16 knots	9
15 knots	15
Total	50
Japan has ships of—
19 knots	1
17 knots	5
16 knots	2
15 knots	15
Total	23

Great Britain to-day possesses 194 steel seagoing merchant ships whose speed exceeds 15 knots per hour; United States possesses 50 of the same type, while Japan has 23. In making this summary, I have excluded vessels 25 years of age and over. These figures indicate that Great Britain has four times as many vessels of this character as the United States, and if, in a sea fight, we should lose all of our Navy and Great Britain should lose all of hers, she would still have this second line of defense, which, properly armed, could ravish the seas and drive from the ocean every vessel possessed by the nation with whom she was at war. Surely as an aid to the Government in case of an emergency the expenditure of $30,000,000 a year would be an investment entirely justified by the circumstances. This $30,000,000 would not even pay for the building of one modern battleship, while if expended as a subsidy we would have a tonnage valuable in war, constantly earning its way, and carrying our products in times of peace.

THE VALUE OF A MERCHANT MARINE TO PRODUCERS.

The upbuilding of a merchant marine has been advocated by the Republican Party since its organization. While the Democrats have talked of it in their platforms, they have done nothing to materially aid it. We hear constant reference to the shipping trust. There is no shipping trust, because to-day there is no large investment in American shipping, except in cases like the Standard Oil, the United States Steel Corporation, and the United Fruit Co., who utilize their vessels entirely for carrying their own products. In the case of the Standard Oil Co. there is no shipping company equipped to handle their business. This company is thereby enabled to build good ships, pay their men good wages, and carry their own products at a profit. The same is true of the Steel Corporation and the United Fruit Co., and under the proposed bill the shipping companies carrying their own products exclusively are not permitted to receive a subsidy from the Government. I am thinking of the general advantage to the Nation, to the farmers of Kansas and Iowa, the cotton growers of the South, the lumber interests of the Northwest, and the manufacturers of the East.

We have just passed a protective tariff law which gives the American producer a better opportunity in his own market. The passage of that bill will not seriously affect our foreign trade. Under it, the American worker will be earning better wages; he will be steadily employed; he will be able to buy more of our own goods; and he will buy more of the things that come from abroad, such as tea, coffee, sugar, and other commodities not produced here. While America is busy and her workers employed at good wages our imports increase. Statistics prove that our foreign trade has always increased when we were operating under a protective tariff. This trade has always been good when Americans were busy and prosperous.

Last year the Shipping Board sent one of its officials to Buenos Aires to take charge of its office there and attempt to develop the Shipping Board's business. When this official arrived he found that our representative in that country was a gentleman of German extraction, who, although acting for us, had little or no interest in the development of our business. Our representative was in constant difficulty from the moment he arrived, in an effort to present to the people of the Argentine the advantages of trading with this country. Buenos Aires and Argentine business firms are organized for British and German trade, and we can not hope to achieve any great business standing there without American agencies or without American ships going to and from their ports to our own.

South America has been thinking for years in terms of German and British business, largely because Great Britain and Germany have operated vessels directly from South American ports to Europe. Until recently when the Shipping Board established a direct line of steamers from New York to leading South American ports, it was the practice of South Americans intending to come to the United States to reach our shores via Europe, very few coming direct to America. They did this because the European vessels were better and conditions of sailing more favorable and when they arrived in London, Paris, Berlin, or Barcelona, they naturally traded there. If this bill fails to pass how long does any Senator believe we will continue the operation of the Shipping Board Line to South America? I do not know what it is costing the Government to operate this line, but I venture to state that it is taking several million dollars out of the Treasury annually. Now if this bill passed it will encourage some shipping company to purchase these ships, and the subsidy will be much less than it costs the Government to operate the line to-day. Shipping Board vessels are being operated by private concerns at a direct loss to the Government at almost every point to an extent that almost warrants their ceasing operations.

I can not understand how Senators bring themselves to believe that the subsidy is a raid upon the Treasury. I am not speaking to-day as a Senator from New York. I am trying to look at the subject with the viewpoint of the entire country. As I stated before, New York City is the center of activity of the civilized world and we are the great market place of America. New York belongs to the Nation. There is no city in all the world which belongs so completely to the entire country as does New York, with its Wall Street, its Fifth Avenue, its wonderful Hudson River front, its tremendous industries, its great shipping interests, its imports and exports. These are all yours. Through our gates passes the trade of the world.

I repeat, our exports are yours; you send them to us to ship abroad for you. Our imports are yours. You complain at times of the great deposits in our banks, but the small bankers all over the country send these deposits to us because of the interest we are able to pay and the fact that we take care of them when they need help. Your farmers send their products to us because they believe ours is the best market; your manufacturers ship their goods to us because we are able to dispose of them. These great tasks which confront us every day convince us that it is to your best interest, as much as for our own, to pass this bill. We are confident the enactment of this measure will tend immeasurably to help every State in the Union, every single city, town, village, and farm.

Government aid would help shipbuilding and all its allied industries; would give employment to tens of thousands of men. The construction of a ship calls upon every State in the country. We must have steel from Minnesota, copper from the Rocky Mountain States, lumber from the South and the great Northwest, coal with which to operate the vessel, if she is a coal burner, from Pennsylvania or West Virginia, and oil from Oklahoma or Texas. The men who build the ships must be clothed; they must be fed; they must be housed, and the food, housing material, and clothing come from every little hamlet and farm in this broad land. Of what interest is it to the American farmer or worker or miner if these ships are built in England or Germany; if they are operated by English, German, Scandinavian or Japanese crews? There are so many elements from every standpoint that enter into this whole subject that the small amount of Government aid contributed to build and operate these vessels is insignificant when one comes to consider the great advantages that will flow to all of our people when built and operated by Americans.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present a resolution in the nature of a petition adopted by the Brightwood Parent-Teachers' Association of the District of Columbia asking for more school buildings and better school facilities. For the reason that the resolution is typical of other resolutions which during the last year I, as chairman of the subcommittee on education of the Senate District Committee, have received from more than 100 civic associations, I ask that the resolution may be printed as a part of the few remarks I desire to make on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Without objection, the petition will be received and printed as a part of the Senator's remarks.

The petition is as follows:

Resolutions of Brightwood Parent-Teachers' Association.

Whereas the educational facilities for the children of the District of Columbia are decidedly inadequate to meet existing needs, in that there are insufficient school buildings or playgrounds to accommodate the present enrollment; and

Whereas salaries are too low to encourage properly qualified persons to enter the teaching profession or to secure and hold the most capable teachers in the schools of this District: Therefore be it

Resolved, (1) That the Brightwood Parent-Teachers' Association urge upon Congress the necessity of appropriating sufficient money for the construction of new buildings and extensions to provide a seat for every child of school age in the District of Columbia for full time throughout the school year, also for the purchase of sites at once for the location of new schools which clearly will be needed within the next few years.

(2) That we indorse the very reasonable estimates submitted by the Board of Education for the fiscal year 1924 and recommend the restoration of the items stricken from the estimates as finally submitted to Congress.

(3) That we call upon Congress to give careful consideration to the present and future needs for school facilities in the District of Columbia with a view to abandoning unsuitable buildings and to providing suitable and sufficient schoolrooms and playgrounds for the proper education of our children in this District.

(4) That we whole-heartedly indorse the pending teachers' salary and school reorganisation bill, known as S. 3136 and H. R. 10390, which has recently passed the Senate; also the compulsory attendance and school census bill, known as S. 2040 and H. R. 72; and the free textbooks and educational supplies bill, known as S. 2860 and H. R. 9543.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee on education of the Senate District Committee, I have had an opportunity in the last year to acquaint myself with conditions in this city. I do not hesitate to say that the school situation here is a disgrace to the National Capital. One-third of the 154 school buildings in Washington are ramshackle testimony to the inefficiency of the Congress that designates the kind of public schools for the city. A large proportion of these buildings are so poorly adapted for school purposes that it is a travesty upon childhood to continue them in use. Congress has repeatedly appointed commissions to make educational surveys in the District of Columbia, and as often has failed to act upon their recommendations. In 1908, for instance, a commission recommended that 10 buildings be abandoned. But apparently with the same viewpoint as it has at present, Congress proceeded assiduously to forget the recommendations and these 10 buildings are still in use. That was 14 years ago, and meanwhile the number of buildings which should be abandoned has increased to at least twice that number.

The mention of playgrounds to the average parent in Washington provokes a smile. Playgrounds are so few and so small that it is a misuse of the word to call them such. Virtually all of the schools are without electric lights, and only 13 out of the entire system have assembly halls. Many of the buildings have been in use for nearly half a century, yet even with this dilapidated equipment it is necessary to use 78 portable schools. Over 3,000 children right here in the Capital of the Nation are receiving their education in these portable schools, buildings which are inferior even to the schools found in the mountainous sections and the thinly settled States of the West.

Twenty-seven rented buildings, including the back room of a colored church and several second-story apartments, are being used for school purposes. At the end of last fiscal year there were approximately 490 oversize classes in the school system. Doctor Ballou, superintendent of schools, has informed me that in spite of the new classrooms which have been opened, this number has grown larger since the opening of school this fall, another instance of shortsightedness on the part of Congress. Our subcommittee on schools finds in Washington to-day more than 7,000 children receiving three and a half hours of instruction instead of the average five hours that is provided in all adequately financed school systems. Children are forced to be at school at half past 8 in the mornings and are sent home at 12 o'clock in order to make room for new groups which come at 1 o'clock. This latter group, even with three and a half hours' instruction, does not get out until 4.30, or just in time to get home before dark. I am told by the school officials that under present conditions the 70,000 school children are receiving only 60 per cent of a normal public-school education.

Mr. President, these statistics mean nothing unless the Members of Congress are sufficiently interested to visualize the conditions which they describe. But whether or not the Senate is interested, these are testimonials of disgrace; and the Members of Congress can not escape the disgrace.

In the high schools, conditions are even worse. There are 4,000 more students in the high schools than the buildings can adequately accommodate. This city has one of the highest percentages in the country for high-school attendance. It is an admirable tribute to the quality of teaching. But instead of encouraging this spirit Congress has withheld the material support which it justly deserves.

Mr. President, Congress has failed miserably in supplying even the physical basis for a healthy and vigorous educational system. And when I say Congress, I do not mean to shift the responsibility to an abstraction; I mean the Members of this body and of the House of Representatives. Congress has been generous only with expressions of good intentions. We hear much talk of "a model school system for the Capital of the Nation." It is a beautiful phrase. It is a phrase which the Members of Congress are accustomed to use in placating the parents of Washington who come to us asking for better schools for their children.

This situation is not new to the Members of the Congress. I am sure that they have seen the articles which appear daily in every Washington newspaper, setting forth the run-down conditions of the schools, but apparently we are not awake to the acuteness of the problem. Certainly the meager legislative results justify the belief that Congress has lost interest in this great city which is forced to depend upon us for its government. The citizens of the National Capital are too often justified in feeling that Congress has adopted the blind and arbitrary policy of granting only those things which they are forced to grant, and even then of cutting appropriations to a degree that renders effective carrying out of school legislation impossible. The inadequate school buildings and the prevailing salary schedule is a splendid example of what I mean.

Mr. President, the responsibility for the government of the District of Columbia is on Congress. As long as that is true it is the duty of the Members of Congress to acquaint themselves with the needs of this city and to meet them in an intelligent way. Certainly there can be no good reason for the Members failing to keep themselves informed at least as to the progress of education, the most important of the activities over which Congress has control.

But the disgraceful condition of the schools of Washington does not show, and has not shown for a decade, evidence of such attention by Congress. I am glad to say there is no evidence of inefficiency on the part of those charged directly with school administration, but through the failure of Congress to grasp a large perspective for the educational system, and to use common judgment in providing for normal expansion, we find here a broken vehicle for the training of 70,000 children. It is a condition that Congress can not defend from any standpoint.

Recently this branch of Congress passed the two bills known as the teachers' salary bill and the compulsory education bill. To those members of the Senate who have familiarized themselves with the scale of pay now in force for teachers in Washington schools the need for an increase does not have to be explained. It is recognized that the very life of the school system depends upon it. The importance of the compulsory education bill must be apparent to the most elemental student of the public educational system.

The passage of these two bills is the first step toward placing the schools of Washington on a plane with the public schools of other American cities, but under no circumstances should the members of this body consider that they have disposed of the District of Columbia school problem by the approval of these two important pieces of legislation. It is not untimely to warn the Senate against such a view. Because, in my opinion, the present decrepit condition of the Washington educational system is due largely to the habit of Congress lapsing into a state of inaction as far as Washington is concerned.

The needs of this school system can not be met by piecemeal legislation. The Senate can not discharge its duty by the intermittent passage of bills. Nothing less than a constructive program of school legislation, taking into consideration the normal growth of the city and making up for the past neglect of Congress, can meet the need in a practical way. These bills we have passed are part of a program our committee believes is essential to a proper upbuilding of the public-school system in Washington. And it is my opinion that the Senate and House of Representatives must act upon this program in full or assume complete responsibility for the breakdown of public education in Washington.

Mr. President, let me make one point plain. If the Members of Congress are to talk school improvement, they have got to talk money. And unless they are willing to talk money their fine phrases are empty utterances. Instead of saying "a model school system for Washington," are we ready to vote for a $10,000,000 school appropriation? If not, then it seems to me we have little right to indulge in school talk which relates to the District of Columbia. Efficient administration can carry the educational system so far, but it can not supply the foundation for development. And it must be realized that it will take a larger amount than has ever been voted before. I think the amount recommended by the Budget commissioner is entirely too low.

If this brings us in conflict with the policy of reducing expenditures, I would remind you that to save money by sacrificing young minds is not economy. I am aware that it is the boast of many of the Members of Congress that they keep a watchful eye on expenditures. And in so far as it is compatible with good sense I am in hearty sympathy with the curtailing of appropriations. But to cut the school budget of the National Capital at this critical time, to crowd 70,000 children into buildings meant for 50,000, and then to provide only 60 per cent of an average public-school education, is a very great blunder. Do not overlook the fact, either, that the taxpayers here pay 60 per cent of the cost of their schools and are now pleading for the right to spend more of their own money for educational purposes.

Mr. President, Congress is not in any sense meeting its obligation to the city of Washington. The District of Columbia is, perhaps, the most arbitrarily governed area in the United States. The indifference and the lack of intelligent consideration which the people of the District of Columbia have to meet in their governing body is almost sufficient cause for them to gather in force and march on Congress. The citizens of Washington have a right to feel that they are ruled by a group of men unrepresentative of the people of this District and unresponsive to its needs. It has suffered in all departments from inattention and oversight, but with reference particularly to education. Congress will always have embarrassing explanations to make regarding its efficiency as long as the schools of the District of Columbia lag behind the other cities of the country. Because of its relation to the Nation, the country looks to the National Capital to set a standard, which means, of course, that Congress shall establish that standard. Retrenchment of expenditures is desirable, but it must not be done at the expense of education. I am sure that I am in accord with all thinking persons when I say that statesmanship is not evidenced by the paring of educational budgets. I believe that the people of this country have enough interest in their capital to expect Congress to give it an educational system commensurate with its importance to the Nation.

PUEBLO INDIAN LANDS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have before me a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to Senate bill 3855. That bill, it will be recalled, passed the Senate at the last session and upon my motion was recalled from the House at the present session. It is known as the Pueblo Indian bill. It is now before the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. The Secretary of the Interior in his letter discusses the subject very fully, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, and also that my very brief reply may likewise be printed in the RECORD and so referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 13, 1922.

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BORAH: Some time since, upon your motion, a resolution was adopted withdrawing from the House consideration of S. 3855, entitled "A bill to ascertain and settle land claims of persons not Indian within Pueblo Indian land, land grants, and reservations in the State of New Mexico." I understand that this bill was rereferred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys for the United States Senate.

This action having been taken, I presume that consideration of the bill will not be possible at the present short session of the Congress of the United States.

In the meantime, however, I assume that your action in this matter was caused by the clamor which has been heard in various quarters and publications, and charges which have been made in various papers and periodicals, and through letters and the representations to individual Congressmen and Senators.

The general tenor of these newspaper articles, representations, and letters, etc., has been to the effect that a "raid" was being made upon the lands of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, and that the rights of these Indians were not being properly guarded or attempted to be protected by the sworn officers of the administrative branch of the Government, whose duty under the laws passed by the Congress of the United States is to properly guard and protect such Indian rights.

I realize fully that the opinion is held in many quarters that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a Member of Congress for 14 years, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate of the United States, is not the proper person to guard and protect the rights of the Indians of the United States, but that such protection and guardianship rests in the hands of volunteer associations or individuals, many of them among the best people in the United States.

I am further aware of the fact that among some people the Secretary of the Interior is regarded as a ruthless despoiler, at least in intention, of the Indians, ready at all times to acquiesce in the effort of anyone to deprive them of their civil, religious, and property rights and property.

I am further aware of the fact that in many instances the Congress of the United States, or at least Members of the Congress and Senate, are influenced by propaganda or statements made by parties who have no official responsibility in the premises to take action without consultation with the departments and the heads of the departments and bureaus charged under the laws with exactly such official responsibility. There is no measure of resentment in making the foregoing statement, but it is made as a matter of simple, well-known fact.

As it was upon your motion that the action recited with reference to this bill was taken, I am addressing this letter to you with the request that you at least read it, and that if you see no reason why you should decline the request you may have it printed in the RECORD, and, if it is worthy of such treatment, that it be made a public document.

Since I have been Secretary of the Interior I have made no speeches to the public, dictated no statements for the newspapers, and engaged in no propaganda of any kind or character, even in the attempt to answer charges made against myself or my department, which charges have sometimes been of a most villainous character; as, for example, in the so-called discussion of the present bill by various volunteer representatives of the Indians and through them presumably printed and commented upon by newspapers and periodicals which the public naturally have a right to presume would investigate charges before indorsing them. My course has been to report to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, or to the President of the United States, with reference to the actions of my department, treating them as officials of the United States Government, among whom I am one. This I have conceived to be my duty, and I am following that course in the present instance, and this is my justification for imposing upon you.

May I be permitted first to give a rough outline of the history of the pueblos of New Mexico and of their property rights and of the conditions existing there under Spanish and Mexican administration, and of the conditions existing since American occupation and at the present time. The settlements occupied by these particular Indians are known as the pueblos and are as follows: Zuñi, Ácoma, Laguna, Isleta, Sandia, Santa Ana, Cia, Cochiti, San Felipe, Santo Domingo, Jémez, San Ildefonso, Pojoaque, Nambé, Santa Clara, Taos, and San Juan, in connection with which may be mentioned Moqui or Hopi villages of Arizona.

These people are of sedentary habits and not of the nomadic tribes of Indians, and they were found by Coronado and the first Spanish explorers in 1541 and the following years, many of them residing in the present villages and cultivating the same lands which they are now cultivating and on which they are residing at the present time. The rights of these Indians to certain lands were recognized by the Spanish conquerors from early days, and provision was made under the decrees of the Cortes and the Government of the viceroys and other Crown representatives for the protection of these Indians and the recognition of their land holdings.

Under the strict terms of the Spanish, and later of the Mexican, laws the holdings so recognized and provided to be confirmed to these Indians were to each community 1 league square. At the same time the method adopted in granting and confirming rights to other settlers, particularly the Spaniards or Mexicans, was to compute 4 leagues square, measuring 1 league in each direction from the center of the village or from the door of the church.

In New Mexico the first settlements of the Spaniards were adjacent to or within the existing settlements of the Indians in many instances; and the civil government in the early days being in the hands of the representatives of the church, missions were immediately established among these Indians and churches built within the settlements.

Later the policy was pursued of measuring 1 league in each direction from this church, thus making the Indian communal allotments of equal size with those of the Mexican communities—that is to say, 4 leagues instead of 1 league.

The Spaniards were driven out of New Mexico by an uprising of all of the Indians in about the year 1680, and many of them took refuge at the Indian pueblos below El Paso, Tex., from which points later the expeditions for the reconquest and settlement of New Mexico proceeded.

Titles are said to have been issued by some Spanish authority while these Spaniards were at the Texas pueblo settlements granting to them in writing the titles to the 4 leagues of land, which under the conditions referred to had theretofore been set aside to each community.

These evidences of title were incidentally or in some direct proceedings examined by the officials of the Court of Private Land Claims created by the Congress of the United States in 1891, and the expert officials of that court were of the opinion that these so-called Spanish muniments of title were forgeries. This matter is not material to any legal issue, however, as the Congress of the United States in 1858 made a grant to each of these pueblos by metes and bounds, granting the same amount of land—that is to say, 4 leagues to each pueblo—application for patent of which had been made by the Congress. Later, under the direction of the Congress, following surveys made by the surveyor general of New Mexico, patents were issued to these communities for the amount of land so granted. In these patents, as in the law, however, was inserted the following clause:

* * * "Do give and grant to the said pueblo of ———, in the county of ——— aforesaid, and to the successors and assigns of the said pueblo of ——— the tract of land above described as embraced in said survey, but with the stipulation, as expressed in the said act of Congress 'that this confirmation shall only be construed as a relinquishment of all title and claim of the United States to any of said lands, and shall not affect any adverse valid rights, should such exist.'"

The titles to these lands were not generally presented for adjudication to the Court of Private Land Claims above mentioned, but in one instance claims were made by the Pueblos for adjacent lands, or other lands claimed by them by purchase from individuals or through grantees, and in at least two of such claims the court considered the same and found that the Indians were entitled to certain lands which were later patented to them even as late as 1909. For example, one of the pueblos had purchased of a grantee of the Spanish administration 40,000 or more acres of land, and the pueblo itself presented a claim for adjudication to the Court of Private Land Claims embodying this purchase and had title confirmed to it and received patent for this land. Questions of disputed boundary have arisen, particularly since American occupation, between the Indians of the pueblos and adjacent landholders and claimants to the public lands under the public-land laws of the United States. In one instance recently a homesteader had a patent issued to him for approximately 160 acres of land and the patent was withdrawn after being forwarded to the local land office for delivery because of the conflict of approximately 7 acres embraced in the entry with a land-grant area. The applicant represented that he was willing to accept the patent with the area in conflict excluded, and the patent itself was issued to him after such action was taken through myself as the Secretary of the Interior.

In the Spanish days conflicts were constantly arising between Spaniards and others claiming lands by one title or another within the exterior limits generally recognized as the legal limits of the pueblo. Under the Spanish administration two classes of officers were appointed to protect the Indians against the rapacity of the Spaniards and others, and I may say that the Spanish archives of New Mexico are full of instances displaying the good faith of the Spanish officials with relation to such Indian matters.

One of the more serious conflicts which was not finally and definitely settled at that time, more than 150 to 175 years ago, has in one form or another practically continued to this day. In the pueblo of Taos, which was a frontier pueblo subject to constant attack from the marauding savage Comanches, Apaches, Utes, and other Indians, the Indians themselves invited the adjacent Spanish settlers to come within the boundaries of their grant and occupy certain designated areas and assist them in repelling the attacks of such Indians, particularly the Comanches. Several years thereafter a dispute arose, the Indians insisting that the Spaniards should be ejected simply because of the fact that technically titles for the lands occupied had not been made to the Spaniards and that it was Indian ground. These difficulties were patched up by agreements from time to time, but no final determination as to the rights was made. No such determination has been definitely made as to these and other disputed titles since the years mentioned, and disputed questions still arise. The home of Kit Carson for the greater portion of his life was at Taos, and the first governor appointed before the creation of the Territory, named by General Kearny—that is to say, Governor Bent—and his family were residents of Taos.

An examination of the documents relating to the titles of these pueblos will display very many curious and interesting facts. For example, Mexicans and Spaniards intermarrying with Indians, their children claimed in many instances all the rights of Indians, including property rights. In at least one interesting case, as shown by the archives, the Indians of one little village set aside a portion of their lands for the occupancy of such children, who are designated officially as "coyotes," and in some titles made by the tribe later the instrument specifies that the land described is situated within the place occupied by the "coyotes."

I am thus hurriedly attempting to give you the background of the situation.

These Indians, under the Mexican law, were regarded and declared to be citizens. Of course, the fact that they had a political status as citizens did not necessarily give them authority or power over other properties or real estate except under the laws or customs adopted and followed.

Distinct provision was made in the laws of Spain for the alienation of Indian lands through the approval of the "protector" or other official in charge of the Indians. In some instances the custom recognized the right of the Indians to purchase additional lands and hold same, while no law specifically provided for such purchase nor how such purchased lands might thereafter be disposed of, nor whether land so purchased was subject to any restrictions whatsoever as to disposition. I have before me a report containing, among other things, a historical review of the Spanish and Mexican laws and the situation of these Indians with relation thereto, their status under the law, etc., which was prepared by the Hon. Ralph E. Twitchell, assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, appointed for the purpose of making such historical research and making reports to the Department of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs concerning any remedial measures necessary. This report was in the hands of the Senate committee when the bill in question passed the Senate, and if any Senator will give time to the perusal of it he may find it interesting, and in event he regards the subject as of importance, may find it also instructive. I shall refer to this report again, and in this connection will add that Mr. Twitchell was appointed to do this work because of the fact that he is a thorough Spanish scholar, has given years to the examination of the Spanish archives of New Mexico, has made translations of the original documents, has written a history of New Mexico in three volumes, and has prepared and published two volumes, subjecting, indexing, and analysing these old Spanish and Mexican archives. Colonel Twitchell has been a resident of New Mexico for approximately 40 years, is to my personal knowledge one of the prominent lawyers of that State, and in my judgment was best qualified to handle this particular subject. He is also representing the Government of the United States in litigation now pending against settlers on and claimants to some of these Indian lands in good faith, and with exceeding ability is attempting to rectify some of the errors, both of omission and commission, of United States special or general attorneys with reference to Indian matters.

AMERICAN OCCUPATION.

The first civil Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, after the same was created, was James S. Calhoun, who, during the military occupancy and prior to the creation of the Territory, was Indian agent for all of the Indians in what was known as New Mexico at that time, and his jurisdiction extended over what is now known as New Mexico, Arizona, parts of Colorado, etc. He was appointed by President Taylor and proceeded immediately to New Mexico. His official correspondence with the Indian Office under Secretary of the Interior Luke Lea and others is on file, of course, in our archives, but was collected and printed three or four years since under the title of "The official correspondence of James S. Calhoun while Indian agent at Santa Fe and superintendent of Indian affairs in New Mexico."

Accompanying this document will be found the first maps of portions of New Mexico made after American occupancy. Of course, while Calhoun had jurisdiction over all the Indians within his territory he was in more close touch at all times with the Pueblos, whose matters we are now considering.

Among other things well known to residents of New Mexico and others who have given consideration to pueblo questions, Mr. Calhoun first calls public attention to the fact that these pueblos, the names of which have heretofore been recited, are inhabited by people many of whom do not speak the same language. Among other things, in a report under date of October 1, 1849, he says that of the 20 pueblos the languages of at least 10 of them are said to be entirely different and that they communicate with each other through the instrumentality of Mexican interpreters or pantimimic action. I may state to you that while a Member of the United States Senate several years since I myself presented to the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs three pueblo "governors" who could not communicate the one with the other in Indian language, but must communicate through the common medium of the Spanish, and that much surprise was expressed by the commissioner upon being informed that these Indians did not speak a common language, and that rules and regulations for their government applicable to one could not be well applied to another where any attempt was made to give jurisdiction to the Indians of one pueblo over any Indians of another. All through the correspondence of Mr. Calhoun will be found instances upon the settlement of the disputed questions of titles and of boundaries of these Indian lands and conflicts between claimants of property rights within the exterior limits of recognized pueblo grants. Insistence upon legislation and conferring of jurisdiction upon some one tribunal to try all such cases is repeatedly made in such correspondence. Detailed information concerning specific conflicts is furnished from time to time. Among other things, a treaty was drawn up by Mr. Calhoun and signed by the head men of the majority of these pueblos with reference to the settlement of titles through some tribunal to be created by the United States. A letter was written under date January 25, 1850, to the Indians of Taos concerning this question. Various suits brought in the territorial courts or in the circuit courts are referred to in the same concerning Indian rights or property, and the difficulties in the matter of jurisdiction and other matters are referred to and pointed out.

These Indians having been recognized as citizens, their status as voters became a subject of interest in the election of 1850.

Apparently the agent, Mr. Calhoun, advised the Indians to take no part in the election, while the military governor, Colonel Monroe, issued a proclamation stating that they were entitled to vote for all Territorial officials and for State officials, United States Senators, etc., as the people of the Territory were, under the invitation of President Taylor, at that time attempting to form a State government and were electing two United States Senators and a Congressman. These Indians took part in the election for the Delegate to Congress, Mr. Smith, who served in the Congress of the United States. From time to time, running back over a known period of approximately 250 years, parties have claimed lands within the Indian pueblos by virtue of supposed titles or sales to them by individual Indians and by the Indians as a tribe. A great many American citizens, Mexican by descent, and others are living within the exterior limits of these pueblos and claiming title not only by occupancy but claiming to be able to establish the fact that their titles originated through regularly executed conveyances from the Indians to their predecessors in interest. In many cases possession by such claimants may be traced back more than 200 years. There are various decisions of the Territorial, State, and United States courts concerning the status of these Indians and diverse opinions with reference to the rights of the Indians to dispose of their properties to other parties.

The Indian can not understand the difference between a State court and a United States court, and to him an officer of the Government is an officer of the Government, whether his office is held under a State or a National commission. Conflicts between the courts yet continue. The situation from time to time has taken on a very serious caste, particularly within the last few years, since Americans have been going into the Territory, and now State, of New Mexico, and many of such Americans have been purchasing lands claimed to be held in private ownership by American citizens holding possession of such claims possibly, as I have stated, through generations of such occupancy. In 1850, as shown in the collection of the Calhoun correspondence, while Delegate Smith was in Washington, he received and replied to letters from the then Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Brown. In a letter under date March 9, 1850, Delegate Smith refers very feelingly to the Pueblos and to the fact that provision should be made to have judicial settlement of all conflicting title questions. In August, 1851, Mr. Calhoun refers to Hon. Luke Lea in connection with a letter from himself, a report made to Calhoun by Mr. Tulles, who had been authorized to settle some conflicting claims. In this communication Mr. Tulles relates that he has met the agents of different pueblos and has ordered a line recently run between these pueblos by Government surveyor, and that he had also another line, giving certain natural objects as terminating points, and Mr. Tulles closes with the statement that all of the Indians of both pueblos were satisfied, with the exception of the governor of the Lagunas, who was by this decision dispossessed of a few acres cultivated by himself. He also relates that he had examined into the controversy between the Laguna Indians and the Mexicans concerning the north line of Laguna grant and concerning a dispute as to the use of water for the irrigation of lands claimed by the respective parties. I am possibly tedious in calling attention to these matters at such length, but I see no other method by which the present situation can be understood and proper provision made for a definite settlement of these questions which have been pending for more than 300 years.

It will be noted that by the grant to the Indians made by the Congress of the United States in confirmation of their supposed titles from the Spanish Government, which titles were theirs, at least by recognition, the total area within the exterior limits became fixed, but that the Government conveyed no other title than by confirmation of the title to the Indians, and with specific reservation concerning any other titles.

I have hereinbefore stated that the Court of Private Land Claims did not consider itself vested with jurisdiction to pass upon these pueblo claims which were confirmed under the congressional grants. However, in the act creating the Court of Private Land Claims, and providing for the discharge of its duties, general provision was made for the survey and ascertainment of the boundaries of individual claims which might be affected by the decisions of the court.

Later attempts were made to have the Congress of the United States appropriate moneys with which to cause surveys to be made within the Indian pueblos of the claims occupied by individuals other than Indians. About the year 1913 surveys of this character were ordered, and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior were made and detailed reports thereupon filed by the surveyors, maps accompanying the same, etc.

Noted upon these maps and reports is the distinct provision that the surveys and mapping should not be construed in any manner whatsoever as conveying, or attempting to convey, any intimation that the parties whose lands were thus mapped or surveyed and reported upon had any rights of any kind recognized by the department itself, the clear attempt being made to convey the information that the department had no jurisdiction over these specific questions and that it would not recognize the validity of any such claim.

The matter was considered from time to time by the Congress in applications for appropriations, etc., and I may refer you to the hearings of the committee of the House of Representatives, volume 8, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, page 647, et seq., where it is stated by the representative of some of the claimants in answer to a question of the chairman that the surveys referred to were made for the purpose of segregating the American and the Mexican lands which had been possessed for a certain length of time, etc.

These surveys were made through the use of appropriations for Indian allotments and surveys under a ruling by the comptroller, based upon a question propounded by this department.

While the surveys were being made the parties claimant, apparently through some common understanding, made written statements with corroborative affidavits, to the surveyors, showing the character of title which they claimed to have, etc. The principal survey, commenced on November 2, 1915, was made by Francis E. Joy, United States surveyor. The original application and accompanying affidavits were reported, with the maps and notations thereon, as hereinbefore indicated, to this department. Of course, they were recorded as not being in the nature of legal claims demanding decisions, but they were made upon forms furnished by some one else, headed "Small holding proof." These applications, affidavits, reports, etc., indexed, are contained in several volumes in the archives of the General Land Office, and in the volume before me I notice that the first application of applicant is made by the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America by C. R. Garcia, agent. The application is for three small tracts, and it is stated that each was purchased from some other holder who was in possession of same at time of purchase. These documents and files, of course, are at the service of the Congress of the United States should either body or any committee thereof desire to examine the same, together with any other documents or instruments on file in the department relative to these questions.

While these particular claims just referred to have not been properly filed, except as just stated, there are formally filed claims numbering several hundred, possibly made by some of the same individuals, which claims are pending in the General Land Office.

Notwithstanding the fact that the surveyors distinctly informed each individual that the surveys were merely being made for information and for assistance in the matter of suits, etc., and were not intended to convey any intimation of any prospect of the patenting of any titles therethrough, yet the occupants of these lands generally have supposed for years that they were really in the situation of the small land-holding claimants under the act of 1891, and they have been living in expectation of some adjudication of what they think are rights in the premises.

Right here and now, Senator BORAH, it may be as well understood that, notwithstanding all of the clamor of the most excellent ladies and gentlemen who are besieging you and others with their appeals for protection to these Indians, and the denunciation of the officials having in charge Indian lands, there is no new raid by anyone being made or attempted upon any Indian lands known as the pueblo lands in New Mexico. The demand for some final, definite settlement of these disputed questions is insistent from all parties, and it is these demands and the action of the department thereafter taken thereupon, which I shall now shortly refer to.

That these are not new questions of occupations of so-called pueblo areas finds very persuasive proof in a census made by the mission authorities at each of these pueblos in the year 1819, as follows:

Church census (1819) attending mission churches at these pueblos in 1819.

This table shows that these people, Indians and non-Indians, were worshiping at these missions and residing upon or immediately adjacent to the Indian pueblo villages more than 100 years ago.

Prior to the introduction of this bill (S. 3855) of which I am writing you, Senator BURSUM on May 31, 1921, introduced Senate bill 1938, and on July 19, 1921, Senator BURSUM introduced Senate bill 2274.

Senate bill 1938 provides, very shortly, that all persons who for more than 10 years have had actual, continuous, and adverse possession of lands not exceeding 160 acres within the exterior boundaries of any Indian pueblo grant in the State of New Mexico confirmed to such pueblo by act of Congress or by decree of the court of private land claims, or whose ancestors, grantors, or predecessors in interest had such possession are hereby recognized and declared to be the legal owners of the land so possessed and confirmed in the possession thereof and the title thereto. "No action at law or suit in equity shall be commenced or maintained by the United States or by any Indian pueblo to recover the possession of such lands or to quiet title thereto, and this act may be plead in bar of any such action or suit now pending."

There were various suits pending at this particular time, and of course the bill speaks for itself as to its objects, to-wit:

I. To confirm all claims of title held for more than 10 years;

II. To prevent the prosecution of any pending suits affecting same.

Under date of June 27, 1921, I addressed a letter to the Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, dictated and signed by myself personally, calling attention to the provisions of this bill and stating, among other things, that an attorney had been appointed by the Attorney General of the United States to represent the Department of Justice in the matter of Indian litigation, and that instructions had been given this attorney that he should go into all pueblo titles—that is, the original grants, surveys, history, history of individual holdings, disputes concerning water rights—and make a comprehensive report to the department upon which could be based a request for legislation, if same was necessary, in justice to the Indians or the settlers; that it was the purpose of this department to attempt to seek justice for all parties; that "the passage of the act in question would simply forestall a settlement based upon a full and comprehensive report of actual conditions, the legal status, the equitable rights and claims of both the Indians and others claiming rights, and so forth.

It was stated that this action was taken prior to the introduction of these bills, and so forth.

Communications were sent to individual Senators and others at the same time and along the same lines, and the bill in question was not acted upon.

On August 16, 1921, during my absence from Washington, a very similar letter was directed to the Hon. REED SMOOT as a report upon Senate bill 2274, and as a result of the objection of this department this bill was likewise held up.

Later the report made by Colonel Twitchell, and hereinbefore referred to, was received and, as before stated, a copy of it was immediately furnished to the Senate committee having charge of the bill S. 3855.

The history of the latter bill is this:

Mr. A. B. Renehan represents a large number of private claimants; Col. R. E. Twitchell, Assistant Attorney General, represents the Department of Justice in charge of Indian Affairs litigation, etc., in connection with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of the Interior.

Commissioner Burke visited New Mexico and while there visited several pueblos and discussed matters with various Indians. He also had a conference with Messrs. Twitchell and Renehan at Santa Fe, and with other attorneys, concerning this much vexed question.

Colonel Twitchell had the outline of a proposed bill drawn up and Mr. Renehan also had a proposed measure. The two attorneys were requested to come to Washington and did so. A conference was again held here between themselves and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Later a conference was sought with the Secretary of the Interior, and the draft of the bill as it stands was discussed, and, as I understand, one or two suggestions made by the Secretary were included therein before the final draft was made. The bill was then introduced by Senator BURSUM. My impression is that it was not sent to him from the department but that may have been and he most likely was told that it had the general approval of the department. In any event, I wrote a letter, under date of July 31, 1922 to Senator SMOOT, in answer to his official communication, in which I stated that I had given the provisions of the proposed law my attention and that the bill met with my approval. I further stated that the attorneys representing the Indians and the claimants, respectively, had been brought here, and that all parties had agreed to the bill.

I may say to you that the bill was, of course, a compromise; that it was presented with the general approval of the department for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, for the purpose of enabling that body to adopt some legislation tending to bring about a conclusion or finally to put at rest the controversial questions which have agitated the people of New Mexico, as heretofore stated, for more than 300 years.

Now, sir, the particular exigency demanding the passage of some measure had theretofore recently arisen in a threatened armed conflict between certain American citizens claimant and certain Indians on one of these pueblos.

The claimants of these lands are American citizens who exercise the right of suffrage. The Indians themselves are understood to have the right of suffrage but do not exercise the rights.

Ever since 1850 political agitation has ensued in the different counties where these Indian questions are unsettled, at every election.

Under our system of appointing superintendents and shifting them from one place to another, superintendents have been sent in from the Northern States, or other localities, to represent the Government in the matter of these different Indian pueblos. There are several of them located in the State, their jurisdiction being divided into districts.

Due to this near armed conflict various protests were made concerning the action of one of the agents and demands made for his transfer, and equally strong demands made for his retention. These demands came from Americans, from volunteer associations representing the Indians, from claimants to rights within Indian lands, and others.

At this time I wrote a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, after having discussed this particular incident with him, calling his attention to the fact that these disputed Indian questions were being dragged into politics at every election; calling his attention to the fact that American citizens speaking the Spanish language, lived within the exterior limits of these Indian pueblos and had so lived through their ancestors in many instances from time immemorial; calling his attention to the fact that these pueblo Indians did not speak the same language, while practically every one of them speaks Spanish, and that in my judgment great care should be exercised in the selection of agents who would have some little knowledge of the particular pueblos which they must deal with and preferably, at least, some smattering knowledge of Spanish, through which language they could communicate with the non-English speaking Indians of the different pueblos, and that such agent should have instructions with reference to the peculiar political status of and political agitation among these Indians.

Again, let me impress upon you the fact that villages almost entirely inhabited by American citizens are situated within the exterior limits of these pueblos; that the pueblos themselves pay no taxes and that all taxable values are assessed against the property of Americans (generally Spanish-speaking Americans) who conduct mercantile and other businesses of the communities. This is peculiarly the case with reference to the settlement of Española and the settlement of Taos.

Now, what does Congress propose to do about it?

We have, in good faith, attempted to furnish them with the foundation for legislation and with information upon which they can base some definite conclusion.

It is held by Mr. Twitchell that while Pueblo Indian tribes, as a tribe, had legal authority under the Spanish and Mexican law to dispose of lands that the individual Indian could not make good title to any portion of such lands. The contrary opinion is held by very many and it may be possible by a majority of the lawyers who have given consideration to this question.

It is not generally understood that these pueblo lands consist of a very small portion, approximately speaking, of cultivable, tillable, and cultivated lands; that this small area, situated in the narrow valley of some stream, is divided up between the different individual Indians running in long strips generally from the "acequia madre," or "mother ditch," so that each holding is as near as possible to the main water supply. The remainder of such lands consists of grazing lands generally, with no timber of any kind or character except scrubby "mezquite" and cottonwood, the roots of the former being used for firewood; that these grazing lands are supposed to be held in common by all the tribe, while the individual Indian cultivating lands within the pueblo areas under allotment from the pueblo official did not have any title other than by consent of the official of the pueblo. The title to areas so occupied was in common, but in practice and custom such lands were actually cultivated and used by succeeding generations.

Now, legally or illegally, it has been the custom for a great many years for these individual Indians to part with their titles, or supposed titles, to these small individual holdings. Whether they had a legal right to do so remains to be settled and is a subject upon which there is a very material difference of legal opinion as indicated.

In correspondence concerning this bill I have indicated that possibly it might be necessary, in equity and good conscience, to provide compensation for the American claimants of the lands in event they were dispossessed thereof, either through cash payment of the ascertained value of the particular tract or through the granting to such claimant of an equivalent value of lands of the United States, or that it might be necessary to make some such provision for the Indians or any individual Indian in event the holdings of the American claimant might be sustained.

My purpose is to inclose herewith various documents, some of which have been referred to, and also correspondence, etc. I have, however, only given you very hastily a mere outline of the very interesting problems, and have attempted to show to you that those charged with the legal duty and with the legal responsibility of administering Indian matters have proceeded in the best of faith.

I have shortly referred to the fact that Colonel Twitchell is representing the interests of the Indians in litigation.

I can not refrain from calling attention to one particular case now pending.

A former attorney for the Pueblo Indians some time since brought suit for such Indians in the State court for the recovery of certain lands claimed by them as against the claims of individuals. Suit was brought in the name of the pueblo. It was tried by a State court, and was decided against the Indians and in favor of the claimants. No appeal was taken from this decision. The record does not disclose why such appeal was not sued out.

Later a suit was brought in the United States court; "res adjudicata" was pleaded. The case came up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and was entitled "The Pueblo of Laguna v. Jose Candelaria et al.," and the case was dismissed on the ground of no jurisdiction.

Shortly after the appointment of Colonel Twitchell he requested authority, both through the Department of the Interior and directly through the Attorney General of the United States, to be allowed to file a suit in the name of the United States for the benefit of this pueblo for the recovery of these lands. Instructions were issued that such suit should be brought, and it is now pending. What the result will be it is impossible to say, but at any rate the utmost industry has been displayed by Colonel Twitchell in this matter as in all others under his care, and he is assiduously endeavoring to rectify what was certainly a very serious blunder made by a former attorney for the Indians.

And yet, Senator BORAH, you doubtless have in your possession a published article, written by one Mrs. Cassidy, in which, among other things, she is relating what occurred at a meeting of these Pueblo Indians, recently held, and in the course of which she very sympathetically repeats some statements in the form of an interrogatory by one of these Indians who, after reciting the loss of these lands to his people, desired to know "whether they were to be deprived of their lands by the man in Santa Fe (referring to Colonel Twitchell) or the man in Washington" (referring to either the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior).

Now Mrs. Cassidy follows this quoted statement by referring to Mr. Wilson, former attorney of the Indians, as having been then present and denouncing the bill under consideration as an outrage, etc.

And yet, Senator BORAH, Mr. Wilson was the attorney referred to who litigated the case for these Indians, and either Mr. Wilson or his successor in office, Jacob H. Crist, failed to take any appeal to the State supreme court. Mr. Paisano, the Indian referred to, well knew it—he is a supposedly intelligent Indian capable of making a most eloquent plea, which appealed to Mrs. Cassidy, and Mr. Paisano knew that he had only recently consulted with Colonel Twitchell, and that Colonel Twitchell had brought this suit in the name of the United States on behalf of the Indians to rectify the error or mistake of Mr. Wilson, who was so highly complimented and was, as I am informed, the attorney for the volunteer "association" representing so many of the good women of this country.

These facts are disclosed by the documents, and if either the Senators, Members of the Congress, or the Congress of the United States will provide for an immediate investigation of all these matters the department will be very glad indeed to have the same called and held and to have Mrs. Cassidy, Mr. Wilson, Mrs. Atwood, and all other parties interested or claiming to be interested appear before the committee, whether a standing or special committee of Congress or of either House, and the department holds itself ready to present every particle of evidence which it has or may be able to obtain, including the report of special agents heretofore appointed at the request of the Volunteer Associations for the Protection of the Indians, and among which reports may be found interesting matter concerning certain of the particular individuals who are now, under the cloak of protection to the Indians, engaged in misleading statements, some of them in absolutely false statements, knowing same to be false, and some of them in defamatory statements concerning officials of the Indian Bureau and of this department.

It may also be added that under the act enabling New Mexico to become a State and the compact of the people of the State with the United States all of the pueblo areas owned and occupied by the Pueblo Indians is declared to be "Indian country," and the Indians and citizens of New Mexico are entitled to know what lands are so owned and occupied as to make them "Indian country." This is also one of the reasons for providing for decrees of segregation of non-Indian from Indian lands, as is seen in the bill under consideration, which gives the United States court exclusive jurisdiction in these as in all other matters covered by the bill.

Very sincerely yours,

ALBERT B. FALL,
Secretary of the Interior.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
December 14, 1922.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have your communication under date of December 13. I have not had time to go thoroughly through this statement, but I shall do so. And I thank you for sending it to me.

At the time I moved to have this bill recalled from the House I had not yet been brought under the influence of any propaganda. At that time I had received one letter from a lawyer in New Mexico and a telegram from a woman in California. The telegram did not have any bearing upon my action, as it stated no facts. But the letter called my attention to the purport of the bill. I discovered at once that there was a misunderstanding as to the terms of the bill at the time it passed the Senate. If you will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time the bill passed, you will find that I asked certain questions in regard to the purpose and effect of the bill. Senator BURSUM replied to these questions, and I felt satisfied, upon an examination of the bill, that there was an entire misunderstanding by the Senate, including Mr. BURSUM, as to its effect. I therefore recalled the bill, not because I had felt the effect of propaganda but because I felt quite sure that the bill had not been sufficiently considered and that it passed the Senate under a misunderstanding as to its terms.

I shall be glad, indeed, to examine the entire statement as you have furnished it to me, and I will ask at the proper time that it be printed and probably made a public document.

Very sincerely,

WM. E. BORAH.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment requesting the President to call a conference of the nations of the world to consider economic problems and the limitation of armaments on land and sea, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13374, the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4050) to provide for the purchase and sale of farm products.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I made a few remarks yesterday, before the recess hour, on the pending bill. At the conclusion of the session I had announced my remedy for the disposition of the ships which the Government has. If it were in my power, I would have a new stock taken of our condition in the United States. I feel that it is time to make a second Declaration of Independence. On account of the war world conditions have changed, and it is time that we should look out for our interests primarily, and then look out afterwards for the interests of the world.

This question of the operation or disposition of these ships is a serious proposition that we have on our hands. Personally, I am opposed to the Government going into any business. If it were a new proposition, I certainly should oppose the Government construction of ships; but we find now that we have something like 10,000,000 tons on hand, and we should pursue the best method to dispose of them.

I stated yesterday that the first thing I would do would be to ask the different committees of Congress to consider laws that fall within each one's province, and see if we could not improve our condition. I am not well posted on the seamen's act, but it seems that the shipping public thinks it is a great handicap to the prosperity of our shipping. I do not hope that labor conditions will ever go back to pre-war conditions; that is not to be desired at all, and I do not know that there are so many unreasonable restrictions in this act; but, if there are some, they should be modified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIAL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. If I understand the testimony of Mr. Furuseth, who is president of one of the seamen's organizations and is familiar with the so-called La Follette Act, the conditions of seamen not only in the United States but throughout the world, the question of wages, and so forth, it is that the wages paid to American seamen since the La Follette Act, during and since the war, have been in the main paralleled by the wages paid in such countries as Denmark and Great Britain, and that in those two countries wages now are substantially as high as the wages paid to American seamen. As I recall the testimony, conceding all of the claims made by the proponents of this bill and those who urge that the wage question cuts a very important figure in the discussion of this question, their position is scarcely tenable and not borne out by the facts, because even if the wage distinctions are as they contend it would make a difference of only about 2 per cent in operating expenses; and that includes, as I understand, the expenses involved in the maintenance of a very high-salaried clerical force and administrative force which we find in many of these corporations. So I think the question of wages is a mere camouflage urged by a good many of the men who are insisting upon this subsidy. American seamen are now paid very low wages—many of them $40 per month, some of them perhaps less than that, and the general efficiency of the American seaman, I think, is recognized.

Mr. DIAL. And it counterbalances any greater cost that there may be.

Mr. KING. Yes; if they should be paid higher wages than those of other countries, their services are that much more efficient. So I think that the Senator may dismiss as a reason for a subsidy the proposition that the wages paid to American seamen are so much greater than those paid to seamen in other countries as to call for the benevolent bounties of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DIAL. I thank the Senator from Utah. I will confess that before we had these hearings and before looking into the subject I thought that the wages were out of proportion, but after a thorough investigation I find the condition to be exactly as the Senator from Utah states.

I am not opposed to paying proper wages. In fact, I think that the payment of good wages encourages efficiency, competency, and faithfulness, and, as the Senator said, it counterbalances the disadvantage growing out of the payment of lower wages to less efficient people. However, what I am trying to say is that if there is anything wrong in our laws we should meet it manfully, and change it.

In this magazine, American Industries, from which I was reading yesterday afternoon, I see expressions of the views of various people connected with so-called big business, and they hit the Congress very hard for not changing these laws. Whether or not this is a just criticism I do not know. It may be propaganda, but it is evidently in the minds of the public.

On page 9, reading from an expression by Mr. Henry Abbott, he says:

> Responding to your conundrum, "Do we need a ship subsidy, and why?" It would undoubtedly be productive of public benefit to have a sufficient tonnage of American-owned ships upon the seas and to insure their permanence by making their operation profitable. If under our peculiar shipping laws and the higher cost of American labor to man and operate our ships they can not compete with foreign-owned vessels, then our Government must, in some form, grant pecuniary aid to the individuals or corporations owning such American ships.

He expresses here the view that there is something wrong in the law.

On page 10, he also says:

> If as a Nation we have any self-respect, if we wish the respect of other nations, we will at once repeal our absurd shipping laws and enact others that will encourage the building and operation of American ships. If they can not be profitably operated without a subsidy, then let us have a ship subsidy law.

Reading from Mr. William H. Douglas, who seems to be president of Arkell & Douglas, on the same page, he says:

> It is well known, by reason of our laws and other disadvantages under which we labor in competition with other countries who favor their shipping in many ways, that without proper Government aid we can not maintain our flag on the ocean.

Reading from Mr. Knobloch, on the same page, he says:

> American shipping, whether owned privately or otherwise, must also be freed from some of the drastic handicaps that are driving it from the seas.

Reading from Mr. George W. Todd, president of the Todd Protectograph Co., on page 11, he says:

> Congress has loaded our ships down with many unnecessary laws and restrictions that put us at a great disadvantage. In fact, I firmly believe if we were on an equal footing with other countries that subsidies for other than fast passenger and mail ships would be unnecessary.

On page 12, reading from Mr. Augustine Davis, who is president of the Davis Automatic Equipment Corporation, he says:

> Our shipbuilding has already fallen below that of other principal nations; and the burdensome regulations established by our Government in the employment of seamen on ships carrying our flag make their services more costly than that of any other nation, thus creating a handicap that tends to make investment in American ships less and less inviting.

Reading from Mr. Hodson, on the same page, he says:

> It is an accepted fact that the cost of construction and the cost of operating American-built vessels under the American flag are greater than similar costs of vessels of foreign registry. It is also generally agreed that an adequate merchant marine is a key industry upon which the prosperity of our entire industrial structure largely depends. On that basis it would appear that the shipping industry is entitled to the same protection against lower cost foreign competition that is granted to other industries by the protective tariff. To my mind the ship subsidy is nothing more or less than a tariff which will equalize the operating costs of foreign vessels operating under foreign flags and American vessels operating under the American flag.

Reading from Mr. Richard H. Edmonds, editor of the Manufacturers' Record, on page 13, he says:

> A subsidy to American ships is not a bonus or profit paid into the treasuries of their owners but is the price that we must pay for the maintenance of laws which make the cost of running an American ship very much heavier than the cost of operating ships under other flags.

On page 14 I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the views of Mr. Henry F. Grady, director of the foreign and domestic trade department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce. It is a very interesting statement, but I will not take the time of the Senate to read it. I might say that Mr. Grady's statement is along the same line.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The matter of subsidizing shipping is one that is intimately related to our foreign trade and any ship-subsidy program should be worked out as part of a general foreign-trade policy. The purpose of a subsidy is to give a bounty to foreign commerce, and that bounty is justifiable only in so far as it results in the development of foreign commerce. No bounty is a satisfactory substitute for cargoes. The theory of the bounty is to increase cargoes. Therefore, the stress should be placed on the development of foreign commerce, and the bounties given through the medium of subsidized transportation should be merely an aid to the outflow and inflow of commodities where conditions warrant.

One gets the impression from a great deal of the discussion on the ship subsidy that it is regarded as an end in itself. It is not an end in itself, but a means to an end, and that end is the development of trade. A country serious about its foreign trade will therefore do everything in its power to foster foreign trade and will furnish a bounty through the medium of subsidized transportation only where there are obstacles to the flow of commerce that can not be overcome in any other way. Moreover, these obstacles must in the nature of things be temporary, and the bounty or subsidy an aid in the overcoming of these temporary difficulties.

Bounties to any form of economic activity are only justified as temporary aids and as a means of bringing that activity to its full vigor. If there are inherent weaknesses in an industry, the sound procedure is to correct these weaknesses rather than subsidize them by permanent governmental aid. In the case of our shipping we should, on the one hand, take legislative action to remove any impediments in the way of reduced cost of operation, and, on the other, the industry itself should seriously take up the matter of improving its technique, and in that way work toward a position where competition without subsidies is possible.

A policy of restricting commerce through prohibitive tariffs, on the one hand, and of subsidizing shipping, on the other, has always been and will always be irreconcilable. If we seriously want foreign trade let us formulate a national policy along the lines to secure foreign trade, and then put our shipping on a sound basis through such legislation as is necessary and such temporary subsidies as will aid the industry during its period of infancy. Subsidies are thoroughly justified from this standpoint, and I believe we should have them, but I also believe most emphatically that it is futile to discuss a merchant-marine program that is not made part and parcel of a foreign-trade program. We must build up our shipping as an adjunct to our trade, but it would be absurd to attempt to build up our shipping at the time we are killing trade. The way to make shipping profitable is to stimulate the flow of cargoes. If the cargoes are adequate the problem of subsidies will be greatly reduced, and the effect of such subsidies as are justified will be greatly augmented.

Mr. DIAL. On page 15, Mr. J. R. Monroe, who is president of the Monroe Calculating Machine Co., says:

The reasons are many. Two of the most important are, I believe, first, assistance in the form of a subsidy or otherwise is given by other countries; and, second, legal requirements of our country add greatly to the expense of running our ships. It may be that these legal requirements are more burdensome than is necessary to protect the interests of the seafaring man and the traveling public, but I do not believe it would be possible to get native sailors for our ships without giving them greater protection and advantages than are enjoyed by most foreign seamen.

On page 16, reading from the views of Mr. W. A. Layman, president of the Wagner Electric Corporation, he says:

I am in favor of a ship subsidy, but there is one difficulty with the situation which I think is going to be insurmountable, namely, the La Follette seamen's bill.

It may interest you to know that in conversation with a very level-headed retired farmer a few days ago, he expressed the view that it was a waste of energy to talk about a ship subsidy measure until the seamen's bill had been repealed, or so amended as to put our shipping on a reasonably competitive labor basis with that of other nations. This old gentleman said that he would vigorously oppose a ship subsidy, the net effect of which was simply to pass a gratuity into the hands of American seamen. It was his opinion that if the law would give American shipping an opportunity, it could compete with the world without a subsidy.

I now read from Mr. Philip S. Tuley, on page 19:

UNFAVORABLE LAWS A SERIOUS HANDICAP.

(Written especially for American Industries, by Philip S. Tuley, president-treasurer, Louisville Cotton Mills Co.)

I have long felt that we should establish a ship subsidy in order to develop the American merchant marine. I think that our failure to adopt such a national policy prior to the war was responsible for our having to accept the humiliating position of being powerless to transport our Army when the emergency arose and having to accept the shipping of other nations to accomplish this essential matter. Of course, unfavorable legislation affecting shipbuilding is likewise responsible in large measure for this and until such legislation is repealed we question whether a ship subsidy can be adopted successfully without perpetuating the unwholesome and unfavorable conditions of operation and construction now existing as a result of the legislation mentioned.

As a nation, it is my belief that the American people are not fully alive to the necessity for making provision for the transportation of their raw materials and finished product to foreign countries. We are not yet fully awakened to the necessity for developing our export trade without which it is certain to result that our own markets will be prejudicially affected. Assuredly we can not expect in this country efficient service in shipping provided for us by nations with which we are in competition. Their interest would be, of course, to give preference to the trade of their own respective nationalities. In every way it would seem to me a foregone conclusion that American trade in foreign fields would be seriously hampered to the extent of the necessary reliance upon foreign bottoms for transportation of products of field and forest, of mine and factory in America.

In an article written by Mr. Landon C. Bell, appearing on page 20, he said:

NEED FOR A WISE SHIP SUBSIDY POLICY.

(Written especially for American Industries by Landon C. Bell, W. M. Ritter Lumber Co.)

One of the greatest needs of this great Nation is an adequate merchant marine.

The comparison of tonnage carried in American bottoms now with that carried in American bottoms four decades ago, considering the population, wealth, and commerce of the country at the two periods, can not but produce the most painful reflections. The history is one of retrograde instead of progress.

A comparison of the volume of our foreign commerce, whether imports or exports, now currently carried by American ships with that carried by foreign ships shows a state of affairs not likely to excite our enthusiasm or give us pride in pointing to the facts.

The situation viewed from any angle and in any point of comparison is one of which the country may be well ashamed, and over which our citizenship can hardly feel otherwise than deeply chagrined.

The important phases of the subject can not be covered in a few brief paragraphs, but one fact is outstanding. Our ships will always be in competition with those of all the world in respect to our sea-borne trade.

Our standards of living and our wages are the highest in the world. American shipowners can not pay wages high enough to maintain our standards and earn a reasonable profit, if indeed any margin at all, under present laws and regulations, in competition with ships of other countries where standards are not so high, where wages are low, and legal restrictions more favorable.

No great country with far-flung sea coasts such as ours can prosper in peace or be secure and well cared for in war without an adequate merchant marine.

Under world conditions as they have existed for some time, and will likely continue indefinitely, America can not have such a merchant marine as she imperatively needs without a wisely conceived ship subsidy policy.

Mr. President, I do not know what legal restrictions he has reference to, but if there are any unnecessary legal restrictions, they should be repealed. I ask now to have inserted in the RECORD a short article on this subject written by Mr. Frederick L. Chapman, editor and owner of Better Farmer, to be found on page 22 of this magazine. The views of Mr. Chapman are very interesting.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DO NOT SELL OUT ON A BEAR MARKET.

(Written especially for American Industries by Frederick L. Chapman, editor and owner Better Farming.)

I favor a ship subsidy, but not the ship subsidy which is now proposed. A subsidy is an assistance given by government to private interests engaged upon an adventurous enterprise, the continuance of which will convey a benefit to the public. Great Britain, France, and even poor Italy have subsidized steamship lines connecting the home land with distant ports carrying mails and unprofitable traffic, while developing trade in far-away parts which in the immediate or distant future will be to the general profit. We may properly do the same.

The proposal, however, to dispose of our national merchant marine for a nominal price of $200,000,000 less $125,000,000 for its rehabilitation, less $75,000,000 paid yearly by the Government for 10 years, less exemption from certain taxes during that period, can not be properly named a subsidy. It is a gift outright of more than half a billion dollars in net cash, plus whatever property value the ships now have.

I am opposed to this plan at the present time for the further reason that the low state of our foreign trade, resulting in the lack of demand for shipping, has destroyed the present market value of this marine property. Our shrinkage in export of raw materials and food products during the first half of this year compared with the first half of 1921 is about $934,000,000. For the same period the shrinkage in manufactured exports has been more than $2,500,000,000. Stating the above shrinkage in tonnage it has been 5,000,000 tons.

That is why I think this is an inopportune time to sell. I would rather wait until the country came to its better economic sense and realized that—

1. We can not be a trading or shipping Nation unless we are willing to trade under fair terms with foreigners. The present tariff forbids that.

2. We can not trade with foreigners until they become once more our friends. Our proud pose of isolation and indifference to human problems across the seas is not conducive to international friendship. We are beginning to appear even to ourselves in that attitude asinine and silly.

3. We can not operate our ships by public or private control with profit under the restrictions of the present seamen's act. It should be rescinded.

Meanwhile we would better lease these ships to private operators under liberal terms, or if that is impracticable operate them even at the present loss of $50,000,000 yearly until we have laws and conditions more favorable to their sale.

I believe it will not require 10 years to get them. Then, if we wish to sell, sell! It will be on a bull market.

Mr. DIAL. The result of these various replies to inquiries from this magazine is that there must be something wrong in the law, some unnecessary restrictions thrown around our shipping interests. I do not know what the details are, but if there are any such restrictions we should change them, modify them, and amend them. It is not to the benefit of anyone to have unnecessary restrictions laid around our shipping. In fact, the people of this country should be encouraged to buy our ships and to give our people employment. We should go at it in the same way in which we developed this country, with the same energy, and for the purpose of making money, giving better facilities to the citizens of the United States.

We all admit that a merchant marine would be a great help to every interest, farming, mining, and all our varied interests. In fact, Mr. President, I have thought that if Mr. Lasker had used some of his great energy in trying to educate the people of the United States to buy these ships and to use them in the proper way instead of trying to work up a sentiment for a subsidy, possibly by this time we would have had the attention of the American people riveted on shipping. I believe there is no more tonnage in the world to-day than there was before the war. It is true we built a great deal in this country during the war, but a great deal was destroyed. I am sorry I have not the figures before me of the tonnage of the different nations of the world; I had them, but they have been mislaid. Of course, German tonnage has been almost totally obliterated.

We should go to work with the vim and the energy necessary to interest the people of this country in our shipping. Unfortunately, those of us who live back from the seacoast do not feel that we are much interested; we do not see our interest directly, but every man in the whole country is interested in shipping. If we would go to the different States and try to get them to take pride in patronizing our ships it would help matters. Perhaps every State in the Union has some product which its people want to export. I had thought of trying to get the people of the different States interested in forming companies to buy these ships with a view to having the people of those States patronize those particular ships. Then, if we could get the railroads interested and get them to fix proper rates to the different ports of this country, we could encourage and awaken a lively interest in shipping.

Take, for instance, the South with her great cotton industry. We ship many bales to New York and to Boston to be shipped across the ocean, whereas the ships ought to come direct from the different countries of the world to our southern ports and take the commodities on there. Our people would be interested in buying ships if they had proper assurance that their interests would not be militated against through the Interstate Commerce Commission diverting shipments by rail to other sections of the country.

The distance from Chicago to Charleston is the same as the distance from Chicago to New York, or practically the same, and it is down grade. We could bring the great merchandise of the Middle West to those southern ports. There is some talk of the roads not getting return freight, but that could soon be worked up, and if we would let the people of the West know that they could ship their grain in that direction it would encourage them to ship it that way.

I believe if proper efforts were made the great beef interests, the coal interests, the oil interests, and the other interests of this country would become interested in our shipping and would patronize our ships.

I think it should be said to the everlasting shame of the United States that our railroads have had contracts with ships of foreign nations to transport their goods across the ocean. I feel that people who live in this country, and who enjoy protection under our laws, and who have their enterprises chartered here, should do everything they can for the common good, and I believe if it were brought to the attention of the railroads in the proper way they would gladly annul whatever contracts they have now of that kind, if they could get proper accommodations in our ships. If Mr. Lasker had put some of his energy into that line of propaganda, instead of having ships tied up, we would now have them ready to meet the increased business of this country, and they would be furnished with cargoes.

There is no use of this country being timid about treaties with other nations. We have become the creditor of the world, and if those treaties are against our interests, and if they have grown obsolete, then our proper officials should take the necessary steps to have them annulled or modified. The time has come when there is no use splitting hairs or being timid about it. It is necessary to our self-preservation that we look after our interests and the interests of our people. I know we have been encouraged to look over the world and try to donate to one country and to another, and try to improve conditions all around, but we are getting so that we can scarcely help ourselves in some sections, and we should wake up to that.

It might be a good thing to sell some of these ships to the people of some weak nations, and I would be glad to see that done, as we have more ships now than we could use profitably. I would be glad to encourage some Chinese interests to buy some of these ships, or some interests in Poland, or even in Russia. In Russia are to be found the finest cotton mills in the world, and they have come back into the market recently for our products, and while I would not advocate recognizing the Russian Government, yet I see no reason why trade relations should not be restored and encouraged, following the example of England and France. It might be a very profitable act to sell ships to the people of those nations, as well as to Czechoslovakia, which is a large customer of ours in cotton. They need grain, it would encourage business, and we would engender the right spirit.

I would like to see a great effort made in this country to encourage our young people, soldiers, men of energy and men of vision, and the working people to buy these ships. If they would just come to feel that they could purchase them at a small price, on long time, they perhaps would organize companies and develop them with a new energy and a new vision. They would make it profitable.

It is unwise to provide in the bill that all but 10 per cent should be taken away from the operator and covered into the Treasury. I can see no sense in any such provision. If a man is going in and take the risk, he does not care to have a top put on his profits. The ocean is free; people have a right to traverse it at their pleasure; and they should be encouraged to make all the profits they could consistent with reasonable freight rates. I would be delighted if the American Legion would suggest the matter to our soldiers, and if they would go in and buy some of these ships and run them in a proper way.

The propaganda which has been spread over this country has not been propaganda of the right kind; it has not been for the purpose of encouraging people to invest their funds in these ships or to aid in disposing of the ships, but it has been for the purpose of making our people look to Washington with the expectation of getting some favor. I must deplore the idea of always encouraging people to depend upon their Government for support. That is not governmental, and we can not make our people an independent population by taking from one class and giving to another. We have done it so much that everybody wants some special favor and there are not enough special favors to go around. Our Republican brethren have taught the people, through their tariff legislation and their other special legislation, that it is right to come to the Government, and that they need not work, that the Government is going to support them. We have tried that experiment about long enough. We have borrowed from one, and we have pillaged another, until we have to go to creating and to making a surplus.

Some time ago I read with a great deal of interest a circular by some one, whose name I do not now remember, entitled "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's."

Mr. CARAWAY. That is in the Bible.

Mr. DIAL. The quotation is from the Bible, but the pamphlet is not. If we would read that we would see where there is no wealth to the world except surplus. It was a very interesting discussion of the origin of profit.

As I said yesterday, it is surprising to me that more money was not lost on these ships under Lasker's management, operating about 400 out of about 1,400, with the others tied up. His testimony was that he let the Government ships take only the surplus cargoes. Wherever there were private operators he would hold our ships back and let the private operators have advantageous cargoes, and he would run our ships only as a kind of overflow. It is a wonder to me we did not sink more money than we did.

I am satisfied that with a proper effort on Lasker's part, instead of losing this considerable sum of money we could have had an even balance sheet. Personally, I would not have cared particularly whether we made much money or not until we sold the ships, but there is no use in our losing money.

I am satisfied that wherever ships are tied up in cold ports, where there is ice clear through the winter months, if we would transfer them to warmer waters it would be less expensive to keep them up, would cost less for coal and for labor, and it would advertise the benefits of this Government in different sections of the United States. I am satisfied they could have been maintained with much less expense, and that they would have been maintained in reasonable order. I confidently believe as our commerce increases within the next year or perhaps the next few months that a demand will again spring up for the ships, and we can get rid of them at a reasonable price at least.

Mr. President, it is a serious situation. I feel that it is a situation that has been brought about designedly by the head of the Shipping Board. It is more serious than our people realize. But in addition to trying to sacrifice these ships it seems to be the desire now to put on this great subsidy. In other words, they would then, under the provisions of the bill, be simply hothouse plants, and there would be no attempt to go after business in a businesslike way.

Mr. President, I understand it is the desire to have an executive session, and it is now 2 o'clock. I had intended to speak on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], but I shall refrain from doing so at this time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 40 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

In executive session this day, following the confirmation of Pierce Butler to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, on motion by Mr. NORRIS and by unanimous consent, the rules were suspended, and it was

The vote, on the motion of Mr. LA FOLLETTE to recommit the nomination to the Committee on the Judiciary, resulted—yeas 7, nays 63, as follows:

CIVIL WAR PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BURSUM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the House amendment after the enacting clause, and substitute the following in lieu thereof:

"That any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or whose name is now on the pension roll, including those thereon under any act of Congress, public or private, and every person who served 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 a month, payment to be made in accordance with the pension roll, without further application by the person entitled thereto.

"SEC. 2. That the widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War, and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or who has heretofore been or may hereafter be granted a pension under any law, public or private, for service in the Civil War, such widow having been married to such soldier, sailor, or marine prior to the 27th day of June, 1915, or who if legally married after said date shall have subsequent to such marriage lived and cohabited with the soldier, sailor, or marine for at least two years and continuing until his death, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $30 a month, and an additional pension of $6 a month for each child of the officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow leaving a child or children of such officer or enlisted man under the age of 16 years, such pension shall be paid such child or children until the age of 16 years: Provided, That in case a minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability: Provided further, That the additional pension herein granted to the widow on account of the child or children of the husband by a former wife shall be paid to her only for such period of her widowhood as she has been, or shall be, charged with the maintenance of such child or children; for any period during which she has not been, or she shall not be, so charged, it shall be granted and paid to the guardian of such child or children: Provided further, That a widow or guardian to whom increase of pension has been, or shall hereafter be, granted on account of minor children, shall not be deprived thereof by reason of their being maintained in whole or in part at the expense of a State or the public in any educational institution, or in any institution organized for the care of soldiers' orphans: Provided further, That the rate of pension for the widow of any person who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the War of 1812, or for 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be $50 a month: Provided further, That all provisions of this section shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted under any law, public or private.

"SEC. 3. That the rate of pension for the former widow of any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or who, having so served for less than 90 days, was discharged for a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, or who died in the service of a disability incurred in the service and in line of duty, such widow having married the officer or enlisted man prior to June 27, 1915, or if legally married after such date shall have subsequent to such marriage lived and cohabited with such soldier, sailor, or marine for a period of at least two years and continuing until his death, and having remarried, either once or more than once after the death of the soldier, sailor, or marine, if it be shown that such subsequent or successive marriage or marriages has or have been dissolved, either by the death of the husband or husbands, or by divorce for any cause other than adultery on the part of the wife, shall be entitled to and be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month: Provided, That where a pension has been granted to an insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless child, or to a child or children under the age of 16 years, a widow or former widow shall not be entitled to pension under this act until the pension to such child or children terminates unless such child or children be a member or members of her family and cared for by her; and upon the granting of pension to such widow or former widow, payment of pension to such child or children shall cease; and this proviso shall apply to all claims arising under this or any other law.

"SEC. 4. That the benefits of this act shall be extended to and shall comprehend and include each and severally the classes of persons enumerated in the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth paragraphs of section 4693, Revised Statutes of the United States, who served during the Civil War, and also any person who is now or may hereafter become entitled to pension under the acts of June 27, 1890, February 15, 1895, and the joint resolutions of July 1, 1902, and June 28, 1906, or the acts of January 29, 1887, March 3, 1891, and February 17, 1897, on account of service during the Civil War and the war with Mexico, and the widows and minor children of such persons: Provided, That service under this section shall be proven in the manner and form specified in section 2, act of March 4, 1917, and the act of September 1, 1922: Provided further, That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension to the soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, May 30, 1908, or under the act of March 4, 1917, shall be $30 per month, and that the rate of pension to the widows of soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension roll or who may hereafter be placed thereon under said acts shall be $20 per month.

"SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War who have been, or who may hereafter be, allowed a pension under existing laws shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

"SEC. 6. That all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $80 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones of the forearm or any part of the bones of the leg below the tuberosity of the tibia, the rate of pension shall be $75 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the humerus or femur, or of the shoulder or hip joint, or where there is an ankylosis of either the elbow or knee or shoulder or hip joint, the rate of pension shall be $80 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall have lost one hand or one foot and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot, or shall have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $90 a month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or of the joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $100 a month; and it is hereby directed that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be reviewed, upon request of the pensioner, all cases wherein there is an excision or resection of any part of the bones of an arm or leg, shoulder or hip, or any of the joints, or an ankylosis of any of said joints, and shall place the name of the pensioner on the roll at the rates herein provided.

"SEC. 7. That in the adjudication of claims for widows' pensions marriage of the parties and the legality thereof may be established by any competent testimony, and in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage, satisfactory evidence that the parties lived together as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and acquaintances until the death of the husband may be held to constitute sufficient proof of marriage; and cohabitation continuously for seven years or more may be accepted in lieu of proof that no impediment existed to the marriage of the parties. A widow otherwise entitled to pension under this act may not be barred from being granted such pension for the reason that she failed to live and cohabit with the 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death,' unless it be shown that she willfully deserted such 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person' without good cause; and all provisions of law requiring such continuous cohabitation in any case are hereby repealed, except as provided in section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 8. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the fourth day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check; and it shall not be canceled, but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

"SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as 'The Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll,' as provided in the act of April 27, 1916, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

"SEC. 10. That no claim agent, attorney, or other person shall contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting claims for the increase of pension provided for in this act; and no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for such services in other claims thereunder, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall directly or indirectly otherwise contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act granting pensions and increase of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines."

And that the House agree to the same.

T. J. WALSH,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 21, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Because Thou dost know, blessed Lord, the power and pressure of temptation and art perfect in holiness, Thou wilt have mercy upon us. Pity us in our failures and pity us in our tendencies and hearken when we call. From Thee no secret thing is hidden; all hearts are open before Thee. Come, then, and withhold not and ever be unto us a sun and a shield. Give to all parts of our country that guiding wisdom by which every difficulty shall be settled justly. O let the blessings of Christian civilization be thoroughly diffused through the instrumentalities of our Republic. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

FORT CARROLL, MD.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House yesterday introduced a bill to sell certain real property no longer needed, including Fort Carroll, in Baltimore Harbor.

In reference to Fort Carroll, this morning I made the following inquiry of the Secretary of War:

DECEMBER 21, 1922.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR,
War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I note that the chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee and the chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee yesterday introduced a bill (H. R. 13524) to sell certain real property no longer needed for military purposes, including Fort Carroll, in Baltimore Harbor.

On October 24, 1921, I introduced a bill (H. R. 8819) providing for the donation of Fort Carroll to the city of Baltimore, to be kept and maintained in perpetuity as a national monument and memorial. On May 31, 1922, the War Department disapproved the proposed donation and expressed its desire to sell.

I am writing to ask at what price Baltimore City could purchase Fort Carroll should legislative authority be granted.

This fort was named after Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, first United States Senator from Maryland and last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, and was constructed by General Robert E. Lee when a Colonel of Engineers.

Respectfully, JOHN PHILIP HILL, M. C.

The disposition I suggested in 1921 was contained in the following bill. It referred also to Fort McHenry.

A bill (H. R. 8819) to preserve in perpetuity Forts McHenry and Carroll, located in Baltimore, Md.

Be it enacted, etc., That Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., and Fort Carroll, Baltimore, Md., if and when not required for military purposes, be deeded at once to the mayor and city council of Baltimore, to be kept and maintained in perpetuity as national monuments and memorials.

In reference to the bill the Secretary of War, on May 31, 1922, reported as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 31, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In further reply to your request of March 13, 1922, for a report on H. R. 8819, a bill "to preserve in perpetuity Forts McHenry and Carroll, located at Baltimore, Md.," you are advised as follows:

The Fort Carroll Military Reservation is an island of about 4 acres, artificially constructed about 1847, and located four and one-third miles from Baltimore. It is without armament or garrison and its improvements consist of an old fort, wharf, and small stone barracks.

Under license from the War Department the Department of Commerce is occupying the reservation for lighthouse purposes. In view of this fact, and since it is not understood that this fort has historic value, the War Department can not recommend the proposed donation thereof to the city of Baltimore. It is believed preferable to authorize a sale of so much thereof as Government departments or agencies do not need, in which event the city of Baltimore would be given preference as a purchaser should it desire to buy.

Should Congress favor the passage of this bill, attention is invited to the absence therefrom of any specific provision as to whether the Government or the city of Baltimore will defray the costs of maintaining these "national" monuments and memorials.

Fort McHenry has historic value on account of its connection with the "Star-Spangled Banner." It contains an area of about 46.75 acres and the site was acquired in 1795 and subsequent years. It has no armament or garrison and has been reported to Congress for disposition as property for which the War Department had no further military use. Under the present law (act of May 26, 1914; 38 Stat. 382) the city of Baltimore may have the use and benefit of Fort McHenry for park purposes, title remaining in the United States but maintenance costs falling upon the city. As such city will thereby obtain the advantage of this 46-acre addition to its park system without expense save such maintenance cost, it is believed that the advantages to the city will far outweigh any disadvantages and the historical value of the fort be preserved, since occupancy by the city will be under rules and regulations of the Secretary of War. Such city, in fact, had possession of this fort for park purposes until same was taken over by the Government during the World War. Numerous buildings were erected thereon by the War Department and Public Health Service at a cost of several million dollars. In view of the present state of the law the War Department can not recommend the passage of H. R. 8819. If Fort McHenry is to be made a national monument or memorial the retention of title in the Federal Government is recommended.

Attention is invited to the inclosed copy of a recent report to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, upon S. 3349, which is a duplicate of H. R. 11083. By the provisions of these bills, if passed, the United States will restore Fort McHenry to its original condition, maintain same, and the citizens of Baltimore and Maryland will be permitted to use this property as part of the Baltimore park system. As will appear from the inclosed report, the War Department recommends that such legislation be not adopted.

Respectfully,
JOHN W. WEEKS,
Secretary of War.

The situation as to Fort McHenry is complicated by its present use, but the Fort Carroll status is simple. It is not needed by the United States and should be preserved by Baltimore city as an historic memorial.

The Baltimore American to-day has given a most valuable account of Fort Carroll, which will be of interest to the House and the public. In the latter part of this account the president of the Maryland Historical Society details the historic significance of Fort Carroll. The article in the Baltimore American is as follows:

Fort Carroll may be sold by the Federal Government to the highest bidder.

And it may become the site of a memorial expressing Maryland's historic ideal of complete religious freedom.

Both ideas are quite new. The first was embodied in a bill introduced yesterday in Congress by Senator JAMES W. WADSWORTH, of New York, providing for the sale of numerous bits of War Department property not actively in use for military purposes.

The second was expressed last night by DeCourcy W. Thom, vice president of the Maryland Historical Society, when he heard of Senator WADSWORTH'S measure. Judge Henry Stockbridge indicated that the question of what should be done with the fort in case it is to be sold would be discussed at the January meeting of the Maryland Historical Society, of which he is the president.

"The fort itself is a fine monument to one of America's greatest men, its builder, Robert E. Lee, then captain and brevet colonel of Engineers, United States Army," said Mr. Thom. "It ought to be preserved for that if for nothing else. It has become a landmark for hundreds of thousands of Maryland people, its very name enshrining the memory of a patriot renowned in Revolutionary history.

"Fort Carroll well might be made the site for a permanent memorial which shall express the ideal which made Maryland unique when the world was torn by sectarian strife—the ideal of complete religious freedom. It could become for all who behold it what the Statue of Liberty is in New York Harbor to the devotees of civic liberty.

"From an architectural and artistic standpoint nothing could be better. There is ample room in the more than 3 acres of its area for a magnificent monument and a playground; and there is ample material in the fortifications for any new structures that might be desired. If the fort is to be sold, the city ought to buy it, by all means, for some such development when the time arrives."

The square, squat block of granite which is Fort Carroll is observed by hundreds of thousands every year, but few have been within its walls. The site was chosen for a fort in 1799, but nothing definite was done until the spot had been ceded by the State of Maryland to the Federal Government in 1846. General Totten, then Chief of Engineers, drew the plans, which were similar to those of Fort Sumter, at Charleston. Major Ogden began construction work in 1847. He soon was succeeded by Captain Lee, who carried the work forward until he was transferred to West Point in 1852.

Water stood 12 and 15 feet deep over the site, above a deep bed of silt and clay. Piles were driven, a wooden grillage laid, and the foundations placed upon the grillage with the aid of a diving bell. The walls are of granite blocks, filled with concrete, and the inclosed space is filled with material dredged from the channel. It was intended to have about 225 guns, three tiers in casements and one in barbette.

But the fort was never finished according to the original design. When the walls had been carried up above the level of the second tier of casements the entire structure began to settle. Work was abandoned for 40 years. Changes were made in the plans and the work finished a quarter of a century ago, with batteries of a then modern type.

Within the old fort is an artesian well, from which a supply of good water, adequate for any possible need at the spot, can be obtained. This was a provision against siege in the days when it was begun. That it would have proved adequate for the waterside defense of Baltimore, if need had arisen, is shown by the record of its sister stronghold, Fort Sumter, which successfully resisted powerful attacks by Dupont and Dahlgren and succumbed only when bombarded by heavy batteries from the landward side.

When I suggested the matter of Fort Carroll last year I was moved by the considerations so well expressed above. I hope that the Secretary of War will report that the sale price to Baltimore City will be nominal. If Fort Carroll can not be donated to Baltimore, it should be bought by Baltimore at a nominal price and preserved for posterity. [Applause.]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 8275) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the House amendment after the enacting clause, and substitute the following in lieu thereof:

"That any officer or enlisted man who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States for 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service, or regardless of length of service was discharged for a disability incurred in service and in line of duty, or whose name is now on the pension roll, including those thereon under any act of Congress, public or private, and every person who served 60 days or more in the war with Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto during the war with that nation, and was honorably discharged therefrom, shall be paid a pension at the rate of $72 a month, payment to be made in accordance with the pension roll, without further application by the person entitled thereto.

"SEC. 2. "SEC. 4. "SEC. 5. That all Army nurses of the Civil War who have been, or who may hereafter be, allowed a pension under existing laws shall be entitled to and shall be paid a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

"SEC. 6. That all persons now on the pension roll, and all persons hereafter granted a pension, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall have lost one hand or one foot, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $30 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones of the forearm or any part of the bones of the leg below the tuberosity of the tibia, the rate of pension shall be $75 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost an arm at or at any point above the elbow or a leg at or at any point above the knee, or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $85 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the humerus or femur, or of the shoulder or hip joint, or where there is an ankylosis of either the elbow or knee or shoulder or hip joint, the rate of pension shall be $80 a month; that all persons who in like manner shall have lost one hand and one foot, or shall have lost one hand or one foot and in addition thereto shall have lost a portion of the other hand or foot, or shall have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $100 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $90 a month; and that all persons who in like manner shall have lost both arms or both legs or have been totally disabled in the same, shall receive a pension at the rate of $125 a month; and where there has been an excision or resection of any part of the bones or of the joints of both of said arms or legs, the rate of pension shall be $100 a month; and it is hereby directed that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be reviewed, upon request of the pensioner, all cases wherein there is an excision or resection of any part of the bones of an arm or leg, shoulder or hip, or any of the joints, or an ankylosis of any of said joints, and shall place the name of the pensioner on the roll at the rates herein provided.

"SEC. 7. That in the adjudication of claims for widows' pensions marriage of the parties and the legality thereof may be established by any competent testimony, and in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage, satisfactory evidence that the parties lived together as husband and wife and were so recognized by their neighbors and acquaintances until the death of the husband may be held to constitute sufficient proof of marriage; and cohabitation continuously for seven years or more may be accepted in lieu of proof that no impediment existed to the marriage of the parties. A widow, otherwise entitled to pension under this act, may not be barred from being granted such pension for the reason that she failed to live and cohabit with the 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person continuously from the date of the marriage to the date of his death,' unless it be shown that she willfully deserted such 'soldier, sailor, officer, marine, marine officer, or other person' without good cause; and all provisions of law requiring such continuous cohabitation in any case are hereby repealed, except as provided in section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 8. That the pension or increase of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the fourth day of the next month after the approval of this act; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Bureau of Pensions in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check; and it shall not be canceled, but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

"SEC. 9. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to affect or diminish the additional pension to those on the roll designated as 'The Army and Navy Medal of Honor Roll,' as provided in the act of April 27, 1916, but any increase herein provided for shall be in addition thereto; and no pension heretofore granted under any act, public or private, shall be reduced by anything contained in this act.

"SEC. 10. That no claim agent, attorney, or other person shall contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting claims for the increase of pension provided for in this act; and no more than the sum of $10 shall be allowed for such services in other claims thereunder, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Commissioner of Pensions; and any person who shall directly or indirectly otherwise contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension allowed, or due, to such pensioner or claimant under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 11. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines."

And that the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3275) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to the widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, submit the following statement in explanation of the action agreed upon by the conference committee:

On account of the numerous verbal changes in the phraseology of the House substitute the conferees have rewritten the entire bill and recommend the adoption of the same as so rewritten. Most of the changes agreed upon are mere changes of phraseology and do not materially change the bill as passed by the House. The rates of pension provided by the original House substitute bill are not changed in any respect, except some slight changes in the rates granted to certain maimed soldiers. The principal change agreed upon is the proviso in section 4, reinserting in the bill the original section 7 of the Senate bill granting an increase of pension to the veterans of the various Indian wars from $20 per month to $30 per month and to the widows of such veterans from $12 per month to $20 per month. The verbal changes made in the other sections of the bill relate merely to administrative matters, and have been inserted in the bill on the recommendation of the officials of the Pension Bureau.

CHAS. E. FULLER,
JOHN W. LANGLEY,
WM. W. RUCKER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill as agreed upon in conference is substantially the bill as it passed the House several weeks ago. The only material change made by the conferees was to reinsert the original section 7 of the Senate bill, which provided an increase of pensions for certain veterans of the Indian wars from $20 to $30 per month, and of widows of such veterans from $12 to $20 per month. That section of the Senate bill was stricken out in the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, principally for the reason that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has never assumed jurisdiction of any matters concerning Indian wars. There was no real objection to the provision on the part of any of the members of the committee, except that they thought they did not have jurisdiction of that subject. I can say, however, that the Committee on Pensions of the House, which has jurisdiction of that subject, or at least the chairman, expressed the desire that this provision be reinserted in the bill, as was done by the conferees.

The other changes in the bill consist of some slight changes as to the rates provided for certain maimed soldiers of the Civil War, and the other changes, I think, are mere verbal changes that do not in any manner change the substance of the bill as it was originally passed by the House. Those changes were made principally upon suggestions of the officials of the Pension Bureau as purely administrative matters, to aid them in construing the measure.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the bill as it now stands, does the pension automatically change, or is it necessary for the pensioner to make an application to the pension department?

Mr. FULLER. If the gentleman will read the first section of the bill as it appears in the conference report he will find that question fully answered. It is expressly provided there that the increase of pensions shall be automatic, and that it will not be necessary to make any application therefor, but in another section of the bill it is of course provided that those not now on the pension roll must make application.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Does the pension then date from the date of the law or the date of the application?

Mr. FULLER. The increase of pension under the bill as to those whose names are now on the pension roll dates from the 4th day of the month after the approval of the act. That provision was inserted because of the fact that the monthly payments are made as of the 4th day of each month and in order to have payments commence with the even month, as payments of pensions are made on the 4th day of the month.

Mr. DOWELL. Under the bill under consideration are the pensioners who are receiving pensions under a special act all included in this bill?

Mr. FULLER. They are.

Mr. DOWELL. Do all of them come within its provisions?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. As to new applications for pensions that are made now pensionable, when will their pension begin?

Mr. FULLER. From the filing of the application.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want to know whether under this bill it is provided that if a young woman marries a veteran of the Civil War in his dotage and he lives two years she gets $50 a month for her life?

Mr. FULLER. Under the bill, if a woman is married to a soldier prior to the 27th day of June, 1915, which extends the limitation to the date of marriage 10 years beyond the present law, she is entitled to a pension under this bill. If married after that date it is required she shall be legally married to the soldier and that she shall live with him at least two years and until his death.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is what I asked, if she marries him now and he lives two years she gets the pension of $50 all her life?

Mr. FULLER. That is correct. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I would not be opposed to this bill or to the conference report if we did not already have very liberal pension laws. But it seems to me this goes beyond the sphere of liberality and approaches prodigality. It is very difficult for anyone to determine just what additional charge this bill will impose upon the Treasury, but I think that it is safe to say that it will increase the annual pension bill of the Government $100,000,000. Now, our Republican friends have been going to the country with a constant iteration and reiteration of the economy that they are effecting. We hardly have a debate upon appropriation bills but what some of the leaders upon that side boast of the economy effected by the Bureau of the Budget. Their constant reiteration of these things reminds me of the formula suggested by Doctor Coué, "Every day and every way I am getting better and better." Now, these gentlemen think that by paraphrasing that formula into saying, "Every day in every way we are economizing, we are economizing," they will make the country believe that they are doing it. I have a great deal of faith in Doctor Coué's formula if a man reforms his habits so that his habits of life and his habits of thinking are correct and along the right line, but I have very little faith in constant reiterating that "Every day and every way I am getting better and better" if I continue vicious habits of thought and deed. I must abandon the error of my way if I get better. Likewise, I have very little faith in this constant iteration and reiteration on the part of Republican leaders that "every day in every way we are economizing" when every day and every way you are coming in here bringing in bills and passing them which impose additional charges upon the Public Treasury. What does this bill really do? In the first place, it takes every Civil War veteran who is now upon the pension rolls, either under the general law or special bill, and pays him a service pension of $72 a month instead of $50. The pension is paid for service of 90 days or more during the Civil War and does not require that the soldier was disabled or injured in any way. What else does it do?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just for a moment?

Mr. BLACK. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman recall when it was that the amount was made $50? I think in the last three years.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; within a shorter period than that, as I now recall. It has certainly not been very long, and Congress thought then we were passing a very generous pension law. And it was. Now, what else does this proposed new law do? It takes every widow of a Civil War veteran who is now upon the pension roll, either under the general law or by a special bill, and increases her pension from $30 a month to $50 a month. It goes much further than that; it allows all widows who have married a Civil War veteran up to June 27, 1915, to apply for a pension and receive $50 a month. The present law only gives those widows a pensionable status who married the Civil War veteran prior to June 27, 1905. Not only is the change made which I have mentioned above but the bill goes still further and says even if the widow marries a soldier since June 27, 1915, and has lived with him two years up to the time of his death, she shall be entitled to receive $50 a month. Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to just how far going and how far-reaching and how discriminatory this widow provision is.

Under the war risk insurance act, which we enacted in 1917 to apply to veterans of the World War, the widow of a soldier who was killed in battle or who died from disabilities received in the service is paid $25 per month plus the soldier's war-risk insurance, if he had any, and yet we are now asked to pass a law to pay the widow of a Civil War veteran, not for death caused by disability received in the service, not for death upon the field of battle, but death from the infirmities of age—we pay her $50 a month. I am not going to lend my vote to any such rank discrimination and indefensible provision.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman recognize any distinction between the age and the infirmities of a widow of a veteran of the Civil War and the youth and ability to provide for herself of a widow of the recent war?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be very glad to answer that. The pension department, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Pensions, asked the Committee on Pensions to limit this increased widows' pension to widows who have reached the age of 70 years, but the committee did not do it. This conference report does not do it. Under the terms of this bill a young widow of a Civil War veteran, not over 20 years of age or 25, can draw $50 just the same as if she was weighted down by the infirmities of age. Now, why did not the Committee on Pensions, if they wanted to make these pensions apply only to widows who were burdened with the infirmities of age, put in a provision limiting the increase to widows who had reached the age of 70?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Because I should imagine they did not think the arbitrary age of 70 years, not taking into account the infirmities or disabilities, was giving a fair measure of relief.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, the gentleman says he "imagines" the committee did not think so and so. This bill is not limited to what one might "imagine," but the language is definite and explicit and includes widows regardless of their age. They may be 20, they may be 70 years of age. Now, there is another bad provision in the bill, which I want to discuss briefly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But, as a matter of fact, generally speaking, it applies only to those who are weighed down by age and infirmities.

Mr. BLACK. I do not admit that fact. The bill applies generally.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I say as a matter of fact, not as to language. As a matter of fact and of application it does.

Mr. BLACK. Can the gentleman give us any statistics which will show the average age of the Civil War veterans?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think, if the gentleman has ever seen a Grand Army of the Republic parade, he would not need any statistics.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, the widows do not parade. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, the widows as a rule are of the comparative age of their husbands.

Mr. BLACK. Another thing this bill has in it which I was about to mention a while ago, that the House has consistently refused to adopt, is that it recognizes a common-law marriage and removes the requirement of law which now requires proof of a ceremonial marriage, and permits the proof of a common-law marriage. I do not believe in our anxiety to let down the bars in pension legislation we should go so far as to recognize a common-law marriage. It would open up too wide a field for fraud.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can the gentleman state the cost of this little piece of legislation, if we pass it?

Mr. BLACK. I stated, before the gentleman from South Carolina came into the Hall, that it would be difficult to determine the cost, but I feel sure that it would be as much as $100,000,000 a year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman. It is the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions, who has submitted the estimate to the Committee on Appropriations, that the probable additional raise by reason of the enactment of this bill is $8,795,000 per month.

Mr. BLACK. I thank the gentleman for his information. He is a member of the Appropriations Committee and speaks with authority. The figures which he gives, computed upon an annual basis, would mean an increase in the Nation's pension bill of $105,540,000. This would be $5,540,000 more than I stated was my approximate estimate a while ago.

Already we have a pension bill of $255,000,000 annually. This addition will make it $360,000,000 hereafter; and add this amount to the amount which Congress will appropriate for compensation to World War veterans, vocational education, and other obligations of a similar nature which we must meet, one can readily see we will soon have an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 per annum for the Pension Bureau and the United States Veterans' Bureau.

We should be liberal in pension legislation, but the bill covered by the present conference report goes entirely too far, and I shall vote against it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. FULLER. I can yield him five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I can not support this conference report on the pension bill now before the House for a great many reasons. In the first place, it will add about $100,000,000 extra burden to the taxpayers of America just at this time when the people are crying out for a reduction of expenditures and, in my humble opinion, its adoption simply means that there will never be a reduction in the amount annually spent for this purpose.

In 1876 Mr. Garfield said on this floor, during the debate on the pension appropriations bill which at that time amounted to $27,936,209, that in his opinion we had "passed the maximum" in pension appropriations. What if Mr. Garfield should awake to-day and witness the passage of this bill, which carries more than ten times the amount which he thought at that time, 46 years ago, was the "maximum" to be expended for this purpose in any one year? And the end is not yet.

In 1921 the pension appropriations amounted to $258,720,820.67. The next year the amount fell off about $5,000,000 We thought then that surely we had passed the "maximum" and that the amount would steadily decline. But here comes this conference report which adds about one hundred millions of dollars to the present appropriation and runs the amount far above the "maximum" reached in 1921.

As a member of one of the pension committees I realize, possibly more clearly than some of the rest of you, that we are going at breakneck speed in the expenditure of money for pensions. I have fought these unnecessary increases on the floor of the House, but to no avail. Those of you whose constituents are to reap the vast and unprecedented benefits of this extravagant expenditure are going to vote to adopt this conference report, and unfortunately you are in the majority.

What is the effect of this conference report? In the first place, it increases the pensions of the Federal soldiers of the Civil War from $50 to $72 a month, or from $600 a year to $864 a year, which is more than one of these men could make if he were young and able-bodied. It was stated upon the floor of the House on yesterday that the average farmer in the United States is making less than $500 a year, and that statement was not contradicted or questioned. Indeed, it could not be questioned by anyone familiar with the conditions of the farmer at this time. If he is a tenant, out of that $500 he must pay his rent, amounting to from one-fourth to one-half of his entire crop; if he is a landholder, he must pay his taxes out of it, together with the "upkeep" of his farm, and in addition to that the interest on the money he owes. For it is well known to every man in this body who has taken the trouble to investigate the proposition that a vast majority of the farmers of this country have been compelled to mortgage their farms, and on those mortgages they must pay interest of from 6 to 15 per cent. A vast majority of those who are going to vote for this conference report voted also for the ship subsidy bill, which, in addition to giving to the Shipping Trust a direct subsidy of $30,000,000 a year out of the Federal Treasury, together with an indirect subsidy out of the pockets of the American people of from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year, proposed also to advance the shipping interests operating money at less than 3 per cent interest. But when it comes to the passage of laws to enable farmers to get cheaper money you seem to regard it as a matter of too small concern to engage the attention of this administration. No wonder there was such a political revolution in the agricultural States during the recent campaign.

The farmers appealed to you to put a stop to profiteering in manufactured articles and bring the cost of those commodities down to within their reach, but you answered that by the passage of a tariff bill that will take from the toiling masses of America from three to four billions of dollars a year and pour it into the pockets of the manufacturer. As a distinguished Senator said, in discussing that iniquitous bill, "You levied a tax on everything the workingman buys, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of the coffin in which old age is laid away."

They appealed to you to assist them, through the Bureau of Markets, in getting a reasonable price for their products by bringing them more nearly in direct contact with the consumers and eliminating the profiteers in agricultural products, and you answered that by repealing the excess-profits tax and relieving those profiteers of a tax of $450,000,000 annually, which now must be made up by the masses of the American people themselves.

They have implored you to accept Henry Ford's offer and turn the Muscle Shoals project over to him in order that he might give work to the unemployed and at the same time bring down the cost of fertilizer by manufacturing that article in competition with the Fertilizer Trust. But you answered that by saying that it would be too much a financial sacrifice, and then bring in this bill in which you propose to give away every year practically as much money as the Muscle Shoals project has cost.

Under this bill a woman may marry an ex-Federal soldier to-day, or five years from to-day, and live with him two years, and at his death she will be placed on the pension roll for the balance of her life at $50 a month, even though she may have been born 40 years after the war closed. There are 78,313 more widows on the roll now than there are soldiers, and if this conference report is adopted we will be paying these young women who are marrying these old men for the next 50 or 75 years. There are now 49 widows drawing pensions as a result of the War of 1812, which has been closed for practically 110 years.

You are eliminating the marriage qualification, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], and substituting therefor the common-law marriage, a thing never before attempted in the passage of a pension bill so far as I have been able to ascertain. But you are even going further and eliminating the property qualification and paying this increase to men and women who are not in need of it, but to some who are immensely wealthy.

Of course, I am from the South, where our old soldiers do not get Federal pensions. Those brave men who wore the gray and who gave to the world those examples of heroism, patriotism, and self-sacrifice during the terrible period of the Civil War, and saved our southern civilization from destruction at the hands of the vandals of reconstruction, have struggled along on small pensions of $10, $15, $20, or $25 a month until they have redeemed the South from her once dilapidated and deplorable condition. They have set an example that it would be well for the rest of the country to follow, if you expect to preserve the Republic in the years to come.

If the precedent set by this conference report is carried to its logical conclusion it will only be a matter of a few years till you will have 5,000,000 names on the pension roll, entailing a burden that will be far too heavy for the American people to bear. By the adoption of this report you are setting a precedent that will rise up to smite you or your successors in the years to come. I for one refuse to accept that responsibility; I shall vote against the adoption of the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the occasion for this extraordinary procedure? What justification is there for it? What facts are presented at this time to justify this extraordinary raise?

Mr. RANKIN. Absolutely none. I have heard it referred to as a Christmas gift even among the Members of the House.

There is no reason for it, and a vast majority of the Members know that it ought not to pass, but they have not the moral courage to stand up and say no. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I will have to decline to yield to my good friend from Minnesota, much as I regret to do so, because I am limited as to time and have more to say than the time allowed to me will admit of.

I spent nine of the best years of my life as an examiner in the Pension Office and as a member of the Board of Pension Appeals, and I think I know something about the situation with regard to the administration of the pension laws and the difficulties in their administration which this bill is designed in part to remove. I will not go into detail with regard to these matters, not only because of my limited time but likewise because of the severe hoarseness with which I am suffering, but I can not refrain from calling attention to the fact, at least, that while it is a liberal bill, it is in line with the record which I have made in behalf of the soldiers and sailors of all wars and their widows and dependents during my years of service in this body and of which I am proud. [Applause.] The old soldiers for whose benefit this bill is primarily designed, and in the preparation and reporting of which I am proud to say I took part, are dying now at the rate of one every 15 minutes. I have no doubt that some old hero of the Republic is breathing his last at this moment; and the same is true of many of the old widows who are increased under the provisions of this bill to $50 a month.

I can not express to you, gentlemen of the House, how proud I am of the privilege of supporting this measure, and of the privilege which the people of my district have given me of aiding in its preparation. The average age of the old soldiers is now more than 78 years, and all this talk from gentlemen on the other side of the House about this provision in behalf of the widows opening the way to indiscriminate marriages is tommyrot and nonsense. Now and then an abuse of the privilege might occur, but in the main it will result in justice to the thousands of women who have married the soldiers in good faith and who have been loyal to them to the day of their death. The truth of the matter is that this bill, agreed upon by the conference committee of which I was a member, is in fact in large measure the same bill which the House passed a few days ago as a substitute for the Senate measure. I do not wish to claim undue credit in this connection, because I think my record in Congress all these years will show that I have done everything I could for the soldiers and the widows of soldiers and their dependents of all wars, but gentlemen of the House, especially on the Democratic side, have inveighed against the bill on grounds which they should have presented when the House bill was up for consideration as a substitute for the Senate bill and which was practically agreed to by the Senate conferees with minor modifications.

I wish I had the time and the voice to answer the arguments that have been presented, especially by the gentleman who spoke a few moments ago, but I have not. I wish to renew my statement that the proudest memory of my public life in Congress has always been that I have never missed an opportunity to help give the old boys and their widows what they deserve. [Applause.]

The rates which we allow in this bill are not as much even as we have been allowing recently to soldiers who fought in other wars. I have no objection to that; but, on the contrary, have aided in liberalizing these laws as to compensation to soldiers who served in the World War, but we must remember that these old fellows and their widows are fast disappearing from the earth, and while it will cost quite a sum of money for a year or so, they will soon be only a precious memory to us, and I for one am willing to retire from Congress if my attitude on this question is not approved by the people of my district.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]?

Mr. FULLER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I favor the utmost liberality toward our former soldiers, but I do not think we ought to discriminate between the soldiers of the various wars. What I object to in our pension legislation is the inequalities of it. Soldiers of the World War receive what we choose to entitle "compensation," but, of course, it is a pension. The totally disabled soldier of the World War gets $80 a month. I am willing to concede that a Civil War soldier has, by virtue of his age, now become and should be regarded as totally disabled, and I am wondering why he should not also receive $80 a month. A totally disabled Spanish War soldier is allowed a pension of only $30 a month. I am wondering upon what footing World War soldiers and Civil War soldiers may be considered to stand to entitle them to such a great advantage above the Spanish War soldiers.

The widow of a Civil War soldier, by this bill, is allowed $50 a month, upon the theory that her husband's life was shortened by his service. The widow of a World War soldier gets only $25 a month, while the widow of a Spanish War soldier gets only $20 a month. The minor children of Civil War soldiers get $6 a month each. The minor children of World War soldiers get $7.50 to $10 per month, while the children of Spanish War soldiers get only $4 a month.

Upon what sound basis do these inequalities rest? Are pensioners of one war more worthy than those of another war, or is it a purely fanciful, arbitrary, and unjustified discrimination? So far as I can see, the only basis of the difference is the political strength of the several groups. The fact that certain groups are organized and are able to make their voice heard by Members of Congress is, so far as I know, the only reason why they are preferred above other groups.

It just so happens that I served for six months as a volunteer private soldier in the Spanish War. I do not claim for myself any great merit because of that fact; but surely, gentlemen, I am entitled to just as much credit for having been a soldier in the Spanish War as I would be for the same service in the Civil War or in the World War. I can not believe that my comrades of the Spanish War are less worthy than soldiers of other wars.

What we ought to do is to get down upon a basis of equality in our recognition of the men who have served the country. I challenge any member of this committee or anybody else who chooses to deal with the subject to show why we should not deal with soldiers of all wars upon a basis of equality and without discrimination. That is all that I rose to say. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]?

Mr. FULLER. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk the remarks made by the late Mr. Mann of Illinois when a bill was under consideration here in January, 1920, proposing an increase of service pension to $50 a month.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Most of these pensions are paid in the North. Some are paid abroad. Some are paid in the South. Some of the Southern States provide for the payment of pensions, small in amount. The total does not amount to a great deal. We in the North have taught our old soldiers to believe that they need not rely upon self-effort, while the old soldiers of the South were taught to believe that they must rely upon self-effort. So far as my observation goes, they have done quite as well or better in private life than our old soldiers in the North have done. If we teach people to be self-reliant, that is the most valuable lesson that can come to mankind. We are proposing not only to pauperize the soldiers of the Civil War but to advertise to those who served in the recent war that the Government of the United States will support them and that they do not need to work for themselves. They do not ask for it, but in the course of time, with that education, it has its effect, and it is a bad effect. [Applause.]

[Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it appears in the conference report, is almost precisely as it passed this House under suspension of the rules by more than a two-thirds vote. I think the opponents of the measure have had ample time in which to discuss the matter here now, and I am very glad to give them that time. I think enough has been said, and I move the previous question.

Mr. BLACK. I had promised the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] that I would seek to get him five minutes. The gentleman will not save any time by moving the previous question now. Will the gentleman yield five minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, we have met in the Pension Bureau continuous rulings that a soldier must have had an honorable discharge from every service. This House in repeated special bills has determined that soldiers are entitled to pensions if they served honorably in their last service, and many such bills have been passed by the committee and this House. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. FULLER] whether there has been any change in the language of this bill which will compel or warrant the Pension Bureau in conforming in its rulings to the interpretation placed upon the law by the House and its Invalid Pensions Committee?

Mr. FULLER. The language of the first section of this bill is substantially the same as it has been in every service pension bill since the first one passed in June, 1890; that is, that if a man served for 90 days or more and was honorably discharged from that service he was entitled to a pension under the act. This bill contains substantially the same language that has been in every service pension bill. It is true that the Pension Bureau had interpolated into the law the requirement that a man must have been discharged honorably from every other service, either before or after the service on which he claims. They have even gone so far as to decide that where a man served faithfully for the three years under his first enlistment and was honorably discharged from that service and then again enlisted as a veteran and served faithfully clear through the war, if he then happened to go home without the formality of getting a discharge from his last service the Pension Bureau has refused to recognize his honorable discharge from the three years' service and has denied him a pension. I do not think that is or ever was the law. I do not think that the law justifies any such ruling. My judgment is, and I have always insisted, that where a man served 90 days or more during the Civil War and was honorably discharged from such service the Pension Bureau had no right to go back and inquire whether he had some prior service or some subsequent service from which he was not honorably discharged. The law does not say that he must have been honorably discharged, not only from the service under which he claims but also from every former or subsequent service. Under this bill, if it should be enacted into law, there can be no possible doubt, from a legal standpoint, that every man who served 90 days or more during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge from that contract of service is entitled to the pension provided, regardless of any former or subsequent service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman. Will the chairman permit another question? In view of the fact that we all now know that this interpretation will be put upon the law by the Pension Bureau, would it not be wise to interpolate into this present act such language as would indicate that we desire that the construction which this House intends be placed upon the act by the Pension Bureau?

Mr. FULLER. Of course, the gentleman understands that this bill has gone beyond the amending stage. The only question now is the adoption of this conference report. The Senate passed one bill, the House amended it by substituting an amended bill, and the conferees have agreed and now report the completed bill. Therefore it is too late to consider any amendments to the bill as presented by this report. It may not be a perfect bill. I do not know, and I do not think anyone knows, just how to draft a perfect bill that would do equal and exact justice in every case, or that would be entirely satisfactory to every one. The committee has done the best it could, and now it is of the utmost importance that this bill should become a law at the earliest possible date. It will be a fitting present for the grand old veterans and widows and will make a happy Christmas in thousands of American homes. These old veterans are fast passing away, and in only a few years there will be but a mere handful of that grand army of the Union to tell the story of heroism, of the battles and the weary march, the privations and sufferings of that titanic contest for the preservation of the Union. This is undoubtedly the last act of the Congress for the recognition of what the country owes to its gallant defenders and the dear old widows of those who have pitched their tents on the other shore. Let us hark back to the dark days when the Union was in peril, when the boys of the North were baring their breasts to the hail of leaden bullets, and then to the glad time of the grand review here in the Capital City, when these brave boys came marching back and let us look again at the great banner then stretched across the Capitol front containing the words:

The only debt we can never pay is the debt we owe to our victorious Union soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Whatever of that debt we are ever to pay will be paid now by the enactment of this most just and truly generous measure. Loyal men and women all over the land will applaud our act, and let me tell you now that there is no money ever appropriated by Congress for any purpose that does so much real good as that we appropriate for pensions to the aged veterans and widows. Every dollar of it goes into immediate circulation in every town and hamlet of the land, so that it benefits many besides the immediate beneficiaries. I hope this conference report may be approved to-day, so that the bill can go to the President and receive his approval before the coming holidays.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have leave to extend his remarks on this conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this conference report in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to the general leave.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. BLACK. We have only one more speech on this side if leave can be granted to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, all this hurry to get through this bill which taxes the people $8,000,000 a month is unseemly. It looks to me that the House might hesitate a few moments before gouging the people to that amount. [Laughter and applause.] The people of the United States know that the Congress has been liberal in pension matters to the soldiers of the various wars, except the Spanish-American War. There is not a man who will stop and think but that knows that a service pension of $50 a month, under the existing law for the soldiers of the Civil War, is ample. Not only that but this bill provides $72 a month pension to every man whether he smelled gunpowder or not, if he was an enlisted man. The bad feature of it is that you have increased the marital part so that a woman who is married to an old soldier up to 1915 can draw $72 a month.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Fifty dollars a month.

Mr. QUIN. Women who have married old soldiers for the express purpose of getting this pension—and there are thousands of them—have been born since the war was over in 1865 and then have married these old soldiers. These young women will continue to draw that pension for the rest of their natural lives. And yet there is a great hue and hurrah about putting this through, when everybody knows that the people of the United States are shouting for us to stop this excessive burden of taxation. And yet you are proceeding with such measures that necessitate the paying out of millions of dollars. This one bill will yearly take $96,000,000 increase from the Treasury, and everything else in the same proportion. You come before the people and say you are curtailing the expenses of the Government. This measure should not pass this House. I believe in being just to the men who defended the country's flag; but when you increase the pension from $50 a month to $72 a month, with all the trimmings that go with it, you are committing a wrong against the taxpayers of this Republic. It is 50 years since the war ended, and you have a tax bill here of $375,000,000 a year for pensions for the men and their widows. Can it be possible that we are going now to increase it to that extent? Your great and lamented distinguished leader on your side, Mr. Mann, of Illinois, made some remarks which have just been read at the desk, and his stand ought to penetrate into your intellects. This is not a question of the heart; it is a cold-blooded question of what is right under the law. It is a cold-blooded right to the 110,000,000 people of this Republic to have their Government economically administered. We ought not to legislate for a special class and say that they shall have all this unequal share given to them out of the Treasury of the United States. What are you going to say—and it will be bound to come from all of these 4,500,000 soldiers of the late World War—what are you going to say when they come forward and ask for this same classification? They will say you did it unto those who fought from 1861 to 1865—even to those who only fought for 60 days—and why can not you give it to us who went over the seas and fought the enemy on foreign soil? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK) there were 44 ayes and 93 nays.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote just taken on the ground that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 183, answered "present" 1, not voting 180, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FULLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], has a live pair on this conference report. He requested me to say that if he had been present he would have voted for the conference report, but he is unavoidably kept away.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TRUCKS AND GOOD ROADS.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute in order to make an announcement that I think will be of interest to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, to those who are interested in good roads, and I think that includes all of us, I desire to announce that to-morrow morning at 9.30 o'clock, on the Connecticut Avenue Bridge and at the other side of it, there will be an exhibition of a caterpillar tractor which I believe will be of genuine interest. It is something that has grown from the tank development of the war, which it is believed will go a long way toward solving the problem of using the truck on the highway without utter destruction of the road. It is to be exhibited to-morrow morning before the Army and Navy representatives, because, if successful, it will be of very great importance in time of war. I believe that every Member of the House will be interested in the demonstration, owing to the great interest it holds for the important subject of good roads as well as for the national defense. I hope that there may be a very large attendance of Members at the demonstration.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the committee rose last evening a point of order of no quorum had been made. Just prior to that the question of ordering tellers had been taken and tellers were refused. The taking of tellers disclosed the fact that there was no quorum present, and thereupon I made the point of order of no quorum. Have I now the right to renew the request for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already taken under consideration the situation in which the committee finds itself, due to the inquiry of the gentleman from Washington. In the interest of orderly procedure and applying the rule as the Chair interprets it, the Chair thinks that the committee should now revert to the point in its procedure where the voting commenced on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington and that the several votes taken on the amendment be considered void. The Chair feels that when a vote is taken to which objection is made, due to the absence of a quorum, the matter rests in the same state, so far as voting is concerned, in which it was in before the vote was taken. Should the committee rise when the point of no quorum is made, action must be resumed at this point when the bill is again considered. The Chair fortifies his position by a decision of Chairman TILSON on March 16, 1920, and by one of his own on December 5, 1919. The Chair therefore holds that the question now before the committee is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 4, line 14, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as the amendment standing by itself means nothing, that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. From the opinion just rendered it might seem to follow that by declaring void the vote taken yesterday the amendment would now be open for further debate and that the parliamentary situation would be the same as if no vote had actually been registered. While the Chair holds that the cancellation of the vote renders void the disposition of the amendment under that vote, he can not concede that this cancellation erases the fact that voting had commenced. A vote had been taken, and this would indicate to the Chair that debate had been exhausted; otherwise further discussion would have been engaged in and the vote would not have been taken when it was. In the opinion of the Chair the purpose of the rule by which votes are avoided when objected to because of the absence of a quorum is to protect the committee against action by a minority; it is to protect the right of every Member to have propositions passed upon in the presence of a quorum. In the opinion of the Chair when that protection has been afforded no further rights arise under the rule. The rule applies only to the reconsideration of the vote and does not apply to the reconsideration of the time for debate. If further discussion is to be permitted is it not competent to ask why additional time should accrue because of the absence of a quorum, when the presence of a quorum would have disposed of the amendment without further debate? Why should the absence of a quorum give advantages and permit additional time which the presence of a quorum would have denied? The Chair finds a recent ruling which bears out his contention. It was rendered by Chairman Walsh on January 25, 1921, when the sundry civil bill was under consideration. On the previous day the question was taken and the result announced on a pending amendment. A division was had and the result of this vote was announced. Then a point of no quorum was made and sustained, whereupon the committee rose. The debate on the amendment had not been closed by motion or agreement. On the following day when the amendment was again reported a motion to strike out the last two words was made. In denying the right of further debate the Chair said: "The Chair will state that debate upon this amendment is exhausted. The question had been put and the point of no quorum was raised and the committee rose." The present Chairman feels that that ruling was correct and will rule in this instance that the debate has been exhausted and can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOWELL. But a Member has the right to the floor until the vote has actually been concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the debate has been exhausted and that further time to discuss it can only be had by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I assume that I am entitled to close debate upon the item. If the gentleman from Washington will agree that I may have three minutes to close debate, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to debate the amendment for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. If the vote is set aside by the Chair on his ruling, and it is reopened again for another vote, then the position of the Chair would be incorrect, because no vote has been taken at all, and the gentleman from Washington, the question being reopened, is now entitled to five minutes, the same as if no action had been taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realized that this was a matter that might come up this morning. The parliamentarian and the Chair have been endeavoring to ascertain what the situation would be, and from what has been done in the past the Chair has concluded that the best solution and the most orderly procedure will be to consider that the time for debate upon the amendment has terminated and that further debate upon it can be had only by unanimous consent. If that ruling be incorrect and not in accordance with the views of the committee, the Chair would be very glad to have the committee determine the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I submit the point of order that if we had had no vote yesterday evening, it would have been in order on this amendment pending for any member of the committee to move to strike out the last word, which would give him five minutes' debate. The Chair having held correctly, following all of the precedents, that there was no vote yesterday evening, that that vote did not come to a conclusion, then the matter would stand in exactly the same position as if there had been no vote attempted. Therefore, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] would be in order if he should move to strike out the last word, which would give him five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, no such case is presented to the House. The gentleman from Washington has asked unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. How can a point of order lie as to what the gentleman might do if he were to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. As five minutes' time is not insisted upon by the gentleman from Washington, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the amendment provides that on page 4, line 14, we strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$3,500," so that it will read: "Offices of editorial and distribution work. Assistant in charge of editorial office, $3,500." I stated yesterday that the reason for placing it here was to place an assistant, paid from a lump-sum appropriation, in the position of chief, to all intents and purposes as assistant to the Secretary of Agriculture. In other departments the office is called assistant to Secretary with power to sign the name of the Secretary, thus getting around the organic act which creates the offices in the department. This is apparently to pay as assistant to somebody, to the Secretary with an office in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture in charge of editorial offices. Then you see they do not pay the assistant in charge of distribution as high a salary. The assistant in charge of the editorial office is paid more than the assistant in charge of the office of distribution. Then you get down here to editors, and they are out of all proportion to these chiefs. To all intents and purposes it is an attempt on an appropriation bill to create some office equivalent to that of Assistant Secretary. Now I have offered an amendment to reduce the pay of the assistant in charge of the editorial office from $5,000 as proposed here to $3,500, and if the motion prevails I shall go through this list of editorial assistants, who are head editors, and reduce them in proportion in the interest of economy and the management of that office. I yield back any time that may remain.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, after we have finished this item I shall undertake to make a statement as to just what is done under this paragraph, but in answer to what the gentleman from Washington says I would like to state that this place is an assistant in charge of the whole distribution activities of the department. This includes the editorial office under which all of the editorial work in connection with bulletins and reports of all sorts passes. It embraces the office in which all the mimeograph work is done. It includes the publications work of the department——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman state—I have not heard—how much this officer is now receiving?

Mr. ANDERSON. He is now receiving $5,000 on a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the service be practically the same or greater than it was before?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say it will be practically the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Just another $5,000 man coming up in his place?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A $3,500 man coming up in his place.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to say another thing. The chief in charge of this office is, from the standpoint of the Members of the House and Senate particularly who deal with the department in connection with farmers' bulletins and who have daily requests for all sorts of information for which they have to ask the Department of Agriculture, an exceedingly important one. I have no predilection for $5,000, but I think the importance of this place, both from the standpoint of the department and public and the Members of this House, justifies the salary which it is proposed to pay him. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us come down to the point. I ask the question if it is not understood that the Secretary of Agriculture proposes to bring one of his editors from one of the farm publications to take a $5,000 job in his office?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know. If it is true, I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will state that that is the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: On page 4, line 15, after the word "distribution," strike out "$3,500" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, that is another one of these places being created. This is an assistant in charge of distribution at $3,500. Mind you, these are all assistants. Now, if we care to pay an assistant in charge of the whole office $5,000, I am firmly of the opinion that in the interest of economy we ought to pay the assistant in charge of distribution not more than $3,000, and that is the amendment I offer. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 4, line 16, after the word at the beginning of the line, strike out "$3,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the membership will appreciate this amendment. It is an amendment to increase a salary. Inasmuch as an assistant is to get $5,000, the proposition is to pay the chief editor $3,500, instead of $3,000, as provided for in the bill. I ask for a vote on that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is an existing place under the statutory roll of the division of publications and now carries the salary of $3,000 and I know of no reason why it should be increased. Now I would like to make a statement in reference to this particular paragraph. It would rather seem from the attitude of gentlemen yesterday and this morning that they are burdened with the idea that the Department of Agriculture is conniving with the Committee on Appropriations in a raid upon the Treasury by juggling offices and bureaus of the department and the appropriations for them.

I want to assure the gentleman that nothing of the kind is contemplated. I can appreciate the fact that, with the readjustments that are made in this appropriation bill gentlemen might very well entertain that opinion. If I had had the opportunity I should have made an attempt to explain these readjustments, along with the others, in an effort to make it perfectly clear just what is being done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me first finish the statement.

The division of publications in the last Agricultural appropriation bill had an appropriation of $299,900. In this paragraph we are dropping 12 places, aggregating $9,000, representing an actual reduction in the force of the Department of Agriculture doing this work of $9,000. Previously the division of publications included the office of exhibits and the office of motion pictures.

Those two activities are being taken out of the Division of Publications and put under what was formerly the States Relations Service, but now the Extension Service. That makes a further reduction in the appropriation of $31,160. In addition, positions having salaries of $5,000 are transferred from this item to a lump sum. There are brought into the appropriation four places, if my recollection is correct, amounting in the salaries that they cover to $8,930. Altogether, these readjustments of the appropriations result in a total appropriation for the statutory roll of what was formerly the Division of Publications, now the Office of Editorial and Distribution Work, of $263,270, as compared with $299,900 last year. I want to make it perfectly clear, however, that of that reduction only $9,000 represents a real reduction in the force, and that similar reductions are made in other offices and bureaus in the readjustments which amount to something like $16,000, as I now recall.

Now I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will take the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the Members present that, of course, it is quite apparent that the various editing and printing amendments will not get anywhere, because most of the Members of the House are out at lunch or out on business, and those who are here are those who expect to support the committee. However, there is no harm in looking into what is apparently a consolidation of editorial and press agency service, which is to be under the eyes of the Secretary of Agriculture, and that apparently involves a saving, according to the chairman—and I do not dispute his claim, because I think he sees it that way—of about $8,000 or $9,000.

The minor inquiry I have been able to make—and I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture; neither am I a member of any one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations—leads me to believe that the Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of this bill is being imposed upon. They do not get the facts, apparently. I am afraid the reason is that those who have the facts are afraid to tell them. I think if you search a little you will find that there has already been added one editor down there at $4,000, and there is no place for his salary to come from unless it is the lump sum. They say they have a $5,000 editor. I think that probably the $5,000 editor and the $4,000 editor are one and the same, and that the real pay is $4,000 and not $5,000. There is a man down there in charge of the press service. What becomes of that job? This Department of Agriculture has a gigantic press service. It writes letters to Congressmen and gives out mimeograph copies before the Member gets the original. This is extraordinary if the bureau sees fit to attack some proposition of the Congressman.

Read some of these reports. Start with the report of the Secretary himself. He states what he has saved in printing. Good. The House of Representatives laid a foundation for him when it ordered publications consolidated and combined. I am glad he is bragging about it a little. I am also glad that the money has been saved.

In spite of that saving the printed agricultural information, numbered by pieces, has greatly increased—increased, I think, by 35 per cent. And here we have a consolidation of editorial activities put right up in the front, and it will not be more than a couple of years before those who are now doing it or helping to do it will be wondering how they got that powerful bureau established, and in the speeches yet to come there will be many a good knock at bureaucracy.

But in spite of the office of editorial and distribution work—and mind you this is a new bureau—we are proposing in this bill a real saving. Five positions in this bureau have been dropped—one messenger or laborer, at $840; one messenger boy, at $720; one messenger or laborer, at $720; and two charwomen, at $240 each, have been dropped. These positions have been dropped in accordance with the Secretary's desire to decrease the personnel. Five laborers, including two charwomen, at $240, are cut off the pay roll in order that they may have a $5,000 assistant over another assistant, who is to tell these editors how to grind out something for the farmer and the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am with the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] in his effort to effect this economy. The membership of the House may not know it, but I have found out that the gentleman from Washington, as chairman of the Committee on Printing, has effected several very important reforms that have saved much money to the Treasury of the United States. But we have outvoted him here on this $5,000 position for a bureau chief. On his amendment, the last vote that we took yesterday afternoon, the count stood 16 for and 16 against, 32 Members voting in a membership of 435 on a question of economy.

I know that the idea of a $5,000 salary does not mean anything to the membership. We hear so much of bigger salaries that we have grown careless of what the amount really means. But I want to tell you that back at home among our people a $5,000 salary is a pretty good salary.

We pass upon various high salaries. The people of the States pass upon the salaries that they shall pay their governors. Let me show you what the governors of the States are drawing. The Governor of Alabama draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Arkansas draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Colorado draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Connecticut draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Delaware draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Georgia draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Idaho draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Iowa draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Kansas draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Maine draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Maryland draws $4,500 a year. The Governor of Michigan draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Mississippi draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Missouri draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of New Hampshire draws $3,000 a year. The Governor of New Mexico draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of North Carolina draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of North Dakota draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Oklahoma draws $4,500 a year. The Governor of Oregon draws $5,000 a year.

Mr. McARTHUR. The Governor of Oregon draws $7,500 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it is a very recent increase. You want to get the Congressional Directory corrected. I am now reading from page 179 of the issue of July, 1922.

Mr. McARTHUR. That is the fault of the directory, and not my fault.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand the increase in Oregon has just been granted. The Governor of South Carolina draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of South Dakota draws $3,000 a year. The Governor of Tennessee draws $4,000 a year. The Governor of Texas draws $4,000 a year. The Governor of Vermont draws $3,000 a year. The Governor of Virginia draws $5,000 a year. The Governor of Wisconsin draws $5,000 a year. And the Governor of Wyoming draws $4,000 a year.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. So you see, $5,000 a year salary to the people back home in a whole lot of these States seems to be adequate for as important a personage as the governor of the State. But when the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] gets up here and shows that $3,500 is as much as a bureau chief in a certain capacity ought to draw and seeks to cut down this increase, which the hearings show is an increase, and to cut it down from $5,000 a year to $3,500, he loses by 1 vote. The vote was 16 for his amendment and 16 against it, and therefore his amendment loses, and his effort to economize and save the people's money is lost. Now I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. McARTHUR. I wanted to know if the figures the gentleman read had any bearing upon the historical remark of the Governor of North Carolina to the Governor of South Carolina. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I know that is uppermost in the minds of most Members absent and present just now during the Yuletide, when one paper says it is coming in and other papers say the President is keeping it out. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the question here is on the salary of an assistant in charge of the editorial office in the office of editorial and distribution work in the Department of Agriculture.

The committee has reported an appropriation of $5,000. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington provided for a cut of that to $3,500. After listening to this debate I feel that whoever has charge of that important work in the department is entitled to a salary of $5,000, and I am against the amendment.

Now, just in order that the record may be clear, during the last week——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman wait a moment while we clear the record?

Mr. HILL. I have only five minutes. I understand from the chairman of the committee that the work of this editorial department is entirely in editing Government publications.

It is not a propaganda bureau and does not come under the heading of the questions that I raised about an appropriation of $150,000 last week for a certain unit in the Treasury Department, the prohibition enforcement unit.

This office edits the proper publications of the Government for the farmers of America, and is not a unit for the praise of any particular theory of government or any particular officers, or against any class of Members of Congress. In other words, it is not a "press bureau" in the sense of the objections made in this House on December 8 and 9. Therefore, I think this House should stand by the committee and vote for proper coordination in the Department of Agriculture. I know the value of this work to the people of Maryland.

I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a short editorial from the Chicago Tribune of December 9 on "The Government Press Bureau," which bears on this matter and on the fight I made last week for the principles therein stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to be allowed to insert as a part of his remarks the editorial in question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial is as follows:

THE GOVERNMENT PRESS BUREAU.

Representative HILL of Maryland has asked Congress to eliminate from the appropriation for the enforcement of prohibition $150,000 included in the bill for the maintenance of a press bureau. We should like to know what the prohibition press agents do. It is astonishing to discover, out here where Government methods are not all revealed, that there are press agents hired by the Government to propagandize in favor of one of its policies.

There are laws of necessity and laws of policy. It is necessary to have laws protecting life and property or there would be no society. Laws of policy represent opinions. One government or one party has one line of policy dealing with railroads, agriculture, commerce, industry, shipping, etc. Another has another line. Out of these policies we get laws. The laws remain in political controversy and they are changed as parties and governments and opinions change.

A great many people in the United States think the prohibition enforcement act is a wise, just, and necessary law. A great many others think it is unfair, unjust, and unwise. The question is in politics. It is presented at elections. Congressmen are elected on the issue. If Congressmen who pass a prohibition law then make an appropriation for a press bureau to support their policy, they use public money to advance a cause supported by part of the people.

If government may use public money to support one policy politically, it may use public money to support any policy politically. The Esch-Cummins Railroad Act is a law, but it is in dispute. It is attacked. Should the Government hire press agents, paying them with public funds, to defend the railroad act?

Should a party in power and constituting the Government be permitted to make appropriations from the Public Treasury to use against the other party in political argument? We know that a government does campaign on public money and that can not be avoided. Federal patronage forms a machine, but it is a more serious matter to permit the establishment of press bureaus for the support of party policies.

People nearly always make exceptions where their interests and beliefs are deeply involved. People who believe that prohibition is a godsend to the United States will not care what governmental transgressions are permitted in its enforcement. That is unwise.

The Tribune believes that Congress should pass an act prohibiting the manufacture and sale of the pistol by private firms. Just as the prohibitionists think an alcoholic beverage is deadly, the Tribune thinks a pistol in the pocket of an irresponsible, enraged, or brutal person is deadly. But the Tribune would not consent that the Government should make an appropriation to propagandize for such a law. The transgression against principles of democratic freedom is too great and too dangerous.

Americans are forgetting an old phrase which their forebears used a great deal: Eternal vigilance is the price of freedom. Our forebears had vivid personalities in their minds. There was danger that some nation in arms or some man on horseback would take away the liberties of a democracy.

In our generation we do not see that groups, animated by high purposes, are attacking the foundations of liberty to gain ends which they regard, and which may be, good. It is a sacrifice of principle to expediency and it never worked well in the long run.

There is a highly competent organization supporting prohibition as a Government policy. There is another organization opposed to it. Good citizens of the United States are in both organizations. They contribute to the Treasury of the United States. Shall the money of one set of citizens be used against them?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will not press that. I have two or three amendments I wish to offer, in order to make a feeble effort to rearrange and coordinate these salaries. I do not desire to use unnecessarily the time of the House or the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will withdraw the motion if the gentleman has an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 4, line 16, after the words "executive assistant," strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,250."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this creates the position of the executive assistant. There is no reason why he should have $3,000. He seems to be an assistant to an assistant who is an assistant to an assistant. Are we drawing it pretty fine and getting it pretty thin? Now, for fear that some Members may think my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. HILL] is firm in his faith that there is no propaganda work going on in these offices, let me call his attention to the fact that during the past year the press service has been moved up into this office, and the press service is the propaganda office by which this department undertakes to reach the daily press, and also the service by which the dope is written that makes up three-fourths of the reading matter of the little dollar-a-year farm publications. The Government writes that stuff.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have only five minutes. There are other activities that have been already moved up. Press-agent work is the thing. Sell the idea. What is the law? Oh, no matter. I venture the assertion right now that the assistant in charge of the editorial office will do as much lecturing out in the States as he will do actual, literal assistance in the performance of editorial work in the course of one year's time.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield the floor.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, there are four reasons why I rise in opposition to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington. The first is that it is offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is a good reason.

Mr. LONDON. Reason No. 2 is that it is supported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Laughter.] The third is that I have not said anything on the floor for a week or 10 days. The fourth reason is that the gentleman from Washington having been formerly an editor shows a profound contempt for the profession [laughter and applause], a profession which, in my judgment, is very much underpaid.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman from New York misses the whole point. I have a great admiration for editors, but I do not want the editors overridden with assistants put over them with better pay.

Mr. LONDON. When the gentleman from Washington refers to the valuable information furnished by the Agricultural Department as "stuff" and "dope," it does not appeal to me at all. I do not know of any department in the country that furnishes more valuable information than does the Department of Agriculture. I do not know of any branch of the service that is more closely connected with the progress of agriculture than is the Agricultural Department. I do not know why the gentleman from Washington has chosen this particular branch of the service for his assault. On yesterday before he spoke there were 16 votes in favor of his amendment, and to-day after he had spoken there was nobody to support it except himself and the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that this is a field where we can better spend the money than in sending out little packages of seed?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, when you take away the seeds you take away nine-tenths of the statesmanship of many Members. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were 5 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 16 and 17, after the words "assistant editors" strike out "1, $2,250, 2 at $2,000 each, 1, $1,800;" and insert in lieu thereof "1 at $2,000 and 3 at $1,800 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were 4 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 18, after the word "mailing" strike out the figures $2,400 and insert $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were 7 ayes and 24 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote because no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

[After counting.] Eighty-one Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, and finding itself without a quorum he had directed the roll to be called, when 223 Members had answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote comes now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 4, line 18, after the word "photographer," strike out "$2,100" and insert "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 4, lines 20 and 21, after the word "assistants," strike out "two at $2,500 each, three at $2,000," and insert "five at $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 8, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For labor-saving machinery and supplies, envelopes, stationery and materials, office furniture and fixtures, photographic equipment and materials, artists' tools and supplies, telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; purchase and maintenance of motor trucks; purchase and maintenance of bicycles; purchase of manuscripts; traveling expenses; electrotypes, illustrations, and other expenses not otherwise provided for, and including not to exceed $1,300 for extra labor and emergency employments in the District of Columbia, $47,850.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the matter beginning at the top of page 5, ending on line 10 with the total, has not been read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk began reading at line 11 on page 5.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which the gentleman from Washington refers was read yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, then I ask unanimous consent to return to the former paragraph in order to offer an amendment in the nature of a restriction upon the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to the former paragraph to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let us hear what the amendment is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 10, after the figures "$263,670," insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in advocacy of or in opposition to legislation or bills before the Congress of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, of course, as the appropriation is for the payment of salaries, the amendment would be without any effect whatever. If the gentleman wants to offer it I have no objection to returning to the paragraph for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 5, line 10, after the figures "$263,670," insert: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used in advocacy of or in opposition to legislation or bills before the Congress of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 31, noes 30.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Washington and Mr. ANDERSON to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I was granted leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I now ask unanimous consent that certain documents I desire to insert be printed in 8-point type.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that certain documents in an extension of his remarks be printed in 8-point type. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not object, but that is a matter to be taken up in the House, as I understand it.

Mr. BARBOUR. I took the matter up with the Speaker, and he said it would be appropriate to make the request in the committee, as it is a matter concerning the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have now an amendment to offer to the last paragraph on page 5, line 21, after the word "expenses," to strike out the words "electrotypes, illustrations."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 5, line 21, strike out the words "electrotypes, illustrations."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the reason that in my opinion this is legislation on an appropriation bill. Other methods are provided for this work.

I had not made the point of order; I am letting the House vote whether they want it in there or out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For all printing and binding for the Department of Agriculture, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services, located in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $760,000, including the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the joint resolution numbered 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $250,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to such printing and binding as now is or may hereafter be, specially authorized by law or by the regulations or decisions of the Joint Committee on Printing, Congress of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I make the point of order against the proviso beginning on line 14:

Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to such printing and binding as now is, or may hereafter be, especially authorized by law or by the regulations or decisions of the Joint Committee on Printing, Congress of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That it is legislation on an appropriation bill; and a further point of order that the Joint Committee on Printing has no appropriating power. Still a further point of order is that it undertakes to direct the expenditure of money that has not been appropriated anywhere.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the further point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, without conceding the point of order at all, I have no objection to the proviso going out. I ask unanimous consent that the proviso may go out; that it may be considered as disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the proviso be considered as disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman just what it means.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman does not know what it means, why does he want to strike it out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think I know, but I would like to find out what was in the mind of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations when it undertook such a proposal as this, whatever it means.

Mr. ANDERSON. My understanding of the proviso is that it was intended to establish the paragraph on such a basis that in the event of a direction by Congress or a resolution passed by Congress for the printing of documents by the Department of Agriculture the cost of printing the documents would be covered by a special appropriation and not taken out of the fund carried in this item. It is quite possible the language as it now stands is broader than that, and consequently I have no objection to its going out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I withdraw any objection I have and join with the chairman in trying to strike it out of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the proviso on page 6 be stricken from the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. In order that the RECORD be clear, I suggest that the gentleman from Washington withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say the proviso having been stricken out, there is nothing remaining on which to make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES—OFFICE OF EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

To carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," the sums apportioned to the several States, to be paid quarterly in advance, $720,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that while the point of order is reserved it is not in order to move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. I make the point of order that the change of title from States Relations Service to that of office of experiment stations in this bill is not authorized by law. I call attention of the gentleman to the decision of the Chair found in Hinds' 4, paragraph 3651.

It is the attempted establishment of a new bureau in an appropriation bill without any previous authority of law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is that on the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. On the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr Chairman, I do not think the decision cited by the gentleman from Iowa is in point in respect to this particular appropriation, particularly in view of the view expressed by the Chair yesterday in regard to the general powers of the Secretary of Agriculture under the organic act. The act of March 2, 1887, provides for the establishment of agricultural experimental stations and provides for Federal aid for those stations in the sum of, I think, $15,000 per State. Obviously it is necessary to set up some agency in the Department of Agriculture to administer this act. Now, it does not make any difference whether it is called "experimental stations" or whether it is called nothing at all. The words "office of experiment stations" as used here, as I stated yesterday, creates nothing. It is simply a convenient title to designate the organization in the Department of Agriculture and established by force of the order of the Secretary to administer this act, and I submit that the use of this title in the bill does not establish the office of experiment stations in the legal sense at all. The situation would be exactly the same as if the title went out altogether. The Secretary could still have in the department the office of experiment stations.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands this work is now going on?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is going on in pursuance of the law passed by Congress 20 or more years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Under what title was the work carried on in the last bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. This work was formerly under the States Relations Service and carried on as part of that service, which, by the way, has no more legal status than this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there was no legislation creating the other title than creating this title?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. There are no more positions paid under this title than are now paid for.

Mr. HAUGEN. May I call the Chair's attention to a more recent ruling, a ruling of the present occupant of the Chair on January 22, 1921. The proposition then before the House was practically in the same form as this. The paragraph then under consideration was "Bureau of Farm Management and Farm Economics, Chief of Bureau, $5,000," and so forth. I made the point of order with reference to the use of the word "Bureau." The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] then argued as he argues to-day. I quote:

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the words are subject to a point of order. The whole question is whether by using the word "Bureau" in the place of the word "office" we thereby create something that does not now exist. The use of the word "Bureau" in lieu of the word "Office" does not create anything. It is simply a distinctive title under which we are making these appropriations.

The Chair sustained the point of order. That is exactly what is here undertaken to be done—to create something that does not exist without authority to create it. It is a change of title, and it has universally been held to be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that, in the light of the decision of the Chair rendered yesterday, that a change of title does not change an activity or create a new bureau, he should not sustain the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I am calling the attention of the Chair to the ruling made a year ago. I simply call the attention of the House and the country to what we are drifting into; that we are now surrendering our power to legislate, and that this Bureau of Budget is to legislate instead of Congress. If that is the purpose of Congress, then the present ruling is in accord with that idea. I am not questioning the decision of the Chair, but that will be the result. It certainly was not contemplated at the time the Budget Bureau was created that Congress would surrender its power, its prerogative to determine and make these appropriations, that the Budget should also have the power to legislate. That was not contemplated. Congress should reserve to itself the exclusive right to legislate and should proceed to legislate on matters that affect the Government's policy. If the Budget Bureau is to incorporate legislation in appropriation bills, it will thus be able to direct legislation. I believe in Congress asserting its rights and doing its duty as prescribed in the Constitution.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is not directly on the point of order. Perhaps I am permitted to say that if this situation is not what it ought to be, no man is in a better position to correct it than my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN]. If he believes that these bureaus ought to be established by law with a definite personnel of officers prescribed by law, I do not. His committee has the power to report out to this House a bill which will establish these bureaus, divisions, and offices in the Department of Agriculture beyond the power of the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee of this House to change it, and if he believes this should be done, he and his committee should act. There is pending to-day before his committee a bill which is designed, in part at least, to do that. It is entirely within the power of the House to establish this situation exactly as it wants to establish it, if it will take the trouble to legislate upon the subject.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I beg pardon for making this statement, but perhaps it may be important in the future that we should know just exactly what the powers of the Chair are with regard to matters of this character.

The objection is made by my colleague [Mr. HAUGEN]—and I sympathize with his point of view—that to change the title, for instance, of a class of appropriations might be considered as making law. But, Mr. Chairman, if we consider the matter for a moment, we will see that we are not legislating upon that proposition. The fact is that this title, "General expenses of the Office of Experiment Stations," is expressly stated to be for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act," and so forth, "to establish agricultural experiment stations."

Now, that constitutes the law. What we may call it in the bill is not law, and never has been and never should be. If, as a matter of fact, these things are what they purport to be—general expenses for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of that act—then certainly there is no change in existing law, and that would be necessary in order to justify a point of order against this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the chairman of the committee [Mr. ANDERSON] that these changes must be made from time to time. I presume it is unnecessary for me to say what we all know, that the Secretary of Agriculture, not for the purpose of increasing expenditures—because in this bill he does not, and probably will not in the future—is rearranging, for the purpose of greater efficiency, for the purpose of preventing duplication, some of the work of the department. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call particular attention to this fact, because I believe it to be a fact: If in doing so, and if in accordance with his suggestions and recommendations, the appropriation items are so arranged that they carry such appropriations for the express purpose authorized by the law as stated in the appropriation, then it can not be said that because they may be named differently or arranged differently or placed in different positions there is a change of existing law. I think it is quite important that we should understand this, for the benefit of the furtherance of the purposes and objects we all hope for in the great work of the Committee on Agriculture. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, let me ask my colleague if he has examined the law establishing this States Relations Service?

Mr. TOWNER. No; I have not.

Mr. HAUGEN. The gentleman, I understood, asserted that it has been established by law.

Mr. TOWNER. No; I say this, that if it can be shown that it is not under the provisions of the act referred to——

Mr. HAUGEN. That is a question.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course it is the question. I understood that objection was made because it is called the "office" instead of the "Bureau of States Relations Service."

Mr. HAUGEN. It is proposed now to change it to something else.

Mr. TOWNER. I am going to suggest what I think the test should be. If this appropriation does carry out the provisions, as it states here, of the act to establish experiment stations, then unless there is some change in that law the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I am simply calling attention to the rulings made in the past. It seems to be the universal ruling in the past that a change of title is subject to a point of order.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. If you eliminate the words "Bureau of," would that remedy it?

Mr. HAUGEN. The title formerly was "States Relations Service." It is now proposed to change the title to that which appears in the bill. It is clearly a change of title, and the rulings in the past have always been that a change of title or the creation of a new bureau was subject to a point of order. That was the ruling a year ago by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Does not this come within the act to establish agricultural experiment stations, and is not that proper?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am speaking of the title, the very first line.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The title is perfectly in harmony with the wording of the act.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in harmony, but changed from what it was.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the system of the Agricultural Department in increasing salaries without authority of law. There are a number of statutory offices provided for in the Department of Agriculture. When the Secretary of Agriculture wishes to increase the salary of some person who holds one of those offices he can not increase the salary of a statutory office, but he transfers the officer or employee to the lump-sum roll, gives him a new title, and increases his salary to any amount he desires out of the lump-sum appropriation, and then next time in his recommendations to Congress he includes that new title with the increased salary and sends it up through the proper channels to the Committee on Appropriations, and thus without authority of law creates a new office and a new salary. I think it is time that Congress stopped that illegal and inexcusable system of increasing salaries and positions. I do not say that the salaries are too large. I do not say that there are too many employees, but I do say that when a change of that kind is necessary it should be made properly by recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture to Congress, and that the Committee on Agriculture should consider the bill and report it to the House, and it should be considered and acted upon in due course according to the rules of the House. I do not think Congress ought to condone this unjustifiable system of increasing salaries and creating new positions at the whim of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that what I shall say will have a direct bearing on the point of order, but something that has been said seems to justify a word from me.

The bureaus of the Department of Agriculture have from time to time been established by law. It is true that some have grown up, and Congress has permitted the use of the word "bureau" respecting certain parts and divisions of the department, but strictly speaking the bureaus have been authorized by law, each one of them. It has often happened that when by an appropriation or by the direction of Congress the Department of Agriculture has taken up some new line of work, or by reason of shifting of operations in the department employees have been gotten together in a new combination, almost universally I believe when those new divisions have been organized they have been called "offices." They have not been given the dignified term of "bureau." It has often happened that the Department of Agriculture in submitting its estimates to the committee has suggested the change of the word "office" to "bureau," recognizing that it must have the authority or the recommendation of the committee and the authority of Congress to make the change. In my judgment when work is carried on in the department under the head of an office and an effort is made and a desire is expressed to call that division of work a bureau there must be authority of Congress for the change of name, and the change appearing in an appropriation bill is subject to a point of order. If the matter we are speaking about is of the nature of the matters of which I have been speaking, then the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] ought to be sustained. I did not notice it in its inception, so, as I say, I do not know that my remarks apply to the point of order that is pending; but if it has developed that it is in the line of the matters I have spoken of, in my judgment the point of order is good.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, the gentleman from Minnesota said that a bill is now before the Committee on Agriculture and that if desired the matter might be considered and determined by that committee. A bill was before the committee, and the committee reported the bill; so the committee has disposed of it. That bill granted as much authority as was thought should be given to the Appropriations Committee.

Now, another word. It has been suggested that this does not increase expenditures. It evidently does not tend to decrease the expenditures. Yesterday I called attention to the statement of Mr. Pugsley that two officers are to be added, one at $5,000, and another at a salary which no one seems to know how much. The gentleman knows that in this bill it is proposed to increase the number of salaries above the maximum limitation.

I call his attention to pages 79 and 80:

During the fiscal year 1924 the maximum salary of any scientific investigator or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1924 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000 except the following: Not more than 12 in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each, and not more than 5 in excess of $5,500 each.

The proposed legislation gives authority to increase the salaries of 12 scientists to $5,500 and 5 to $6,500 and all other scientists in the department to $5,000. We know that the creation of new bureaus or the creation of new offices have in the past resulted in millions of dollars of additional expenditure. I will read from the gentleman's report, page 2:

A reorganization of two offices, recommended by the President and transmitted to Congress in the Budget, has resulted in the establishment of four separate units. The two offices consolidated and reorganized are the Division of Publications and the States Relations Service, and the four units resulting therefrom are (1) the Offices of Editorial and Distribution Work, (2) the Office of Experiment Stations, (3) the Extension Service, and (4) the Bureau of Home Economics. The first three of these units have been placed under the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, while the fourth, the Bureau of Home Economics, is recommended as a separate bureau. This reorganization makes necessary a readjustment of the statutory rolls and the accompanying necessary changes in the designation of general expense appropriations.

So you add one bureau and one division, which, judging from past experiences, means millions of dollars of additional expenditure. The testimony of Mr. Pugsley, who will be in charge, shows that positions are carried in the bill which mean additional expenditures.

The gentleman has said that $9,000 is dropped.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true.

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not doubt that; but the gentleman also knows that it has been the practice not to ask for appropriations for low salaries. The gentleman from Washington has pointed out that the $240 salaries, the $480 salaries, and the $600 salaries are to be dropped. We are told that there is going to be a reduction in expenditure by dropping a number of places now vacant.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the Chair has already overruled the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order now pending and the Chair is ready to rule. Yesterday the Chair ruled on a point of order similar to this, and then gave his reasons for so ruling. Without repeating those reasons on this point of order which is similar to that of yesterday the Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair realizes that in rendering this decision, as in rendering the one yesterday, he is reversing his position of a year ago, but the Chair takes his present position because, after further consideration, he feels that the decision of last year was in error. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, including the erection of buildings, the preparation, illustration, and distribution of reports and bulletins, and all other necessary expenses, $205,000, as follows: Alaska, $70,000; Hawaii, $50,000; Porto Rico, $50,000; Guam, $15,000; and the Virgin Islands of the United States, $20,000; and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to sell such products as are obtained on the land belonging to the agricultural experiment stations in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, the island of Guam, and the Virgin Islands of the United States, and the amount obtained from the sale thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated for the experiment station in Hawaii $10,000 may be used in agricultural extension work in Hawaii.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the spelling of the word "elsewhere," in line 20, page 7, will be corrected by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the reason for reducing the appropriation for work in Alaska below what it is during this current year.

Mr. ANDERSON. The only reason that I know of is that the Director of the Budget thought it could be done for $5,000 less.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I presume the gentleman reads, as I do, of the development going on in Alaska and the abundant opportunity for further development, also the limited progress up there because of lack of money in these very lines. If my judgment is correct, it would be unwise to reduce the amount of money available for work in Alaska, where results have been very satisfactory.

Mr. ANDERSON. My own view about it is that we have too many stations in Alaska for the amount of money which we are expending on them.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How many have we?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think there are five there now altogether, doing various kinds of work. I would not be sure of that—either three or five.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The Territory of Alaska is immense in size and I am not surprised that there are five. But sections are so different from one another. A different character of work is to be done in different sections. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out the figures "$70,000" and insert "$75,000" on page 8, line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 13, strike out the figures "$70,000" and insert the figures "$75,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. May I suggest that if that is what the gentleman proposes to do he ought to increase the amount in line 12 to $210,000?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That would seem to follow automatically, I presume, but I can combine the two in one. I further move to strike out in line 12 the figures "$205,000" and insert "$210,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page, 8, line 13, strike out the figures "$70,000" and insert "$75,000"; and, in line 12, strike out "$205,000" and insert "$210,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXTENSION SERVICE.

Salaries: Assistant in charge of office of motion pictures, $3,000; chief cinematographer, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; clerk or chief accountant, $2,400; financial clerk, $2,000; executive clerks—1 $2,000, 1 $1,740; assistant editor, $1,800; clerk or proof reader, $1,800; clerks—5 of class 4, 11 of class 3, 2 at $1,500 each, 27 of class 2, 1 $1,320, 38 of class 1, 12 at $1,100 each; draftsmen or photographers—2 at $1,600 each, 1 $1,500; clerk or artist-draftsman, $1,200; clerk or machine operator, $1,200; clerk or laboratory helper, $1,100; laboratory aids—2 at $960 each, 1 $900; assistant photographer, $960; 2 skilled laborers at $1,000 each; messengers or laborers—3 at $840 each, 1 $720; messenger boys or laborers—4 at $720 each, 1 $600, 1 $480; messenger boys—1 $720, 5 at $600 each, 4 at $480 each; 13 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $176,700.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, every generation—every individual, in fact—should leave the world a little better than he found it.

The protection and utilization of our national forests in a broad and worth-while way gives us this opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of Members to an item in this bill, which we shall reach somewhat later, in regard to the construction of roads in national forests. There was an attempt on the part of the Director of the Budget to cut down the amount authorized by Congress for this very important purpose, and it is my desire at this time to lay before the House some facts in regard to the importance and the extent of our national forests.

EXTENT OF FORESTS.

There are 149 national forests in and belonging to the United States, comprising 156,000,000 of acres—an area equal to that of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina. This enormous acreage, as extensive as the 13 States I have named, represents 17 per cent of the area of all the forests and 25 per cent of the value of all the forests of the United States. These forests are estimated to be worth at this time $2,000,000,000. There are about 600,000,000,000 feet of standing timber that is now ripe.

Five and a half billion feet could be cut yearly without depleting the national forests. We are at this time only cutting 800,000,000 feet annually. At that rate it would take 750 years to cut over our national forests. We do not want to overcut, destroy, or injure this great national asset, but the point is we are not utilizing the timber as we should. Timber ripens the same as grain. If it is not harvested, in the course of time it becomes wind-shaken and falls, and we have not only lost the mature timber itself but much smaller growing timber is destroyed. Fallen timber also adds enormously to the fire hazard. So it is wise from every consideration that we utilize this timber as it ripens and conserve other forests that are being overcut and rapidly exterminated.

We are deriving from the sale of timber at the present time about $2,000,000 annually. We could and should cut ten times that amount, or $20,000,000 annually, without in any way depleting the supply.

FOREST FIRES.

The future of our forests depends on their protection from fires especially. We are having at this time about 6,000 fires annually in the national forests. Forty per cent are due to lightning, and fires from lightning usually occur in remote places like the higher mountain tops. We are spending in addition to the regular amount provided for United States rangers and guards as much as $750,000 annually for emergency fire-fighters. A single fire in a great forest, such as I have seen in the Cascades, may destroy timber to the value of very much more than the cost of a road system in the forests which would have given protection. A fire not only destroys the mature timber but it sweeps out all of the young timber and leaves only a mountain waste.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes, briefly.

Mr. ARENTZ. It is the gentleman's idea that there should be timber cruisers going throughout the entire timber sections of the United States owned by the Government, and if there is ripe and mature timber, cut it?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; if we have the roads through which the logs can be marketed.

Mr. ARENTZ. Is money being spent for this purpose or for seeding purposes?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; for both purposes. Of course, the timber is cut under the direction of the Forest Service and only mature trees are cut.

Mr. ARENTZ. The roads could be completed into the forest and serve both purposes?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Certainly. At this time if a fire breaks out in some of our vast forests it is five days from the time you see the smoke till you reach the fire on foot and three days on horseback. Successful fire fighting necessitates the prompt arrival of the fire department. Why expend enormous sums annually for fire fighters and then provide neither roads nor trails by means of which they can reach the fire?

The poet has graphically told us what we plant when we plant a tree—the same might be said of the protection of our trees:

PLANTING A TREE.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
A scion full of potency;
He plants his faith, a prophecy
Of bloom, and fruitfulness to be;
He plants a shade where robins sing,
Where orioles their nestlings swing;
A burning bush, a miracle!
Who plants a tree, he doeth well!

What does he plant who plants a tree?
He makes a strong mast for the sea;
He makes the earth productive, fair;
He helps the vines climb high in air,
And from their censers shed perfume
To sweeten night, and bless high noon.
Against the vandals who despoil
He sets his protest in the soil.

What does he plant who plants a tree?
An emblem of the men to be;
Who lightly touch terrestrial clay,
But far above the earth, away
From sordid things and base,
Incarnate ideals for their race,
Who plants a tree, he doeth well,
Performs, with God, a miracle!

NEED OF FOREST ROADS.

There are 3,685 townships, or 47 per cent of all of our national forests, which have no roads whatever. There are 2,418 townships, or 31 per cent of our forests, which have very poor roads; a total of 78 per cent either with no roads at all or with very indifferent roads, approximately only wagon trails.

Transcontinental highways in many instances must cross national forests. In my own State of Washington every east-and-west highway and every transcontinental highway must pass through a national forest. In such cases the forest road serves many purposes. This may be illustrated by the Lewis and Clark or Lolo Pass Highway, now building through the Selway National Forest in the State of Idaho. While this highway will make available vast timber resources and facilitate the protection of the forest, it also shortens the distance from the Atlantic to the Pacific more than 200 miles, and thus becomes of interest to every tourist who would view the unsurpassed scenery of the Pacific Northwest. The old tollgate road in east Oregon is highly meritorious and is now under investigation. I urge the full appropriation already authorized by Congress in order that this and other worthy highways now under construction may be pushed to speedy completion.

We are deriving from the pasture rentals in these forests about two and a half million dollars annually, but we are only pasturing 110,000,000 acres out of the 156,000,000. Two million cattle and horses and seven and a half million sheep are grazing our national forests, but we ought to be deriving very much more in the way of grazing fees from these forests if they were made more accessible.

There are in these forests 16,000,000 hydroelectric horsepower, or 25 per cent of all in the United States. Much of this, of course, is not utilized and can not be utilized on account of its being inaccessible.

OBLIGATIONS TO STATES AND COUNTIES.

There is an obligation upon the part of the Government to build and maintain the roads in and approaching these forests. If these lands were on the tax rolls in the various States and counties, they would be paying to-day fourteen and a half million dollars annually in taxes. Since my own State of Washington, for example, collects no taxes from the 10,000,000 acres of national forest in that State, clearly the Federal Government owes a road-building obligation to that State and the counties of that State, which is not met by the 25 per cent of forest receipts that go to our road and school funds, nor by the 10 per cent of receipts that is spent by the Forest Service on State and county roads.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes, for a question.

Mr. LONDON. Did the gentleman say 16,000,000 hydroelectric horsepower constitutes 25 per cent of all the hydroelectric horsepower in the United States?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; 25 per cent.

Mr. LONDON. That is too large a percentage.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I do not believe so. The construction of roads would add greatly to the value of the forests. They would aid in logging operations, enabling small concerns to operate, whereas now the advantage is all with the big operators. Roads would facilitate the protection, conservation, and utilization of the forests. There is a national obligation and responsibility resting upon the Congress of protecting this and all other national resources.

Our 149 national forests are not all found in one section of the country. They are located in 25 States of the Union, as follows:

	Forest land, acres.
Alabama	81,302
Alaska	20,573,444
Arizona	11,267,640
Arkansas	944,091

We ought at all times to act as trustees and guardians of these national resources.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman will yield, I wish to heartily indorse his plea for the protection of our national forests and believe they should be enlarged where conditions seem to warrant it. I have in mind now a very beautiful tract of timber in Virginia that should be preserved for future generations.

There have been constructed up to the present time 4,786 miles of roads and 6,711 miles of trails. The Federal expenditure on the forest roads amounts to $15,000,000 since 1912, and the cooperative work on the part of States, counties, and individuals has amounted to almost $7,000,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement indeed. I wonder if it is his idea that the appropriation provided for on page 38 of $3,261,862 is too small an amount. Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. My remarks have reference to the forest-road item, which is on page 80. There was an attempt to eliminate $3,500,000 from the amount authorized by the preceding session of this Congress, and it is with a view to laying some of the facts before the House and of securing the $6,500,000 authorized by Congress that I speak at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For cooperative agricultural extension work, to be allotted, paid, and expended in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and under the same supervision as the additional appropriations made by the act of May 8, 1914 (38 Stat. L. p. 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture," $1,300,000; and all sums appropriated by this act for use for demonstration or extension work within any State shall be used and expended in accordance with plans mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper officials of the college in such State which receives the benefits of said act of May 8, 1914: Provided, That of the above appropriation not more than $300,000 shall be expended for purposes other than salaries of county agents.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee to make a statement, so that it may be a matter of record, as to how much of these different appropriations which we are now considering, also how much of the money available under what is known as the Lever Act, is used by the department as the cost of administration. There has been a good deal of discussion on that proposition, and some wide difference of opinion as to the wisdom of the course pursued by the department in spending so much money for administration. I do not make that criticism now. I might have something to say along that line if I were to take it up. I think it will be interesting for us to know what the percentage of expenditure for administration is.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to answer the gentleman's question. I have the figures before me. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the total amount from all sources for extension work was $18,819,894. That includes $4,580,000 of Federal Smith-Lever funds; $4,100,000 of State Smith-Lever funds, which is the offsetting fund appropriated by the States; $1,300,000 as a so-called supplementary Federal Smith-Lever fund and $1,300,000 supplementary State funds, offsetting that, in addition to that item which has just been read, I think, of $1,029,981. Of that total sum of $18,819,894, $1,014,569 was spent in administration, and of that sum $519,090 is taken out of the Federal Smith-Lever fund; $321,178 out of the State Smith-Lever fund; $3,007 from the supplementary Federal Smith-Lever fund and $689 from the State supplementary Smith-Lever fund; and $10,350 from the farmers' cooperative demonstration work. In other words, practically all of the administrative expenses are paid out of the Smith-Lever funds, State and Federal.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The fact is that the $18,819,894 the gentleman mentions, made up of these items, is used for just about the same kind of work.

Mr. ANDERSON. Practically all of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We call this farm demonstration and agricultural extension work, but it is practically all of the same nature, is it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. Practically all of it. It includes, of course, the county-agent work, the farm demonstration, the home demonstration, the home economics, the boys' and girls' pig and calf club work, and all sorts of extension work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. As I understand the figures given by the gentleman from Minnesota, the total expenditures were about $18,900,000 and the total expenditures for administration about $1,000,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is substantially the figure.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Or one-eighteenth; approximately 5½ per cent for administration?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the department and the colleges are to be congratulated on administering that fund so economically. I think the report of the manner in which they are doing their work shows that they are properly spending less on administration and are therefore able to use more of the money for practical work than was the case when their work was newer.

I remember very well when this money was asked for in the first place. It was due to statements made, representations made, and reports made by the department that important investigations and discoveries very helpful to agriculture had been made by the department, the result of scientific and practical and experimental work, but that the results of that work had not been carried out for the farmers who wished and needed them and for whose benefit they were intended. These important and helpful results were kept stored away in the archives of the Department of Agriculture. The department appealed to the Congress for money with which to carry those results to the farmers of the country. The Congress responded by making liberal appropriations. It seems to me it was unfortunate at first that so much of these appropriations was spent in administration. Evidently the department has worked out plans and a larger part than formerly is now devoted to practical work and a reasonably small sum only is paid for administration. It is splendid work. Few of the many good things the department does are better than this demonstration and extension work. It is being well done, and I believe the department has improved in the manner in which it is carrying on that work. It is entitled to credit for the manner in which it is being done, also for using more for practical work and less for administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I undertook this morning to show to the Members of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which has under consideration the Agricultural bill, the program by which the editing, and so forth, was being consolidated, and a new $5,000 position was being created without authority of law. My statement is disputed, but I must still insist that the committee has been misinformed. This will develop in the course of time, when, of course, it will be too late. In spite of the attempt to consolidate the printing items, as required by law, such items are scattered throughout the bill. I shall not delay the great committee further, because I know that the members of the agricultural bloc are here full force for the express purpose of preventing any changes in this bill, whether for good or ill. I know, too, that members of the seed bloc are in waiting to march onto the floor at the opportune moment for an attempt to reestablish the free-seed distribution. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back any time remaining to me.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the demeanor of the genial gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] ought to convince our entire membership that he is not out of humor. He is in perfect good humor. When he was trying a while ago to cut down expenses here and asked for a vote in behalf of his various amendments I heard one of our colleagues who had just come in say, "What is JOHNSON mad about? What is he cutting up so much about on the floor to-day?"—as though it was not his duty to try to save the people's money in the Treasury. Why, he is the chairman of the Committee on Printing. He knows more about that subject than any other man on the floor.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. But he was talking about meat. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. He was directing his remarks to the provisions of the bill that were increasing the salaries of the editors about $25,000 a year. He was qualified and prepared to speak intelligently on that subject, and yet the membership could hardly wait at all for him to give his views.

The time has come, I will say to the gentleman from Washington, that whenever a man gets up here and proposes to stop extravagance and proposes to curtail expenses, he is placed in a minority the very moment he rises. He is placed at a disadvantage. There is antagonism manifested against him on the floor immediately on the part of the committee having the bill in charge. I was hopeful for a while that the few Members who study these bills and who really seek to stop the growing expenses of the Government at least could stop the enlarging of expenses—in other words, hold the expenses where they now are—but I have come to the conclusion that even that is impossible, because when a committee brings in a bill here it is impossible in the Committee of the Whole to change a single item, except to change it upward instead of downward, as will be done with the gentleman's bill when we reach page 22, when an amendment will be offered to insert $360,000 additional for the purchase of garden seeds.

Most of the Members present understood what the gentleman from Washington said when he mentioned "the seed bloc." For the benefit of the gentleman from California [Mr. MACLAFFERTY], who is a new Member, who may not know what that means, I will say that he probably has noticed that our friend from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], although almost out of breath and hardly able to speak, is still on the floor and watching. And he may have noticed that our beloved friend from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] has been here all afternoon. He may also have noticed the prominent Member from the State of New York [Mr. LONDON], who stays here most of the time, has been waiting here all afternoon. What are they all here for? They are here to change the bill, Mr. Chairman, when we reach page 32, and they are going to put $360,000 more on the bill to pay for garden seed.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman know how the two gentlemen from New York are going to vote?

Mr. BLANTON. One gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is not going to vote against sending out that great system of information to the people of New York that comes from a package of garden seeds. He wants the people educated in a socialistic way, and he wants to send out garden seeds. [Laughter.] His colleague over there from New York [Mr. SNELL] probably will not do it. How would you like to be out on a farm with a wife and five children dependent upon a garden to supply most of the food that goes on the family table, when, having the ground all prepared for planting, you ask for the seed, and your wife goes into the house and brings out that measly little package of garden seed that was sent to you from a Congressman? [Laughter.] The man would say, "Oh, throw it away and go to town and get me some garden seeds that will grow and be sufficient to really furnish food to the family." [Laughter.] I say to my people down in the country, "I send this seed out simply to prevent its being wasted. If I do not send it out myself it will be sent out by the Secretary of Agriculture."

That proposed $360,000 garden-seed amendment is cut and dried, and if you let it come up this evening these Members will put that item on, and you can not stop them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make suitable agricultural exhibits at State, interstate, and international fairs held within the United States; for the purchase of necessary supplies and equipment; for telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; for travel, and for every other expense necessary, including the employment of assistance in or outside the city of Washington, $95,080: Provided, That $25,000 shall be immediately available for an exhibit at the National Dairy Exposition.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 11, after line 12, insert the following: "That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make available to the public the information which may be presented or developed at the World Dairy Congress to be held in the United States during October, 1923, and that there is hereby appropriated the sum of $30,000, which sum shall be available immediately, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for paying for the interpretation, translation, and transcription of discussions and the printing and binding and distribution of the proceedings of the World Dairy Congress, including the payment of postage to foreign countries and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary to accomplish these purposes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that. It is legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it, but I reserve it.

Mr. HAUGEN. The World Dairy Congress is to be held in this country in October, 1923. In an act approved March 3, 1921, Congress authorized the President to extend invitations to foreign countries to participate, and the dairy industry of this country is contributing approximately $100,000 to its support. Now, it is suggested that $30,000 be appropriated by Congress for the translation, interpretation, printing, binding, and distribution of the proceedings and valuable information that may be developed at the dairy congress, so that it may be made available. The amount suggested seems to be a very reasonable amount.

The dairy people are very much interested in it, as well as the Department of Agriculture, which is also greatly interested in it.

Mr. SNELL. Just what are you going to spend the money for?

Mr. HAUGEN. As stated in the amendment, for the interpretation and translation of the discussions and the printing, binding, and distribution of the proceedings of the World Dairy Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. If I thought that the dairy interests of the United States would receive 25 cents on the dollar benefit out of this appropriation, I would not only withdraw the reservation but I would vote for the gentleman's amendment; but my experience in watching these matters has been such as to lead me to believe that most of this $30,000 will be eaten up in administrative expenses and that the dairy interests will not be benefited.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; it can not be used for administrative expenses, because the amendment provides what the money shall be expended for. The gentleman is aware of the fact that we have spent millions of dollars on publications, and there is no reason why this valuable information should be bottled up. If it is of value, it should be made available to the people interested.

Mr. BEGG. There is nobody in the department capable of translating French or Portuguese or whatever is to be spoken in this convention, is there?

Mr. HAUGEN. Delegates are invited from all parts of the world. This is a world congress.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman say there is no one down there capable of translating?

Mr. ANDERSON. There are unquestionably able translators down there.

Mr. BEGG. What is the idea of hiring new ones?

Mr. HAUGEN. They have in the department translators who are capable of translating 15 or 20 languages; they are as able translators as they have in any other department or probably anywhere else; but whether they have or have not, provision is made here that these proceedings may not only be translated but disseminated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not a parliamentary sharp, but in my judgment there is little in the proposition offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] except the publication and dissemination of matters of information relating to agriculture and of interest to the entire country. There is little, if anything, except to provide for the printing and disseminating of information collected by the Department of Agriculture. This will be an international gathering. Men from all parts of the world will attend. It is an annual affair, as I understand. The association has accepted the invitation of our Government to hold its convention in the United States in the coming year. In my judgment, there is little, if anything, in this amendment except the publishing of information to be given out at the convention relating to agriculture to be widespread throughout the country. That kind of work is authorized by law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In addition to what the gentleman has just said, which I indorse, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the point of order in my judgment is not good.

The amendment is offered to a paragraph which reads as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make suitable agricultural exhibits at State, interstate, and international fairs held within the United States; for the purchase of necessary supplies and equipment; for telephone and telegraph service, freight and express charges; for travel, and for every other expense necessary, including the employment of assistance in or outside the city of Washington, $95,080: Provided, That $25,000 shall be immediately available for an exhibit at the National Dairy Exposition.

I submit that the point of order comes too late, because it is made against an amendment offered to a paragraph which itself is subject to a point of order, and the rule is that all germane amendments to such a paragraph are in order.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, this seems to me to be a case so flagrantly in violation of the rules of the House that it is unnecessary to discuss it or even offer a word on it. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan discussed germaneness. I will concede the germaneness of the amendment. But here is the point I should like to direct to the attention of the Chair for just a moment. This amendment is the identical bill that was reported out of one of the major committees or ordered reported less than a week ago, to legislate to make available the information received at this conference. If this is not legislation, it is impossible to find anything that is legislation on an appropriation bill. It does not make any difference what the information is about. It does not make any difference what good it will do. This is providing the machinery for disseminating that which is clearly legislation, and can not be done without the Department of Agriculture being given authority to do it by special legislation.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order is that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

Mr. HAUGEN. The organic law authorizes this very thing.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is arguing against the position that he so soundly took yesterday and this morning on another proposition.

Mr. HAUGEN. My suggestion yesterday was that there was no law authorizing that particular thing to be done.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me make this suggestion in order to keep the record straight. The position taken by my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] as to amendments is eminently correct where an amendment is offered from the floor which is out of order and no objection is made to it, and then an amendment is offered to that amendment. In such a case a point of order to the second amendment would not be sustainable, but the rule does not go as far as my colleague indicates. This is a part of the bill, and the gentleman offers an amendment out of order from the floor. The same rule does not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is very clear in his mind that this amendment directs the Secretary of Agriculture to do certain specific things, and is therefore legislation on an appropriation bill and subject to a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 11, after line 12, insert the following:

"There is hereby appropriated the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for paying for the interpretation, translation, and transcription of discussions, and the printing, binding, and distribution of the proceedings of the World's Dairy Congress, including the payment of postage to foreign countries and the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere as may be necessary to accomplish these purposes."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. There is no question but what it comes within the same rule just followed by the Chair. It is practically the same amendment. If this were in order you could call any other kind of a conference imaginable without special authorization.

You could call any other kind of a conference in any way connected with agriculture and have delegates come from all over the world and print the deliberations and disseminate it throughout the country by action on an appropriation bill, which would clearly be out of order.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to get this thought to the mind of the Chairman in passing on this subterfuge. The President of the United States himself can not call a conference similar to this without being specially authorized by Congress so to do.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Perhaps the gentleman knows it, but the President of the United States was authorized by law to call this conference.

Mr. BEGG. I grant that, and he needed that authorization. The President himself can not call such a conference as this without authority granted by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. But there is nothing in the amendment in reference to that.

Mr. BEGG. The President has been authorized to call the conference. Now, if the President can not call the conference, certainly the President's servant, the Secretary of Agriculture, can not distribute the proceedings of that conference without special authority, because in the law granting the President authority to call the conference there was no authority granted him to disseminate the information acquired at that conference. The only way you could disseminate that would be by extending the authority given the Department of Agriculture. To undertake to do it by this process is nothing short of a subterfuge in order to avoid the rules of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Independent of the act authorizing the President to call the conference, does not the gentleman believe that the organic law creating the Department of Agriculture is authority for making this appropriation? That organic act reads:

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture, in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

Now, the conference having been legally called by the President of the United States, has not this House on this bill, without being subject to a point of order, the right to make that appropriation to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to comply with the organic law creating the department?

Mr. BEGG. I will say in reply to the gentleman that the organic law does not permit the Secretary of Agriculture to go beyond the power of the President of the United States in jurisdiction. Congress has limited the jurisdiction of the President in calling the conference by a statute; in other words, it passed a law—and it required the special permission of Congress—saying to the President, you may call that conference, but that does not carry with it permission to his servant to disseminate and do as he pleases with the proceedings of the conference.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I call attention to the fact that one purpose of the expenditure of the $30,000 is to translate into our language addresses of representatives of the various foreign delegates from foreign countries, and that there is no provision whatever in the organic act that contemplates anything of the kind.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is right about that. I would like to offer a further suggestion, and then I have nothing further to say on the proposition. Suppose, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of Agriculture should deem it advisable to mail a hand-bound gilt-edged volume of the proceedings to everybody in the United States. Does anyone contend that he could do that under authority of law and then bring in a deficiency appropriation? If he has the right to go ahead and do this under the authority that the bureau grants him, he has a right to bring in a deficiency appropriation the same as other departments do.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call attention to Rule XXI, page 363, which reads as follows:

By a general provision of law, appropriations for investigation and the acquirement and diffusion of information by the Agricultural Department on subjects related to agriculture are generally in order in the agricultural appropriation bill.

This provides for the diffusion of information and the translation would be a part of it.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman contend that that rule gives jurisdictional powers outside the United States to the Secretary of Agriculture in the face of the fact that our own law prohibits the President, his superior, from doing that thing?

Mr. SNELL. This conference is going to be held in the United States—something that has been permitted by Congress. This authority says "the acquirement and diffusion of useful information." That absolutely covers everything that you want to do here.

Mr. BEGG. I do not think so. I do not think that by any stretch of the imagination you can give authority to the Secretary of Agriculture beyond the power that the President of the United States has.

Mr. SNELL. This has nothing to do with the power of the President; it is the diffusion of information, the acquirement and diffusion of information definitely provided for in this rule, and that is all we want to do.

Mr. BEGG. The President of the United States had to come here to get authority to call the conference.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Ohio will read the organic law creating the Department of Agriculture, he will see that it gives ample authority.

Mr. BEGG. I do not think so.

Mr. DOWELL. In this section of the act creating the Department of Agriculture we find the following as one of its functions: "The acquirement and the diffusion among the people of the United States of useful information on subjects connected with agriculture."

Mr. BEGG. Acquired where—in South America?

Mr. DOWELL. It does not limit it—wherever it is acquired, if it is useful, he has that authority.

Mr. Chairman, in view of that language in the organic law creating this department, there can be no question that this amendment is in order. As the amendment first read, with direction to the Secretary, it was not in order, because it was a direction which was not contained in this law; but under the present status of the amendment, which merely makes an appropriation for the purpose for which this section provides, he has authority. It seems to me there can be no question that this appropriation is in order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As seeming to test the correctness of the gentleman's view, we find that now the Department of Agriculture, without specific provision to that effect, distributes a number of pamphlets every year that have relation to the dairy business.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is correct in his contention, the Department of Agriculture has greatly exceeded its authority.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; and if the gentleman from Ohio will go back to his original proposition, it would not be permissible to publish any information not secured within the United States, which would be a preposterous proposition.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not concede that point. Where did this information that is to be specially prepared and put out get any authority for being? Through an act of Congress granting permission to the President of the United States; and in no other way can it come about.

Mr. DOWELL. Congress granted the authority to the President of the United States to call a certain conference. That conference is being called in accordance with the authority given the President by the act of Congress. That has already been accomplished. I want to again read a part of this section for the benefit of the Chair, because it seems to me it is so clear that there can be no question about it—the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word.

It seems to me that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] can not so limit this authority when it is so clear in language that it does not admit of the construction the gentleman from Ohio has seen fit to place upon it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; for a question only.

Mr. BEGG. I simply want to put a question and make a brief statement.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman has the opportunity to present his case. I yield for a question.

Mr. BEGG. If the gentleman's contention is correct, under the broad provisions of the statute the Secretary of Agriculture has the right and the authority to do anything that he wants to, if he believes it will stimulate agriculture. He could even take all of these foreign representatives that come here and without any added legislation under the general grant send them into every county in the United States to make a speech on agriculture.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. BEGG. There is not a bit of difference in the position.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, there is a reasonable construction upon this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like recognition to ask the gentleman a question. If the gentleman's position is correct, and usually he is sound, why does not the committee, instead of taking up 72 pages in this bill of printed matter for specifications, just bring in a three-line bill granting the Secretary of Agriculture the $68,000,000 that they give him and let him proceed under this organic act, if it is so broad?

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman think that that would be out of order?

Mr. BLANTON. It would be out of order, and it is out of order to translate from various languages at an expense of $30,000 the information of this international dairy conference without specific authorization therefor.

Mr. DOWELL. That method would not be subject to the point of order, but certainly it would be bad legislation. It would be within the authority granted under the organic law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realizes, as has already been stated by the Chair, that the organic law creating this department, particularly with reference to the dissemination of useful information, is extremely broad. The Chair feels that this is information useful to the people of the United States, and as there is a law providing for the dissemination of this knowledge the Chair feels that the amendment is in order. The Chair quotes from Barnes Federal Code as follows:

(618. Establishment of department.)

There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES, WEATHER BUREAU.

For carrying into effect in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in the United States, in the West Indies, in the Panama Canal, the Caribbean Sea, and on adjacent coasts, in the Hawaiian Islands, in Bermuda, and in Alaska, the provisions of an act approved October 1, 1890, so far as they relate to the weather service transferred thereby to the Department of Agriculture, for the employment of professors of meteorology, district forecasters, local forecasters, meteorologists, section directors, observers, apprentices, operators, skilled mechanics, instrument makers, foremen, assistant foremen, proof readers, compositors, pressmen, lithographers, folders and feeders, repairmen, station agents, messengers, messenger boys, laborers, special observers, displaymen, and other necessary employees; for fuel, gas, electricity, freight and express charges, furniture, stationery, ice, dry goods, twine, mats, oil, paints, glass, lumber, hardware, and washing towels; for advertising; for purchase, subsistence, and care of horses and vehicles, the purchase and repair of harness, for official purposes only; for instruments, shelters, apparatus, storm-warning towers and repairs thereto; for rent of offices; for repair and improvements to existing buildings and care and preservation of grounds, including the construction of necessary outbuildings and sidewalks on public streets abutting Weather Bureau grounds; and the erection of temporary buildings for living quarters of observers; for official traveling expenses; for telephone rentals, and for telegraphing, telephoning, and cabling reports and messages, rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreements with the companies performing the service; for the maintenance and repair of Weather Bureau telegraph, telephone, and cable lines; and for every other expenditure required for the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of meteorological offices and stations and for the issuing of weather forecasts and warnings of storms, cold waves, frosts, and heavy snows, the gauging and measuring of the flow of rivers, and the issuing of river forecasts and warnings; for observations and reports relating to crops and for other necessary observations and reports, including cooperation with other bureaus of the Government and societies and institutions of learning for the dissemination of meteorological information, as follows:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call the attention of the chairman to this language on page 13, line 11:

Including the construction of necessary outbuildings.

I do not know whether the chairman has investigated it or not, but at many of these weather bureau stations, scattered over the country, the observer is permitted to live in the station building. Usually that ground has been either donated by the community or purchased by the Government, and in many places it embraces as much as a quarter of a block of land. In many instances there is nothing but the one building, just the weather bureau station. All of these observers get very moderate salaries. They can barely exist on the salaries allotted to them. You will find that practically all of them are men of families. I happen to know that in instances they have asked the Weather Bureau, at an expense of not over $200, to construct an outbuilding on one corner of the quarter of block of ground, in which they could keep a horse or a milch cow, which would mean probably a third of their family expenses, and in such instances such requests have been turned down. These men are required to build the structure at their own expense, if they can get permission to do so. That is a permanent improvement to Government property. In the long run it costs very little, and yet it means very much to these low-salaried officials, and I want to say right here that this is one of the most important bureaus in the Government, in my judgment.

I happen to have had that impressed upon me several years ago when with my family I was camping 17 miles from Galveston on Galveston Island with campers all around and beyond, and at noon one day a man came riding up on a horse covered with foam and said, "You must get out of here immediately or everybody will be drowned." That man came from the weather bureau there, and one of the greatest storms of the history came and these hundreds of people, men, women, and little children, were enabled to get out of there and get to Houston before the storm came because of that notification. Under this language here, has any provision been made as to appropriation, I am asking the chairman, for the construction of necessary outbuildings? Would the Weather Bureau be authorized to give these observers these little outbuildings for which they have asked?

Mr. ANDERSON. I presume they would under that language if they had the money to do it with.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know whether or not this appropriation gives sufficient money where such outbuildings are necessary?

Mr. ANDERSON. We give the amount estimated for. I do not think it is the practice or policy of the Weather Bureau to build these buildings. If they were to build them it would be an exception, in my judgment, to the general policy.

Mr. BLANTON. I am in favor of economy everywhere as much as any man in this House, but in cases of that kind I think it is money well spent, and where we are giving $5,000 to a chief in charge of bureaus and $1,000 and $1,200 to an observer who is really doing important work, I think it is highly proper to build these outbuildings in which they can keep their family milch cow.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I just want to say that what the gentleman from Texas has just stated is illustrative of a very interesting characteristic of human nature. The gentleman from Texas is very much interested and very much in favor of the work being done by the Weather Bureau. I agree with him. It is a very important bureau and they do very fine work, work which saves millions of dollars every year. He is in favor of it because he knows about it, knows what it does, and its value. I expect with most of us the things we are against are the things we know the least about.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inspection and quarantine work, including all necessary expenses for the eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle, the inspection of southern cattle, the supervision of the transportation of live stock, and the inspection of vessels, the execution of the 28-hour law, the inspection and quarantine of imported animals, including the establishment and maintenance of quarantine stations and repairs, alterations, improvements, or additions to buildings thereon; the inspection work relative to the existence of contagious diseases, and the mallein testing of animals, $529,640: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 shall be used for improvements and repairs to quarantine stations: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be used for the manufacture, preparation, or distribution of blackleg vaccine.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the preceding paragraph for the purpose of correcting the spelling in the word "quarantine" in line 25, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to the page indicated for the purpose of correcting an error in spelling. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "quarantine" in line 25, page 16, may be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of tuberculosis of animals, for its control and eradication, for the tuberculin testing of animals, and for researches concerning the cause of the disease, its modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and such other means as may be necessary, either independently or in cooperation with farmers, associations, State, Territory, or county authorities, $2,877,600, of which $850,000 shall be set aside for administrative and operating expenses and $2,027,600 for the payment of indemnities: Provided, however, That in carrying out the purpose of this appropriation, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it shall be necessary to destroy tuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, expend in the city of Washington or elsewhere out of the moneys of this appropriation, such sums as he shall determine to be necessary, within the limitations above provided, for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, Territories, counties, or municipalities, as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter, and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed, but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used in compensating owners of such animals except in cooperation with and supplementary to payments to be made by State, Territory, county, or municipality where condemnation of such animals shall take place; nor shall any payment be made hereunder as compensation for or on account of any such animal destroyed if at the time of inspection or test of such animal, or at the time of condemnation thereof, it shall belong to or be upon the premises of any person, firm, or corporation, to which it has been sold, shipped, or delivered for the purpose of being slaughtered: Provided further, That out of the money hereby appropriated no payment as compensation for any tuberculous animal destroyed shall exceed one-third of the difference between the appraised value of such animal and the value of the salvage thereof; that no payments hereunder shall exceed the amount paid or to be paid by the State, Territory, county, or municipality, where the animal shall be condemned; and that in no case shall any payment hereunder be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal, and no payment shall be made unless the owner has complied with all lawful quarantine regulations.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 18, line 24, strike out "$2,877,600," and in lieu thereof insert "$4,000,000."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, by my amendment I am suggesting an increase of a little more than a million dollars in the total amount of money to be available for this tuberculosis work. As will be noticed, by leaving the sum of $850,000 for administration as it is and by increasing the total appropriation there will be a little more than $1,000,000 more money available to the department for the purpose of cooperating with the State in the payment of indemnities. This work of eradicating tuberculosis was started several years ago and has been progressing very satisfactorily. I have always been very much interested in it. As proof of my interest, I may say that the language of this provision is my own, it having been committed to me by the Committee on Agriculture to draft the provision after the committee had determined that the work should be done and a substantial amount of money appropriated to carry it on. The States have been showing a very commendable interest in the work. Many of them have made substantial appropriations. It is evident, however, and becoming more evident as time goes by, that if the work is to be carried on as it should be, and as there is every promise it will be in the very near future, the amount of money necessary for paying indemnities must be increased over the amount carried in this bill. We hear from many sources and we have it officially in the hearings that many States have already made large appropriations that will be available, largely increased over those that have been available in the past, and that several States are getting ready at the sessions of their legislatures which will be held after the 1st of January largely to increase their appropriations.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman permit this question? I am very much interested and I want to say to the gentleman that the State of New York's present appropriation is a million and a half dollars; that one State, to take care of this proposition, and the feeling among the farmers of our whole State is that the Federal Government should be a little more generous than at present, although they appreciate what has been done by the Congress.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In that connection I might say that the amount of money appropriated by the State of New York for this fiscal year is only $532,000.

Mr. SNELL. But the next time it is a million and a half?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And next year there will be in that one State $1,500,000, as the gentleman from New York says.

Mr. SNELL. I notice in the hearings there are quite a number of more claims this year than last year. How are we going to cut them unless we increase the appropriations a little in order to cut them? The average number of claims remaining over were about 9,000 last year and something over 10,000 this year. It seems to me we ought to keep up. We can not decrease the number unless we do.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The hearings show that the number of claims are rapidly increasing, the increase running into the thousands.

It is evident from any standpoint from which you look at the proposition that a very large amount of money over the amount now available and to be provided by this bill will be necessary.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Is it not also an additional factor that should be taken into consideration that a great many of the herds have been tested and reactions have been obtained from the tests, and when reactions are ended it is sometimes necessary to go forward with follow-up work and have additional tests in order to clear up all these herds, so that we should make an appropriation at least of $4,000,000, as suggested?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes. As I understand, in doing this work it is often necessary to make more than one test, or by follow-up work, as the gentleman says.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. It is the follow-up work that is the most necessary.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; as the gentleman from New York says, the follow-up work is an important part of the work.

I notice from the hearings that the gentlemen of the bureau who are carrying on this work say that if the same amount of work that is done by them relatively is carried throughout the entire country more money for administration will be necessary. I will add to that, Mr. Chairman, this remark, that this work is so big that it will be impossible for the agents of the Federal Government to do all of it or even to take part in all of it. The Government has started the work. Government officials, very able and competent men, have shown how the work can be done and how it ought to be done, and it is not necessary for Government agents and employees to do or to take part in all the work.

What I am saying now is in line with the position I have often taken heretofore. I have always been in favor of the Government of the United States carrying on experimental work, carrying on all kinds of investigational work, and doing the necessary amount of demonstration work, taking the results of its scientific inquiry out to the country, thereby showing their value, how they can be used and applied, and how the people taking them up can themselves make use of them. I am objecting to the Government, after doing all this scientific work and all this investigation, analysis, and experiment, going out into the country and actually doing the physical work of applying and making use of all these improved methods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. I may not use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks for five minutes more? Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not a fact that this work more than doubled in the last fiscal year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have it in mind that it just about doubled throughout the country; in many of the States more than that during the year.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The statistics show that it did, as a matter of fact, more than double last year.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I call the gentleman's attention particularly to lines 10 and 11, page 20, where it is provided that the payments shall not be more than $25 for any grade animal or more than $50 for any pure-bred animal. I do that for the purpose of asking a question. I judge those operations were established when the relations of the grades and pure breds were somewhat adequately represented by those two amounts. Does not the gentleman believe that the amount provided for the payment for pure-bred animals should be more, or at least that the relation should be changed in this increased appropriation that he is asking for, in view of the fact that the grades are lower and the pure breds are higher?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When this matter was considered in committee and in the House and in conference there was a difference of opinion as to what these amounts should be. I was in favor of a larger amount to be paid for the slaughter of a pure-bred animal. Many of those animals are very valuable. But it was the consensus of opinion then that the amount ought to be fixed at $50. That was the best we were able to do at that time. The best we could do was to put it at $50.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is not that in line with my suggestion that the amount for the pure-bred animal should be increased if this amendment prevails? Is it not a fact that tuberculosis is very much more prevalent in the pure breds than in the grades?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In the amendment I offer no change will be made in the amount of payment for any animal destroyed. I will say to the gentleman that he has perhaps overlooked the fact that this amount, $25 or $50, as the case may be, is merely the Federal Government's contribution and that the Government is not permitted to pay more than the State pays, nor more than one-third of the entire amount to be paid to the owner.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The hearings show that instead of there being an increase in the average appraisal there was a decrease. It was reduced from $149.68 in 1921 to $111.67 in 1922, or an average reduction of $38.01 per head.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes. I think inasmuch as these amounts were found to be satisfactory during the war, when high prices prevailed, they will be found satisfactory now.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has it not been the policy of the Committee on Agriculture, to a certain extent at least, to hold down the valuation? In other words, has it not been the policy to throw a part of the responsibility of having a pure and clean herd of cattle upon the owner of the cattle? If the Government is going to carry on the policy of covering anything like the full value of the cattle in the payments of indemnity for tubercular cattle destroyed, there would be no incentive to the farmer to use care and discrimination in the selection of his herd and to have a clean herd. That is to say, the owner should not be permitted to profit at least by having a herd that was affected with tuberculosis.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; he should not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If officials of the Government are expected to do or supervise all the work in all the States, they will not be able to meet all demands if the work be increased and extended, as it certainly will be if the amount of money available for indemnities is increased by $1,000,000, as my amendment proposes.

They will not be able to do as much work as they would like to do or cover as much territory as they would like to cover. But they have discovered the remedy and have learned how to apply it. The work they have done in various parts of the country is and ought to be a demonstration of the method and plan to be pursued. It is now the duty and the privilege of the States to take upon themselves the burden of the actual physical work.

The States are now prepared to take up a larger part of the work. The States wish to do it, as appears by the large appropriations they have made and are preparing to make. The States wish only the advice and cooperation of Federal officials and agents, also that the Government shall provide money to pay a portion of the value of animals destroyed.

If the Government is willing to supply money necessary to pay its share of the indemnities, the States are ready and more than willing to do a large part of the work of investigation, inspection, and so on, and to relieve the Government of a large part of the expense of such work. These things being considered, in my judgment, the amount of money for administration need not be increased; but it is absolutely necessary that the money for indemnity be increased.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does it not appear fairly from the hearings that unless an increase is made the work will be slowed down; that it will not be conducted in the vigorous way necessary, and that the department will not be able to carry out its conception of eradicating tuberculosis substantially within 10 years? I desire to emphasize that.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman did not give me a chance to answer the question of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 13481, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 22, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we look with gladness of heart toward Thee this morning. We bear in mind the time of the year with all its happy associations, and ask that we may have in our hearts the larger conception of human kindness, that we may deal with the things of time and sense as in Thy presence, and always feel inspiration new and bright and holy as we think of the Christ born in Bethlehem. And we ask that in His name our hearts may be full of hope this day. Amen.

ROBERT N. STANFIELD, a Senator from the State of Oregon, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Saturday, December 16, 1922, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM VIRGINIA.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] as a Member of the Senate for the term beginning the 4th of March next. I ask that the credentials be accepted and filed in the usual course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be printed in the RECORD and placed on the files of the Senate.

The credentials are as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting.

This is to certify that at a meeting of the board of State canvassers, held at the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth the fourth Monday in November, 1922, on an examination of the official abstract of votes on file in that office, it was ascertained and determined that at the general election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1922, for United States Senator from the State of Virginia, CLAUDE A. SWANSON was duly elected United States Senator from the State of Virginia for the term prescribed by law.

Given under my hand and seal of office at Richmond, this 27th day of November, 1922.

[SEAL.] B. O. JAMES,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

PETITIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of Jacksonville Chapter, Florida Daughters of the American Revolution, of Jacksonville, Fla., praying for the prompt passage of legislation establishing a national park at Yorktown, Va., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LADD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Wheelock, Spring Brook, Fullerton, Park River, Baldwin, Portland, New Salem, Russell, Carrington, and Tappen, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation stabilizing the prices of wheat, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair, as chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reports from that committee what is known as the truth in fabric bill (S. 799), and asks that it may be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 799) to prevent deceit and unfair prices that result from the unrevealed presence of substitutes for virgin wool in woven fabrics purporting to contain wool and in garments or articles of apparel made therefrom, manufactured in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or transported or intended to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce, and providing penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 425) fixing the salaries of certain United States attorneys and United States marshals, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 962) thereon.

GRADING OF COAST GUARD OFFICERS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10631) to distribute the commissioned line and engineer officers of the Coast Guard in grades, and for other purposes, I report it without amendment and submit a report (No. 958) thereon.

Mr. President, this is a bill which was very carefully considered in the House and finally passed. It provides for a regrading of the Coast Guard and enables promotions to be made, but does not add to the number of the personnel at all. The Coast Guard under the present system is absolutely deteriorating and unless something is done it will disappear. The committee considered the matter very carefully and report the House bill without any amendment.

According to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, it would entail about $12,500 additional expense. It provides for a little more rapid promotion of the officers. There are men in the service who have been there for thirty-odd years who are now simply lieutenants, and we feel that some action ought to be taken to relieve the situation. Under these circumstances I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. BORAH. I did not apprehend that there was going to be a request for its present consideration and, therefore, was not paying attention to what the Senator said. I did not suppose it was going to be brought up for consideration at this time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Utah has said he would like to have it go over. I hope Senators will look into it fully, in the hope that we may at an early date pass what I think is very much deserved legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

ART AND INDUSTRY BUILDING.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 218) to create a commission to consider the proposal of a central building for art and industry in the District of Columbia, and I submit a report (No. 959) thereon. I ask that the joint resolution as proposed to be amended be read and that it may have immediate consideration. I should like to make a brief statement after the reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as requested.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 3, after the words "consisting of," to strike out "three" and insert "two"; on page 2, line 2, before the word "Members," to strike out "three" and insert "two"; and in line 4, before the words "to consider," to insert "and four additional members to be selected by the President of the United States, who shall represent the executive branch of the Government and the public," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Whereas the American Arts and Industries Association proposes to create a national art center for applied and industrial arts to encourage, organize, and develop American art and industry to higher standards of quality for supremacy in world trade; and

Whereas the association has expressed a desire to establish this center in the District of Columbia because of the national industrial, artistic, and patriotic significance of such center; and

Whereas the association contemplates the erection of a central building and is desirous that it should harmonize and accord with the public buildings program of the District of Columbia: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created, consisting of two Members of the Senate, appointed by the Vice President, and two Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker, from the Senate and House Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds, respectively, and four additional members to be selected by the President of the United States, who shall represent the executive branch of the Government and the public, to consider the proposal of the American Arts and Industries Association and to report upon it as soon as practicable with such indorsement and recommendations as are deemed advisable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand this is merely a joint resolution appointing a committee of the two Houses to consider the proposition of reporting a bill for the development of art and industry. I have no objection to the proposition because there is nothing final in it up to this time.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no expense attached to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Maine what is his object in having a congressional committee for this purpose? What ends are to be served?

Mr. FERNALD. It is a great proposition. It is proposed to erect a building that will cost in the neighborhood of $20,000,000, not at the Government's expense but at the expense of men who are amply able to erect it for philanthropic purposes. When the proposition was first presented to me I felt that it was a visionary matter, but upon investigation and from letters that were received from large financial interests of the country, as well as the most talented people—and the association is numerically very large—I became convinced that it is a proposition worthy of attention by the Government. Of course, any building erected in the District would necessarily have to be under Government control.

Mr. CARAWAY. It would be under the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. FERNALD The joint resolution would authorize the President of the United States to appoint four members. We have changed the original resolution, which provided for three members from the House and three from the Senate, so that it now provides for two from each body and that each party might be represented. The proposition is large enough and has sufficient glory for the whole country. It ought to be nonpartisan, and I feel that in that way we might have the entire Congress behind the proposition.

Mr. CARAWAY. Pardon me, but may I ask what useful purpose the committee is to serve?

Mr. FERNALD. The committee would go into the details of the matter, determine the size of the building, where it should be located, under what governmental supervision, and so forth.

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee would then ascertain what the prospects were for putting up the building and who would pay for it, and so forth?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; it would go into all the details.

Mr. FLETCHER. Without any expense to the Government?

Mr. FERNALD. Without any expense at all to the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it proposed that the Government shall be called upon for any help in erecting the building or taking part in it?

Mr. FERNALD. Not in the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it finally intended?

Mr. FERNALD. It is not proposed finally, except that possibly the Government should donate a site for the building. That is all that is contemplated.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it not something like the proposition when we built the Lincoln Memorial? We agreed it should cost so much, but built it without the approaches. Will there not finally be a contribution somewhere from the Government? Is not that the object of it?

Mr. FERNALD. It is the purpose of the committee to ascertain all the details.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the purpose finally to unload the burden of construction largely upon the Public Treasury?

Mr. FERNALD. Not at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is not now, but is it not to be done after the site has been determined upon?

Mr. FERNALD. I would not approve of anything of that kind.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not saying that the Senator would, but the people who are sponsoring it would want it.

Mr. FERNALD. No; the people who are behind the proposition have proposed to erect the building. It has been under consideration for some years. It has never been finally determined where the building should be erected.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not that be largely left, if we had this committee, to the Commission on Fine Arts?

Mr. FERNALD. It would be left to this committee. They could call in such people as they might deem proper.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator if there is any money already raised for the purpose of carrying out the project?

Mr. FERNALD. Not at all, except that the association has already expended more than $100,000 in getting plans and making preparations for the erection of the temple.

Mr. CARAWAY. Are the plans already prepared?

Mr. FERNALD. They are roughly prepared.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then what object is there in calling in a committee after the plans have already been adopted?

Mr. FERNALD. I assume it will be necessary to have somebody go into the details on behalf of the Government.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator think there is anyone in Congress qualified technically to pass upon the plans and specifications for a building costing $20,000,000?

Mr. FERNALD. They could bring in such experts as they pleased.

Mr. CARAWAY. And who would pay those experts?

Mr. FERNALD. There is nothing provided in the joint resolution for that purpose.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator knows who is expected to pay for them.

Mr. FERNALD. I suppose the association is to pay all the bills. That is the proposition. It is a philanthropic work. The association is composed of very many multimillionaires. They have decided long since to erect a temple which shall be the finest in beauty and architectural grandeur of anything that has ever been conceived in the world's history, a building which it is conceived will cost at least $20,000,000 to $30,000,000. Every city in the United States would be anxious to have the building erected within its borders, but the District, it seemed to me, was the proper place for it.

We have been for some years now doing nothing toward beautifying the city of Washington, and now, without expense to the Government at all, because we are asked for no appropriation, these people, after deciding that they would erect the temple, have presented the proposition to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We considered it very carefully, went into details so far as we could, and decided that it was at least worthy of consideration; and in the appointment of a committee to investigate it, the association asks for no money at all, but I assume the Government would be asked to furnish the site.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if back of all that——

Mr. FERNALD. If the joint resolution is to lead to discussion, of course, I do not want to consume the further time of the Senate now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall take but a moment. I presume back of all this would be a provision also to exempt it from the payment of any taxes?

Mr. FERNALD. Those details would be worked out by the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is not that the object in having the Government furnish the site? I am just trying to find out.

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know about that. I have not gone into that question. That proposition has not been presented to our committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. When did the idea first occur to those people that they wanted Congress to have something to do with it?

Mr. FERNALD. It is supposed that Congress ought to have something to do with the erection of the building. It is not assumed, of course, that the Congress of the United States would allow such a building to be erected in this city unless the Government did have supervision over it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am curious to know why.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the joint resolution go to the calendar.

Mr. FERNALD. If it seems necessary to discuss the matter further, I am willing to let the joint resolution go to the calendar and not take the further time of the Senate now.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not going to take more than a minute. We shall lose just as much time by discussion on the next bill as we will on this if we are denied the right now to discuss the matter.

Mr. FERNALD. I shall be glad to answer any question which the Senator from Arkansas may desire to ask.

Mr. CARAWAY. I simply wish to know—and I am not trying to cross-examine the Senator from Maine; he understands that——

Mr. FERNALD. I understand that.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator has the information, and I have not. Is there any reason why the association indicated in the joint resolution desires Congress to supervise the construction of the proposed building?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know that they wish Congress to do so, but I desire that Congress shall. The committee felt that Congress ought to supervise the construction of a building of such magnitude.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the suggestion originate with Congress or with the association?

Mr. FERNALD. To what suggestion does the Senator from Arkansas refer?

Mr. CARAWAY. I refer to the suggestion to pass a joint resolution creating a commission.

Mr. FERNALD. The committee felt that it was very proper that such a commission should be created.

Mr. CARAWAY. And there was no such suggestion from those who desire to erect the building?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know that they made any suggestion of that kind.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I call for the regular order, if this discussion is going on all day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now before the Senate is whether the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from Maine shall be granted.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] wishes to take me off my feet in that way, I will object to the request for unanimous consent, and then I will take just as much time in the discussion of the next bill as I had intended to consume on this bill, so the Senator will not save any time. He can be personally offensive if he wants to, but he is not going to save any time by it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am not trying to prevent the Senator from Arkansas from speaking; he may take all day if he wants to; but I understood the Senator from Maine to say that if the joint resolution consumed more than a brief time he would not press it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know the Senator from Maine so stated. The Senator from Minnesota can take me off my feet if he wants to do so, but I shall take the time on the next bill, so the Senator from Minnesota will be disappointed if he thinks he will save time by this rather unusual procedure. I am going to make my statement now or I am going to make it later on, and I am going to object to the joint resolution if this procedure is to be followed; otherwise it will take but a few moments of time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it is desired to stop business by a rough-house a day or so before Christmas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas may be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not wish to have unanimous consent for that purpose. If the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] desires to insist on his objection I wish him to do it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the demand for the regular order be withdrawn.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw my demand for the regular order. If the Senator from Arkansas desires to do so he may occupy the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the demand for the regular order is withdrawn, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CARAWAY. All I wish to know is, under this proposed legislation how much is Congress probably going to be asked to expend? I do not like to rush into these things without fully understanding the situation.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I am glad to answer the Senator's question. The committee went into this matter very carefully. I am not not easily carried away by visionary or ethereal proposals. Before we would consider the subject at all I told the representative who appeared that until I was satisfied that the project had financial backi..g sufficient to erect the building and that the association wanted to erect it, I did not feel that it was of sufficient importance to bring the matter before the committee. Mr. Bradley, of New York, the attorney for the association, appeared and stated that the money was forthcoming from somewhere to erect the building, and that the Government would not be asked to make any contribution at all; but I assumed on my own responsibility that the Government might be asked to furnish a site; and I think that will be the extent of the Government's contribution. Those back of this project propose to erect the building with their own money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF BATTELL NATIONAL PARK, VT.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back the bill (S. 1080) to provide for the establishment of Battell National Park, in the State of Vermont, with the recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, in lieu of the bill which has just been indefinitely postponed, I report a Senate concurrent resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the concurrent resolution for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) was read, as follows:

Whereas Joseph Battell, deceased, late of Middlebury, county of Addison, State of Vermont, in and by his last will and testament devised to the Government of the United States of America about 3,900 acres of land situated in the towns of Lincoln and Warren, in the State of Vermont, for a national park; and

Whereas said lands were devised to the United States of America upon certain conditions, among which were the following: That the Government should construct and maintain suitable roads and buildings upon the land constituting such national park for the use and accommodation of visitors to such park, and should employ suitable caretakers to the end and purpose that the woodland should be properly cared for and preserved so far as possible in its primitive beauty; and

Whereas it is deemed inexpedient to accept said devise and to establish a national park in accordance with the terms thereof: Be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the acceptance of said devise so made by Joseph Battell in his last will and testament be declined by the Government of the United States, and that the estate of the said Joseph Battell be forever discharged from any obligation to the United States growing out of the devise before mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection, unless it shall lead to debate.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will lead to any debate; but I will say a word of explanation, if the Senate desires.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.
